Political battle stalls higher ed '84 budget

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts will be operating without its Fiscal Year 1984 budget until a struggle between the Legislature and the Board of Regents of Higher education is settled, but UMass officials say they are satisfied with the expected appropriations for the year.

John DeNyse, Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance said he does not know when the regents and the State Senate Ways and Means Committee will approve budgets for each school in the state higher education system, but UMass has at least enough money to operate through September.

"We got an interim allocation against what will finally be appropriated to us," DeNyse said. "Essentially, with some degree of difficulty, we'll be able to get through September. The interim allocation enabled the Commonwealth's higher education employees to receive their end of the summer pay on time.

The total budget for higher education is already set, but according to Ralph Whitehead, assistant to President David C. Knapp, "the regents have one set of dollars allocations for each campus in the state, Ways and Means have another, and the difference is that Ways and Means allocation would provide $1.1 million more for Amherst campus."

DeNyse said "the University can always get by" with the regents allocation, but "it would be much more beneficial to the University to have the larger allocation." Whitehead said the extra $1.1 million in the Ways and Means budget is "critically needed."

The budget for the entire state higher education system was set by the Legislature at $400,791,990 in June, according to Sharon Kennaugh, director of State Relations at the University.

The University's share of that budget will most likely be the $114,938,727 appropriated by the Senate Ways and Means Committee, State Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, a member of the committee, said.

"The regents are taking the position that they are the ones who should be allocating the money," but "the language of the budget is clear that the money is allocated according to a schedule approved by the Ways and Means Committees," Olver said.

James R. Martin, chairman of the Board of Regents, said the regents "make allocations according to a specific formula, related to the total sum" appropriated for the Higher Education System.

Martin, who said he is "indirectly involved" in negotiations over individual school budgets, said those negotiations are at "a delicate stage," and the governor's staff is working to bring the two sides together.

But Olver said Gov. Michael S. Dukakis "appears" to be supporting the regents because he "got into a position where he made committments to people at Southeastern Massachusetts University and there had been discussions as to where the money should come from."

"The crux of the problem is that the governor's people think that UMass has done extremely well," because it has the largest budget, Olver said. "When people go looking for money they look to UMass Amherst."

Susan Lane of the Governor's Office of Educational Affairs, said "everyone has been involved in the process to resolve the issue," but said she could not elaborate further.

Administration greets new year with chaos

The division of Academic Affairs at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst is experiencing its worst shortage of administrative officers and staff since the resignation of former Vice Chancellor and Provost Loren Baritz 18 months ago.

News analysis

During the last four months the office of Academic Affairs and Provost has undergone these changes:

● Last week acting Provost Dean Alphange, who held the position since Baritz' resignation, resigned "in the best interest of the University," leaving the chief academic administrator's position vacant.

Alphange's resignation followed a dispute with Duffey involving the appointment of the chairperson of the home economics department. Alphange said he was sorry for the abruptness of his resignation, but felt he could not serve the University best in the capacity of acting provost.

● Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey last Thursday reopened the search for a permanent vice chancellor and provost. He made this decision after reviewing the search committee's final candidates. UMass lost its first choice candidate to the University of Tennessee.

A memorandum circulated by Frederick Byron, dean of the faculty of natural sciences and mathematics in the College of Arts and Sciences, strongly criticized Duffey's action.

"It is my strong suspicion that this (Duffey's reopening the search) is all a set-up and that David Bischoff, dean of the school of physical education, (and acting deputy provost), will seize power by the end of next week," wrote Byron. "But I feel utterly helpless to do anything about it. All I can do is sit and watch, since our chancellor pretty much does things his own way."

The search for the permanent vice chancellor and provost will be conducted by the original search committee with appropriate substitutions for those faculty members with other committments this semester, Duffey said.

● Johnnetta Cole, associate provost for undergraduate education, accepted a one year teaching appointment as a Russell Sage Visiting Professor of Anthropology at Hunter College. Cole is one of the most popular administrators on campus, especially with students.

● With the return to the full-time faculty status of Esther Terry, former associate provost, the academic affairs staff is now down to five members, led by Bischoff.

The administration will attempt to fill the void of staff positions in the academic affairs office. Usually, a series of temporary appointments can keep any office in the Whitmore Administration Building functioning since the administration at UMass is experienced with this kind of management system.

Historically, searches at UMass can take anywhere from four months to two years. No one in the adminstration has any idea how long it will take to get the positions filled.

The unfortunate reality is that UMass was the closest it has been in the last four years to having six top adminstrative positions filled.

King to receive honorary degree after all

By KEN BAZINET

Members of the class of 1983 will long remember their graduation. Students clad in black robes sat under beautiful May skies and listened to various speakers address the issues of the day — employment, education and responsibility.

As the ceremony went on, graduates awaited the awarding of an honary degree to former Governor Edward J. King. It has always been a long standing tradition for the University of Massachusetts to award an honorary degree to the Commonwealth's outgoing Governor.

The graduates, faculty and parents in attendance were shocked when Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey announced that the UMass police had received two phone calls threatening King's life the morning of commencement, and that the former governor had been advised to leave the ceremony at Alumni Stadium.

Now with the intention of continuing its tradition, UMass will award King his honorary Doctor of Laws degree, Duffey said last week during an informal luncheon with student leaders.

"We have to do this right this time," Duffey said. "The most appropriate time (to give King his degree) will be during the dedication of the Graduate Research Center to former UMass President John Lederle." The GRC is scheduled to be dedicated Oct. 5. Lederle served as president in the 1960s.

About one week before the graduation, several students began to organize a demonstration against King, claiming that he had always worked against students and UMass in general. "Demonstrate with dignity" the posters which appeared across campus read.

General Ed plan approval is goal

By RITA MURPHY

Things will not be easy for Fern L. Johnson this year, but she said she is looking forward to the "challenge".

Johnson was named acting associate provost for undergraduate eduation this summer, replacing Johnetta B. Cole. Cole is on leave for the year while serving as a Russell Sage Visiting Professor of Anthropology at Hunter College in New York.

In recent years, there has been a strong demand by faculty, administrators, and students for a change in the current C, D, and E distribution (core) requirement system. The association provost's main responsibility recently has been to look into ways of either improving or changing the current system that has been in effect since the late 1960s, and replacing it with a so-called General Education Plan.

"One of my high priorities will be in the continuation of, and I hope the final proposal of a general education plan," Johnson, who is also an associate professor of communication studies, said.

A major problem besieging the Faculty Senate last spring, when it took up discussions on a General Education Plan, was that very few professors could agree on what constituted a "coherent" philosophy. As a result of disagreements in what a General Education Plan should be, the Faculty Senate set up a General Education Council and charged it with the responsibility of continuing discussions on a new curriculum.

Johnson is on that council, which has 22 members.

The council will look at what should be a "viable and valid introduction to General Education," she said.

The toughest "challenge" will be in "finding a particular program that fits the faculty here," she said. "The key this time around will be to communicate at the department level very early." Keeping everyone involved in the discussions is a high priority of Johnson's.

Another issue to which Johnson will devote a good deal of her time is the Learning Disabled Students Curriculum Task Force. The Task Force is being put together "to investigate the diagnosis of learning disabilities and to make recommendation of ways of accomodating students," she said.

Since coming to the University in 1974, Johnson's administrative appointments have included serving as honors program coordinator, chair of the College of Arts and Sciences curriculum committee, acting director of the University's rhetoric program and director of graduate studies for the department of communication studies.

Reshaping faculty goal of new dean

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

Incoming Dean of Humanities and Fine Arts in the College of Arts and Sciences Murray M. Schwartz arrived at the University of Massachusetts in July full of promise.

"I feel very hopeful about UMass," Schwartz, 40, said. "I look on this as an opportunity to help reshape one of the strongest faculties in the country. I see my main responsibility as helping to define the importance of humanities and fine arts not only at the University, but in the community as well."

Schwartz will be in charge of the 20 departments in the faculty of fine arts and humanities, including English, history, philosophy and foreign languages. He also plans to teach.

While Schwartz said he is still getting to know the University and plans no immediate changes, he noted overcrowding of language classes as a priority describing attention.

"There is an awareness growing quickly around the country on the importance of language study. More students want language classes than we can provide space for," he said. "There is a legitimate demand and we can't meet it. I'd like to see increased support in that area of instruction."

Schwartz holds a B.A., M.A. and Ph.D. in English and has had psychiatric training, two fields he often integrates in teaching and publishing.

"I'm very interested in relations among disciplines, and being a dean allows me to engage in planning, discussion and involvement in many different disciplines," he said.

Schwartz said the quality of the faculty, the promise of the University and the physical beauty of the Amherst area drew him to the campus. He comes to UMass from the State University of New York at Buffalo, where he was the dean of colleges, the director of the Center for Psychological Studies of the Arts and a professor of English and psychiatry. Schwartz was appointed last February by a search committee to replace outgoing dean Jeremiah M. Allen.

Faculty reductions confront new dean

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

A reduced budget this year will challenge the recently appointed dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources, David E. Leonard.

Leonard, 48, who came to the University a year ago as the assistant dean, said he hoped to "maintain quality programs in all of our teaching and research departments."

The college now faces the third year of a level funding base, a proposal which granted the school additional resources from provost reserve funds in its first two years "with the intent that in the third year we could live within the budget," he said. However, of 12 vacant faculty positions for the fall, only four have been able to be filled, Leonard said.

Leonard said he was concerned that by asking professors to pick up additional loads, the already high student-teacher ratio, particularly in the division of Hotel and Restaurant and Travel Administration, would close out students from classes.

"We want to maintain classroom commitments for the fall semester," he said. "It will be difficult, but it's a fine group of faculty to work with, and students.

"It would be nice to have funding and additional created programs," he added, noting there may be an opportunity to seek additional funds from the University, though perhaps not this year.

Leonard has also been the associate director of the Agricultural Experiment Station (AES) and the director of a cooperative exchange since coming to UMass. He was formerly a professor of entomology at the University of Maine in Orono and the associate director of AES there as well.

Leonard, a native of Greenwich, Connecticut, received his Ph.D. in zoology—entomology from the University of Connecticut, in addition to a M.S. in entomology and a B.S. in plant science.

Leonard was appointed acting dean July 21, replacing Dean Daniel Padberg for a year. Padberg will be teaching in the faculty of agriculture and resource economics.

Amherst College elects president

By ALICE R. KLINGENER

The search has ended and beginning June 1, 1984, Amherst College will have a new president.

Dr. Peter Pouncey, a professor of classics at Columbia University, was elected chief admiistrator by the Amherst College Board of Trustees on July 29. He will succeed G. Armour Craig, who has been acting president of Amherst College since the death of President Julian H. Gibbs last February.

"We're delighted to have found for the presidency of Amherst a teacher, scholar and administrator who has demonstrated his dedication to undergraduate education within a large university context," George B. Beitzel, chairman of the college's Board of Trustees, said.

British-born Pouncey, 45, joined Columbia's department of Greek and Latin in 1967, and in 1972 was appointed the ninth dean of Columbia College. At the age of 34, he was the youngest dean in the college's history.

Pouncey took his undergraduate degrees in philosophy from Heythrop College, England, in 1960 and in classical literature and ancient history and philosophy from Oxford in 1964. He received an M.A. from Oxford in 1967, and a Ph.D. from Columbia in 1969.

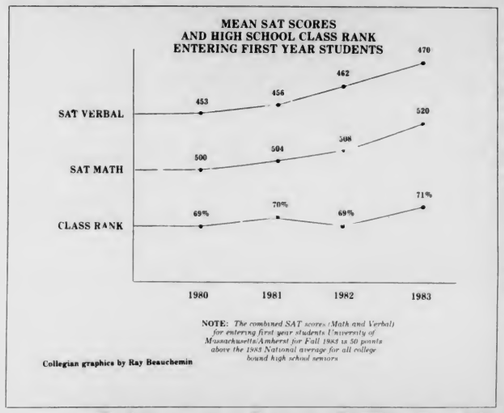
UMass' cost and quality improving enrollment

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

The entering class of 1987 at the University of Massachusetts boasts higher Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores and an increase in minorities over last year's class. And the trend could continue because of the school's increasing reputation and low cost, David G. Taggart, director of undergraduate admissions, said last week.

"The academic profiles (of incoming students) are considerably higher than in the past," Taggart said. "It's a buyer's market. The differential in cost . . . and feedback from secondary school counselors show the student realization of the quality of education available here."



This year, the University received 16,820 applications, a 22 percent increase over 1982. Of the 11,055 students accepted, 4100 have enrolled. Their average SAT scores, 470 verbal and 520 math, are a combined 25 points over those of last year's entering class.

"Students are applying to more schools than in the past (six or more) which may account in some way for the rise of applications we have here," Taggart said, noting many of these applications may be "phantom applications" where the student never intends to enroll at the University. "They (the phantom applicants) have more opportunities at other schools, where they are more sought after students," he said.

UMass will be looking towards its "emerging reputation" and low cost to compete for applicants with private colleges in the future, Taggart added, citing that the number of high school seniors has already decreased 7 percent since 1979. A "worst projection" has been made, he said, that the decline will reach 42 percent by 1995.

"Somewhere along the line, we've got to feel the drop-off (of college applicants). But with costs rapidly rising in the private sector and a conservative stance on financial aid, the current administration enhances the hand of the public sector."

Taggart said minority enrollment, up 7.5 percent this year from 219 to 311 students in the entering class—a total increase of 49 percent since 1981—is largely due to recruiting efforts. In addition to minority programming and an equal access task force, new programs to discuss student retention issues and follow up on minority progress have also contributed to minority growth on campus, he said.

As leaves turn red in autumn, so does the red tape at Whitmore. But the Smooth Opening Task Force is here to help.

"We try to anticipate any questions students may have," Sarah Hamilton, chair of the task force composed of administrative heads, explained. "This year we're all set (for a smooth opening)."

The task force has made available the following information:

- There will be an "express drop" from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. today only in the Student Union Ballroom for students who want to drop a course.
- Add/drop forms will be available in the following locations: the Music and Reading Room, Campus Center Concourse; Herter Hall lobby; and the main corridor of the School of Management. The deadline for adding or dropping a course is Sept. 26.
- Pass/fail forms are available in the College of Arts and Sciences Information and Advising Center, room E-20 Machmer Hall. The deadline for returning these forms is also Sept. 26.
- The registrar's Office will be open this week for registration purposes only. All forms should be returned to the main lobby counter in Whitmore.
- The Records Office will be closed this week.

Ling to head Relations and Development

Two year search for vice chancellor closes with in-house appointment

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

Deidre A. Ling, a six year employee of the University of Massachusetts, was appointed vice chancellor of University Relations and Development by Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey in June, ending a two year search for the Amherst campus' first chief public relations officer.

Ling was not recommended by the search committee. Duffey rejected the search committee's recommendation, and chose to appoint Ling, because he said he felt she was a better choice. Ling withdrew from the search following being appointed Assistant Chancellor last October.

"It is the chancellor's place to make the final decision," Duffey said.

"The growing number of University alumni, prospective students and their families, colleagues of the Commonwealth and special friends of the University has never been greater," he said. "I am confident Dr. Ling will provide the leadership necessary to launch this important new venture."

Ling, 39, must now receive the final approval of the UMass Board of Trustees before assuming her new duties and receiving the vice chancellor's $60,000 annual salary. The Trustees are scheduled to meet Thursday and Ling is expected to get their approval, Duffey said.

Ling has already begun to meet with the staff directors in the division of University Relation and Development, and has outlined a strategy she said should enhance the appearance of UMass. She has prepared a long range plan, outlining the next five years of the department, that will be presented to the Trustees.

"Without question this is a growing area," Ling said. "The University understands the need for effective external relations."

Ling will continue to serve as the chancellor's chief of staff, and will also monitor the newly created office of Institutional Research in addition to her duties as vice chancellor. She also plans to teach a course on women and management this semester for the Women's Studies program.

Ling began her career at UMass in January, 1978 as director of freshman admissions, receiving an annual salary of $23,000. Since that time, she served as dean of admissions for two years and then as dean of Academic Support Services. Following the resignation of former Chancellor Henry Koffler in May, 1982, acting chancellor Loren Baritz asked Ling to serve as acting assistant chancellor.

"My career opportunities (at UMass) have come by circumstance and hard work," Ling said. "I have been fortunate because of some of the reorganization which has taken place in the administration."

UMass nearly lost Ling last May, when she was offered the position of vice president for Student Affairs at the University of Arizona. Ling was nominated for the position by Koffler, who left UMass to become president of that school.

"Chancellor Koffler knew I was interested in an executive committee position," Ling said, "but when I was offered the position here (of assistant chancellor) I decided it was best for me to remain. I am comfortable at UMass."

Ling received her B.A. in philosophy from the University of Rochester, an M.A. in English from the University of Rhode Island and a Ph.D. in English from Tufts.

Ling's experience prior to UMass is in the area of admissions. She served as assistant director of admissions at the State University of New York at Stony Brook from 1974 to 1978, and was an admissions counselor prior to that. She was also a teaching assistant in the English Department at Western Michigan University.

Averill on the way out

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

A search committee was appointed over the summer to begin selection of a new director of University Health Services (UHS). Barry Averill, director of the facility for eleven years, will be resigning in January.

"I'm leaving on a positive note," Averill said last week. "I love working with the students. They keep you on your toes, asking questions no one else would think to ask. I'll miss the University...(but) it's time for a change."

Averill will be leaving the program of 27,000 subscribers to become executive director of the 55,000 member Michael Reese Health Plan in Chicago.

Larry Benedict, assistant vice chancellor for Student Affairs and chair of the search committee, said the panel was looking for a "high level" individual to direct UHS, a facility that combines student health care, a health maintenance organization, the Valley Health Plan, that serves University staff members and the community.

We're expecting a lot of people to apply," he said. "UHS is one of the top five college health facilities in the country. It's a prestigious, well organized health service."

Benedict said the committee hopes to find someone with experience in running a college health facility, not necessarily a medical doctor, who has also dealt with a comprehensive health service. UHS has dental, eye care and mental health services, he said, whereas some colleges have only basic cold care units.

The $40,000 to $60,000 a year post includes planning and administering all UHS activities, establishing policies and supervising University health and safety practices, as well as developing service contracts with the Valley Health Plan, Amherst Medical Associates and Hampshire and Amherst Colleges. The position was advertised over the summer in various professional journals, newsletters and newspapers, including the New York Times.

The search committee, appointed by Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson, includes UHS personnel Thomas McBride M.D., medical director; Diane Wolfe, director of community health education; and Donald Robinson, director of environmental health and safety. Diedre Ling, recently appointed vice chancellor of University Relations and Development, students Harris Pastides and Karen Sirum and a yet to be named graduate student are also on the committee.

Conference Services director foresees growth

Quality, new services draw clients

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Elizabeth A. Dale of Hadley, interim director of University Conference Services (UCS), was appointed director of that office July 3, a year after the previous director had resigned.

University Conference Services, located in the Campus Center, generates between $1.5 and $2 million in revenues annually and Dale said she looks forward to her future with the office.

Dale said she has already instituted many changes in policy since taking over in July, including the creation of Gold Key service and opening the lines of communication to the rest of the University in order to form a working partnership with the various academic departments on campus.

"Gold Key Service is a higher level of service for those clients who expect more than just our basic coverage," Dale said. "We plan better menus, such as gourmet items. And of course, we charge more for this type of service."

For the University's academic departments, UCS tries to work out high quality, low budget conferences that will satisfy the clients, Dale said. This past summer UCS took over some of the advertising and marketing responsibilities for the athletic department's Summer Sports Camps in order to boost attendance, she said.

UCS also feels it has an obligation to students, Dale said. The office runs a Student Assistant Coordinator program which brings students into the office to work with conference coordinators on the planning, booking and running of various conferences.

"The students are put right into professional situations and receive excellent experience which enables them to move right into the business world after they are graduated," Dale said.

Dale said UCS also offers a consultation service to student groups that want to plan conferences but can't afford the cost of going directly through the office.

The office's biggest competition, Dale said, comes from the New England Center and Dartmouth College, both located in New Hampshire. She said she feels UCS has the edge over these two facilities because of its central location in New England. But she said UCS has increased both sales and marketing activities to go after a national clientel.

"I'm looking forward to the future," Dales said. "I can see a strong picture of growth over the next few years."

Regents' standards won't harm UMass

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

Because of the high academic profile of the incoming class of 1987, Director of Undergraduate Admissions David G. Taggart last week said he felt the University of Massachusetts at Amherst would "not be affected that much" by the proposal for minimum admissions standards passed by the Board of Regents last spring.

The proposal, which underwent major revisions before being passed and later endorsed by UMass President David C. Knapp, states its criteria are interim standards and subject to review by individual state colleges before going into effect. Taggart said the UMass president's office, which oversees the three University campuses, will convene a meeting this fall to discuss any further changes in the requirements; such proposed changes will then be incorporated in a total University statement to the regents.

"There have been enough alterations in (the policy) as it stands (now) to allow us a great deal of flexibility in terms of how to deal with incoming students and the requirements," Taggart said.

"The standards are nowhere near as rigid as when originally proposed," he added, noting the requirements are only minimum standards, and ones the new entering class all would have passed.

The standards, as approved last May, include a sliding scale that would enable high class rank to offset low Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores and vice versa, as well as 16 academic units to be phased in through 1987.

"It raises some serious issues in high school curriculum developments," Taggart said of the courses to be required of all applicants. They are: four years of English, three of mathematics and two each of natural science, social science and a foreign language.

The revised standards also include exemptions for older, disabled and educationally disadvantaged students.

The original proposal set minimum cut off points for both SAT scores and class rank, allegedly harming the chances of acceptance for minorities and students who do not test well, while students from competitive high schools would suffer from the rank requirement. No exemptions were included in the draft.

The standards will be used by the state's nine four-year public colleges and UMass, though community colleges will be exempt. Statements from the colleges should be completed this fall to enable implementation of the policy by January 1, 1984 for the admission of next year's class.

New judicial hearing policy limit student rights

By WILLIAM HOPKINS
and JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Revisions in the Residential Education Judicial Procedure made by a University of Massachusetts Housing Services committee over the summer will change the composition of hearing boards and limit students' rights to representation at hearings.

Judicial Board hearings are held to resolve disputes between students or to judge students charged with violating rules and regulations governing student conduct.

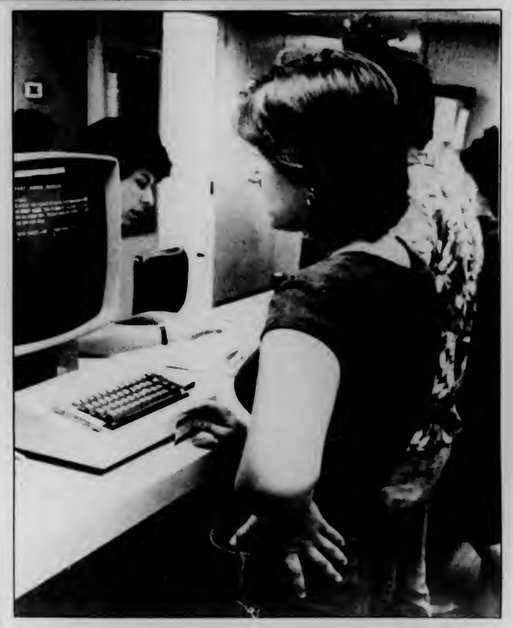
Assistant Director of Residential Education Larry Moneta, who chaired the Housing Services committee, said the changes were made because "students were being used as pawns" between two sets of trained advocates at hearings. Moneta said he feels the new policy, which must be approved by the UMass Board of Trustees, will result in quicker resolution of disputes while preserving due process for students.

According to the new policy, students are permitted to bring advisors to hearings, but the advisors may not "address or otherwise substantively direct the participation of the accused student."

Hearing boards will now be chosen by the area governments instead of the student attorney general, and resident assistants and community resource assistants will no longer be permitted to sit on hearing boards.

There will now be two appeals boards, each serving East and West residential populations respectively. Appeals boards will be composed of three students and two housing services staff members, instead of three housing staffers and two students as was previously the case.

Directing Attorney Charles DiMare of the Legal Services Office (LSO) said he is concerned the new policy is unfair. With student advocates denied a voice in hearings, a foreign student who speaks little English or a first year art student in a dispute with a senior legal studies major would be at a disadvantage, he said.



Despite his reservations, DiMare said LSO is not planning to try the constitutionality of the policy in court unless student's rights appear to be violated.

"Any new policy should be given a chance," he said.

DiMare also noted that "student input was only involved at a very late point in time," and "only after students made demands."

Acting Student Attorney General Dakin Ferris said the housing Services committee had originally proposed more drastic changes in the policy. The committee's original revision removed the double-jeopardy clause and dropped two sanctions, "Warning or Censure" and "Admonition", leaving "Reimbursement for Damages" as the least severe punishment allowed for guilty students. The committee also wanted to ban attorneys from hearings, Ferris said.

After the Student Government Association protested, Ferris met twice with Director of Housing Services Joseph Zannini and had those provisions restored.

Aid reqires draft registration

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

The Office of Financial Aid at the University of Massachusetts mailed out 14,000 letters this summer to remind male students they must register for the draft to receive their aid awards this fall.

Arthur Jackson, director of the office, said that although awards were sent out before the Solomon Act became law July 1, the law is now in effect and students must complete a form verifying their Selective Service registration.

"To receive funds, (male) students must avoid by whatever regulation the government sets, while fighting to either support or overturn it," he said, noting 10,000 students had already complied. "Students should be advised they really have no choice—it's a very, very severe requirement."

Jackson said "it may present problems later" if students do not return their forms and that objectors should seek counseling and make their views known to their elected officials.

"We encourage students to come in and ask questions concerning the legality of the law," he said.

The Solomon Act took effect two months later than originally planned, Jackson added, because of an injunction by a Minnesota judge, who said the law conflicted with the Constitutional right against self-incrimination. The injunction was overruled by the Supreme Court, although another hearing is scheduled for the fall.

"It's a controversial issue," Jackson said, noting University officials were "in opposition" to the act last spring. "There's no clear decisions, no overwhelming majority."

Though financial aid statistics at UMass will not be available until the end of the month, Jackson said the University will be receiving $42 million in federal aid this year, which is about the same as last year. State funding increased to $3 million, including the Board of Regents Massachusetts State Scholarships, which increased in amount from $300 to $500 each.

Institutional funds bring in another $3 million for students. he said.

Last year 23,684 undergraduate and graduate students applied for financial aid, of whom 21,551 were determined to have some need and 17,033 were granted some form of aid. Freshmen entering in 1982 received an average award of $2365.

Current financial aid requirements will cease to exist and must be rewritten in 1984, Jackson also said, noting it will be election year.

"It is important that students and parents put input to elected officials (who will set the requirements) for the next four years," he said.

Blue Wall has new strategy

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Patrons of the Blue Wall should prepare themselves for several changes in the next few weeks, the most noticable of which will be the addition of women to the bouncer staff.

Mary Bourret, supervisor of the Blue Wall, said she plans to begin hiring women for the security staff starting today and said she sees no problems in using women as part of the security staff.

"I will treat them the same as I treat any of the other bouncers," Bourret said.

Any bouncer who cannot handle the physical end of the job—changing kegs—or who doesn't help out when another bouncer is in trouble would be fired, she said.

In other changes, Bourret said plans are underway to upgrade the entertainment to make the bar more competitive with other area clubs and bars, which will begin this Friday with Robin Lane and the Chartbusters.

In addition, Bourret said the choice of bottled beer will be greatly enlarged to include many American as well as foreign brands.

She said there are also plans for pool tournaments, a jazz and blues night, bar stools and a more current selection of movies.

"We want to really upgrade the appearance of the place," Bourret said, "and go after the off campus crowd by bringing in as many national acts as we can and by specializing in certain types of entertainment on the same nights each week to attract a loyal following."

But not everything will be new, Bourret said. The Blue Wall will continue its tradition of Monday night football with free popcorn and drink specials as well as Tuesday comedy nights and free movies on Wednesday. She also said the wide screen television will be turned on promptly at 1 p.m. every weekday for the soap opera addicts.

Munchies being renovated

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

The Hampden Snack Bar has a new look. Or will have a new look, when it's finished.

The snack bar, located below the Southwest Munchies Store, will also have a new name. The renovations, which include the purchase of new furniture and cooking facilities, will so change the appearance of the popular hangout that "it shouldn't be called just Munchies," said Marie Cappadona, director of Food Services. A contest will be held this fall to choose the new title.

The new dining room will include a foot high, carpeted platform in the back corner, and booths will replace tables to seat patrons throughout the area. Draperies, instead of shutters, will add color and "create a mock Roman shade effect;" new light will "brighten the place up. It was getting old and tired (after 20 years,)" she said.

Cappadona said she hoped the dining area would be ready to open today in order to accomodate students' returning to school; cold foods and beverages will be sold in the games room until the cooking facilities are complete. The new facilities, which will include a restructuring of lines to provide faster service, will hopefully open in the next two weeks, she said.

Funds for the renovations, which will cost $20,000 for the furniture alone, were included in the food service department's budget last year. A full estimate was not available.

Plans to refurbish the Worcester Snack Bar will be in the works this fall, as a result of a student market research study conducted last year "to determine what people really want from Food Services."

We want to create the kind of food services and environment people want to see," Cappadona said.

The sign outside the Alumni Association Building carries a message of good feeling to returning students.

UMass student engineers granted computer system

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts School of Engineering will soon be receiving 20 computer terminals, including an IBM 4341 processor and CAD/CAM machines, to aid students and faculty researchers alike in manufacturing and computer aided design projects. UMass was one of 20 schools to receive the International Business Machines corporation (IBM) grant for the $2 million system, for which 120 schools applied.

"UMass will be at the forefront of engineering schools by having an advanced curriculum by the use of this machine," said Richard Giglio, head of the industrial engineering department.

"It (the new computer) is not something you will never see," he said. "We plan to work it into various courses where it's not used now."

The computer will be used chiefly by the industrial and mechanical engineering departments, who made the grant proposal, but may also incorporate electrical engineering, art and interior design because of its extensive graphic capabilities, Giglio said. "There will be a number of interesting uses that we didn't even anticipate," he added.

The grant proposal described the departments' joint program, long range plans, curriculum and proposed uses for the computer, Giglio said.

"They liked the program we already had," he said. "We're going into a much heavier use of computer graphic displays. The computer will improve the education students get in this area."

The new system's capabilities outdistance those available on other engineering department computers, such as the Siber, Giglio said. Its duties include scheduling, planning and controlling production, and coordinating machine tools.

Giglio said computer corporations offer the grants as a result of their concern with American productivity and quality of manufacturing and seek to acquaint students with their systems to improve this state of productivity.

The University received the grant in June and the system should arrive by January, Giglio said. IBM could deliver the computers "by next month if we asked them" but the University must first allocate space for the system and establish maintenance contracts, he said.

UMass track star drowns

By TRICIA YACOVONE
Collegian Staff

John C. Wright, 21, a University of Massachusetts hurdle champion and men's track team captain, drowned August 1 at Puffer's Pond while swimming with a friend.

Wright, a native of Dorchester, had planned to graduate in January with a degree in political science.

After running indoor and outdoor track for four years, two of them as captain, and winning both the indoor and outdoor New England collegiate high hurdles last season, Wright had planned to try out for the UMass Minutemen this season as a defensive back or wide receiver.

Wright set a New England record (13.7 seconds) in the 110 meter indoor high hurdles at Bates College last February, and won the 1983 New England championships in 110 meter high hurdles with a time of 14.32 seconds.

Wright's athletic accomplishments go back to high school, where he earned a spot on the 1979 Boston Globe All-Scholastic track team, but his activities on campus were not limited to sports. He was a resident assistant in Washington Upper dormitory and a student counselor, as well as a photographer for Nummo News and the Collegian.

Track coach Ken O'Brien said he was initially stunned by the news of Wright's death, but eventually came to terms with it.

"It'll be tough to do a lot of things without recalling him in some way because he was so involved in so many things," O'Brien said. "He was warm and sincere, and he related to people of different age groups equally well."

Gay Douglas, head of residence of Thoreau dormitory, where Wright lived last fall, agreed.

"He was a very beatiful person, well-liked by most people in the dorm," she said.

Wright's death ws ruled an accidental drowning by the Hampshire County medical examiner.

Pols bicker over AG appointment

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The failure of Student Government Association presidents to appoint permanent student attorney generals over the last two years has weakened the office, acting Attorney General Dakin Ferris said last week.

Ferris was appointed acting attorney general by the Undergraduate Student Senate Coordinating Committee on June 8, after a late-semester attorney general search process was cancelled.

"The attorney general's office has become so political that the responsibilities are not taken care of," Ferris said. There have been "eight or nine attorney generals or acting attorney generals over the past four years so that there's no continuity," he said.

"The University is always dealing with different people, so (they feel) they can basically not pay any attention to the office," he said. Ferris, a junior political science major, described the student attorney general's position as "judicial liason of the student government to the University."

SGA co-President Tom Ahern said he did not choose a permanent attorney general from the recommendations of a search committee last spring because "there was no last Senate meeting because of lack of quorum" to approve his decision.

Ferris said former acting Attorney General Elizabeth Hill told him just before the meeting that the search had been invalidated "on affirmative action guidelines," and Ahern was going to appoint her as attorney general permanently.

Ahern said the attorney general search was cancelled because of "a shortage of applicants" to the position, and he felt keeping Hill over the summer would maintain some continuity in the office.

Neither affirmative action rules nor a shortage of applicants is a valid reason for cancelling the attorney general search, Ferris said, because "there were more applicants than they've had in recent history," and Hill "did nothing with this office to increase Third World representation."

An example of the administration's lack of attention to the office, Ferris said, was a Housing Services committee's revision of the Residential Education Judicial Procedure (see related story p 5). The Housing Services committee began making the revisions in early spring, but the attorney general's office was never consulted until revisions were finished. However, Ferris succeeded in restoring some basic students' rights that had been removed in the revision.

"Different attorney generals have different ideas so the administration doesn't know where the office stands," and they ignore it, Ferris said.

Cops prepare for return of student drivers

"Whether or not an officer was the cause of an accident is not the issue so much to us. We're worried about the possible accidents that could put us or our vehicles out of work. When that happens, the student suffers. It's like that cliche — You're right, but dead right. — that's the kind of things we want to avoid."
— Sgt. Dave Grader, UMass Police

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

Most people who drive with the police do so involuntarily. Most people who make a cop swerve his cruiser, drive backward, squeak around a corner and go in the other direction on the wrong side of the street end up in either the hospital or the cruiser.

Most people who encounter the police, in this area anyway, end up with the University police department, which is now testing a new way to keep people out of cruisers and hospital beds.

Sgt. Dave Grader explains the layout of the course before demonstrating how it should be done.

Sergeant Dave Grader of the UMass police rested against the tailgate of the small brown pickup in Southwest parking lot 21 and pointed to 100 fluorescent orange safety cones arranged in funny geometric lines. He commented on the performance of the officer across the way bobbing, weaving, and screeching through them.

"He's a very good driver," Grader noted, marking his scores on a clipboard. "On the course ten times, and only made four mistakes." He glanced for a moment at the other parking lot where a dented yellow van lay stuck on a curb, and then looked back at his driver. "They learn," he shrugged.

Grader and patrol officer Cheryl Sponburgh have been certified by the National Safety Council how to drive better this summer — in vans and cruisers, defensively, safely, and efficiently.

Grader and his peers looked good. They even had good working tans.

They should have. They had been out in the sun since July, testing and retesting officers until they did everything right. Sometimes the eight or 10 repetitions were enough; if not, an officer was back behind the wheel, training for unusual driving situations which aren't always so unusual to a cop.

Surprisingly, a lot of what they learned isn't your average Smokey and The Bandit highway sidewinding. (Shoot, good buddy, even Burt had to learn a proper three point turn.) So each officer had to stay within a time block, completing the test — with faults — between a maximum of 2:45 and a minimum of 1:45. "It doesn't matter so much how fast you do it as how well you do it," Grader said. "Whatever mistake you make is the equivalent of an added five seconds." The test was also designed to be done perfectly within the time period.

"Whether or not an officer was the cause of an accident is not the issue so much to us," Grader noted. "We're worried about the possible accidents that could put us or our vehicles out of work. When that happens, the student suffers. It's like that cliche—'You're right but dead right'—that's the kind of thing we want to avoid."

Police cruiser dodges cones in the obstacle course designed to test and improve driving ability.

Grader and Sponburgh tested groups of six people during three day periods including one day-long classroom period, and two days of field training before the actual test, which had five runs—the best and worst of which were eliminated during scoring to receive an average score.

Best of all, to fee payers, the cost of the program was nothing. Officers were paid salary during the tests, and other officers made up for their absence. Even the cones, which would normally cost $10 each to rent, were loaned by Northeast Utilities.

"It's both enjoyable and enlightening," Officer Jim Turati said after completing his training and testing. "I've been driving for 20 years, and found out I've had to brush up on a few skills I never thought I'd lost. Sometimes you can pick up little bad habits without noticing."

Of the officers tested, according to Grader, only five remained for remedial training.

"We're getting there," he said. "We should always be on the other side of the accident—prevention."

Student businesses offer service, experience

By TAMI BORTON
and JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Student controlled businesses and co-ops at the University of Massachusetts provide goods and services at low cost and offer an opportunity for students to become involved in real business experience.

"What is fairly unique (about the UMass system) is the variety, from an auto shop to a sporting goods store, to a photo co-op and food services, " Katja Hahn d'Errico, coordinator of the Economic Development Office (EDO).

"The primary responsibility of this office (EDO) is to assist and support student businesses and to help students create businesses and operate in a democratic, non-profit manner,"d'Errico said.

Student controlled businesses must be non-profit so they can offer the lowest prices possible, d'Errico said, but at the same time, "you don't want to run them in the black."

To aid in that,the EDO provides assistance in accounting, marketing services, and organization and development, d'Errico said. The 21 interns who work in the office get real experience working in different business situations, "and they learn also to engage in a democratic decision- making process," she said. d'Errico brings good experience to her position as EDO coordinator. She was hired in July from Squash Trucking of Belchertown, a worker-owned collective she helped found in 1972. Squash Trucking has for many years been one of the purveyors of the People's Market and Earth Foods co-ops.

Only three student controlled businesses — People's Market, Student Note Service and copy center, and the Recycling Center — stayed open all summer, and, many others will be opening a little late, but d'Errico expects all 23 businesses to be in operation this fall.

"I'm very curious and very excited for when they come back," she said.

The People's Market is the oldest (10 years) and on of the strongest student co-ops. Located across from Earthfoods in the Student Union Building, it is open weekdays form 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Wednesday to 7.p.m. Volunteers are welcome and receive $2 of food credit per hour of work.

Earthfoods is open weekdays 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. providing vegetarian lunches to the University community. Volunteers, who are important to the program's success, receive a free meal for an hour of work.

Union Records Unlimited, located next to the Hatch in the Student Union Building, sells records, tapes, concert tickets and accessories at low prices. Business hours are Monday through Thursday 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. and Friday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The Student Federal Credit Union is the largest student-run credit union in the country. It is federally chartered and offers many of the same services ofered by regular savings banks. Students, members of their families and University employees can take advantage of its high interest rates on savings and low interest rates on loans by paying a one-time $1 membership fee and depositing a minimum of $5 in an account.

The student Auto Workshop, located in the Campus Center Garage, offers space, tools, professional assistance and an opportunity to learn auto mechanics skills to members who wish to do their own auto maintenance and repairs.

The Sporting Goods Co-op sells athletic equipment and clothing to students at affordable prices. Stuents may volunteer to help run the co-op, which is open from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. weekdays.

The University Photo Co-op, located across form the Student Union post office offers low cost film. paper, chemicals, and film processing, and serves as an opportunity for students to learn about photography and business.

Teaching awards honor profs

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

UMass psychology Professor Richard P. Halgin, chemistry Professor Earl J. McWhorter and accounting Professor Richard H. Simpson have received the 1983 Distinguished Teaching Award. Three graduate students also received the award.

The award, given to honor outstanding classroom teaching, has been given annually to three professors since 1962. A panel of 23 department heads, students and alumni select the winners, who receive a certificate at Commencement.

Professor Halgin has taught courses in clinical and abnormal psychology since coming to the University as a department lecturer and assistant director of the Psychological Services Center in 1977. He has also served as director of undergraduate studies, chief undergraduate advisor, and member of the board of directors for the Office of Internship. Halgin received Faculty Research Grants in 1980 and 1982.

Professor McWhorter, a second time recipient of the award, has been teaching organic chemistry courses at UMass since 1954. He is a member of the American Chemical Society.

Professor Simpson, a UMass graduate, has been at the University since 1967, teaching financial reporting. Last year he received the "most inspirational teacher" award from the UMass chapter of Beta Alpha Phi, the accounting honor society. He is currently the coordinator of masters in accounting students.

Susan Keys, a teaching associate at UMass since 1981, is one of three graduate students to win the award. She has been conducting research on higher order structure of chromatin for her masters in zoology, which she plans to receive this month.

Carolyn Schmelcke has been a teaching assistant of microeconomics and macroeconomics at the University since 1978. She received her M.A. from UMass this spring and will receive her Ph.D. in 1984. Her dissertation will discuss "Women in Industrial Trade Unions, the Gains and Losses, 1968-1980."

Paul Vasconcellos, an instructor this past year for "Theory and Practice of Interviewing and Counseling," has been a teaching assistant at UMass since 1980. He is the cluster coordinator for the Orchard Hill/Central residential area and a therapist for UMass psychological services. He is a candidate for a PH.D. at the University.

An estimated $100,000 facelift at the University Store, an $1,800 new office constructed in a former study area and a new menu at the Top of the Campus Restaurant will greet students returning to the UMass Amherst campus this fall.

New carpeting throughout the store and additional shelving comprise the cost estimate of the University Store renovations, said Bill Harris, director of the Campus Center. Departments in the store have also been rearranged.

The new office, built for the sales department of Conference Services, is located on the ninth floor of the Campus Center in part of an area formerly used for study space. Controversy over the proposed office arose last spring when students protested that the office would reduce the already scarce amount of study space on campus for commuters.

Harris claimed the space was being poorly used at the time, and that the new smaller area would accomodate just as many students as before.

"The two couches plus the two tables are still there and students still use the space," he said last week.

The new menu at the TOC, scheduled for distribution today, will include only aesthetic, and not culinary changes. But the prices will remain the same.

Water shortage nil

There is "absolutely no chance" of a repeat performance this fall of a water shortage which sent University of Massachusetts students home in the fall of 1980, Stan Ziomeck of the Amherst Public Works Department said last week.

"The town of Amherst has an adequate water supply to maintain both campuses and the community," he said.

Cookout wins award

The "World's Largest Barbecue", served to 8,134 University of Massachusetts students in the spring of 1982, has brought the school more recognition than just a spot on Evening Magazine.

The UMass Department of Food Services won second place in the National 10th Annual Menu Contest this past summer in the special events category for residence halls. The menu, served to the crowd in three hours, included barbequed chicken, baked beans, tossed salad and assorted dressings, brownies, potato chips, watermelon, vegetable and tofu kabobs, pickles, ice cream sundae cups, popcorn, dinner rolls and beverages.

First prize in the category went to the University of Northern Colorado's "A Touch of Class" menu, a dinner for 3,000 that featured five kinds of hors d'oeuvres and ice carvings.

The contest, sponsored by the National Association of College and University Food Services and judged by a panel of experts at Appalachian State University in Boone, N.C., drew 99 entries in five categories.

Bus riders may see new routes, insurance rebates

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Transportation Advisory Committee is now studying possible auto insurance rebates for UMass bus riders and alternative bus routes to area bars and supermarkets, according to acting committee Chair Bennie Hilliard.

Hilliard said plans for a shuttle bus to major grocery stores for commuters and late buses to bars have a "very good" chance of implementation, while the insurance rebate needs further study.

Late bus routes to bars were proposed as "a safety measure," Hilliard said, and also "because of the enforcement of the alcohol drinking and driving laws."

The committee, made up of students and parking and transportation officials, is "very enthusiastic," Hilliard said. "They (officials) are eager to hear us and willing to act" on projects "within reason."

"Money is the critical issue," Hilliard said. The committee is "exploring different ways of coming up with other funding so we can add routes without cutting others."

Another project, insurance rebates for car owners who use public transportation, has been approved by the Massachusetts insurance commissioner, Hilliard said. Drivers who use public transportation in Boston get a 10 percent rebate, he said.

"The idea behind it is that because we are not driving our vehicles, the insurance risk is lower, and we should get the 10 percent rebate that's offered in other places," Hilliard said.

Student Government Association co-President Tom Ahern said he revived the Transportation Advisory Committee, inactive for at least two years, in response to student polls taken during his election campaign with Charlene Allen last spring.

"When we went around dorms and apartments campaigning to see what people want, we found they wanted alternative bus routes," Ahern said.

Voting members of the committee include five undergraduate and two graduate students, one designee of the chancellor and one designee of the Parking and Transportation Committee. The Director of Balanced Transportation and Parking, the Transit Operations manager and one student administrator of the bus system, elected by the bus drivers, sit on the committee but do not vote.

Hilliard, a senior University Without Walls major and staff member of the Commuter Area Government, said the committee "will elect a permanent chairperson from our ranks when we seat the complete committee".

The committee is "particularly interested in sophomores and juniors" to serve, "so they can serve for at least two or three years," and establish continuity on the board, Hilliard said.

Plans for a shuttle bus to major grocery stores for commuters and late buses to bars have a "very good" chance for implementation, while the insurance rebate needs further study.

Students seeking dorm rooms face only normal delay

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

It will be a "regular, normal crazy year" in the Housing Assignment Office, beginning with the task of housing homeless students, office coordinator Gerald Quarles said last week.

Currently only students who were not guaranteed housing or who paid their bills late are without rooms, Quarles said, adding he expects all students to be housed in the next several weeks.

The homeless have been divided into several groups and assigned times to report to the office. High priority students, such as first year and foreign students and those living far away were scheduled to begin reporting to the office last Saturday, while upperclass students with presumably "higher cope levels" will report throughout this week.

Students will be assigned rooms randomly as spaces open up. "No shows" will be recorded beginning tomorrow at noon.

One hundred and fifteen "swing spaces" will provide an alternative to those who cannot be assigned a regular room immediately. Set up in dormitory lounges and former student rooms now used for other purposes, the spaces provide ample furniture and are assigned only on a voluntary basis. Students can expect to live in the spaces from four to six weeks and must note they must accept a regular room when it is assigned, whether or not it is in that dorm.

Last year, 175 new students and 250 juniors and seniors arrived on campus with no place to live. Temporarily, 46 were housed in the Campus Center Hotel and 100 were sent home — the University allows students living within a 40 mile radius to commute — until 250 to 300 "no shows" were recorded several days later. Within two weeks, everyone was housed.

While similar measures will be taken this year until everyone is housed, Quarles said students with extreme circumstances will be given special consideration.

"Last year we read in the Collegian about a couple who were camping out in a tent (on campus) because they had no place to live," he said. "We had them come in when we heard about it."

Despite the run around during the first weeks of school, Quarles said students are usually satisfied with the way things work out.

"Everyone feels fairly treated when they reflect upon it," he said.

Off campus vacancies low

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

The off campus housing situation looks "pretty bleak" for the fall, Joanne Levenson, director of the off campus housing office, said last week.

"There is not enough housing for every student that wants to live in Amherst," she said. "There's a lot less housing stock available than a year ago."

Levenson said the vacancy rate, projected to be between 1 and 3 percent, is "towards the 1 percent," with most vacancies occurring in the Belchertown, Sunderland and North Amherst areas. Housing is "very expensive" this year as well, she said, estimating an average expense of $210 plus utilities for one person.

Last year, houses for sale flooded the market, Levenson said, but many were rented because of high interest rates. This year, interest rates are down and "the houses are gone," she said.

Levenson noted the only housing construction currently underway in the area was for luxury units.

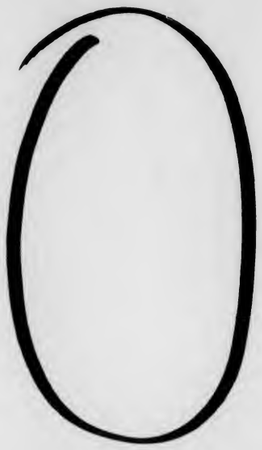
Campus Card.

Welcome, University of Massachusetts students!

No matter what your schedule or workload is, you can now do your banking at a nearby X-Press 24. There's only one card that lets you do all your regular banking at more than 435 X-Press 24s around Massachusetts — the BayBanks X-Press 24™ Card.



To get your card, just visit our Amherst Office, 75 East Pleasant Street, today. Look for us in the green and white tent there.

You'll receive Free Campus Gifts when you open your account.

Try Something Better

THE MINIMUM DEPOSIT IN OUR NEW CASH ACCOUNT IS A NICE ROUND NUMBER.

The plain truth is, a checking account can be a good deal when you maintain the minimum balance.

But, if you drop below the minimum, it's not as good because you get charged.

That's why Shawmut has created the Cash Account. Here's how it works: Instead of using checks to get cash, you simply use your Shawmut Card. (Eliminating checks lets us eliminate the minimum balance.) What's more, your Shawmut Card is good at dozens of locations across Massachusetts.

You only pay one dollar a month for service, and 25 cents every time you use your Card. So, by using your Card only when you need to, you control your service charges, not the bank.

So, stop at your local Shawmut Hampshire County Bank office and open your Cash Account. Because if you've been looking for a better way to bank with less money, we've got your number.

University Library schedules

The Library System

The library system consists of Goodell Library, the 28-story University Library Tower, two science branch libraries, a music library, and several reading rooms. The card catalog is in Goodell, transferred there along with other library materials and services in 1979 after discovery of defects in the brick facade of the University Library Tower. Begin any library search in Goodell.

Goodell Library
Located opposite the Old Chapel, this library is between South College and Bartlett Hall. It contains the University library system card catalog; reference materials and staff; a book collection of about 75,000 volumes; all current periodicals in the social sciences and humanities, and backfiles since 1965 of 1,200 of these titles; more than 1,000,000 microforms; newspapers; a basic law collection; the most frequently used federal and state publications and the government documents office; the interlibrary loan, and library director's offices; course reserve materials; and about 400 study spaces.

University Library Tower
The Tower entrance is on the east side of the building, facing the campus pond. The Tower contains less heavily used material in the social sciences and humanities; the University archives; special collections and rare books; the library business office; and about 500 study spaces on the 26th floor and on the perimeter of book stack floors. It does not contain card catalog or reference services. The collection in the Tower is usually accessible to anyone with a UMass or other Five College photo ID or a resident borrower's card with a photo ID. Others should inquire at the desk at the Tower entrance.

Physical Sciences Library
Situated on the 2nd floor of the Graduate Research Center, the Physical Sciences Library includes materials in engineering, chemistry, mathematics, water resources, computer science, food technology, wood technology, physics, astronomy, and related fields.

Morrill Biological Sciences Library
Located on the 2nd floor of Morrill Science Center, this library contains biological and geological material.

Music Library
The Music Library, in Room 149 of the Fine Arts Center, houses books and journals relating to music and a noncirculating collection of thematic indexes, scores, and recordings, as well as music listening equipment.

Catalog Information

Card Catalog
The card catalog on the 5th floor entrance level of Goodell Library lists the book and journal holdings of the University library system, including branch libraries and reading rooms.

There are separate catalogs for archival materials and government publications. The card catalog is divided into two sections. The Author Title catalog contains cards for names of persons and agencies considered to be authors of publications, as well as title cards for most works in the collection. The Subject Catalog contains cards indicating the subject areas of publications; to find the exact terms used, consult Library of Congress Subject Headings on tables near the card catalog.

Pioneer Valley Union List of Journal and Serial Holdings
This microfiche publication lists periodicals in the UMass system (Amherst, Boston, Worcester) and in other major collections in the Pioneer Valley alphabetically by title, with locations, call numbers, and volumes held.

The librarians at the Reference Desk in Goodell will gladly provide assistance in using these catalogs and in locating library materials and information.

Locating Books and Periodicals

Books and periodicals listed in the card catalog are arranged according to the Library of Congress classification scheme. Each item has a unique call number, a combination of letters and numbers, appearing on its label and on the upper lefthand corner of its catalog cards. The call numbers may also include special location designations, which show, for instance, whether a publication is in one of the branch libraries. However, the card catalog will not indicate whether a book or periodical is in Goodell Library or in the Tower; other records must be consulted for this information.

Books in Goodell
These are listed by call number in a red-covered, multivolume computer printout, on tables near the Reference Desk. Books are shelved on four levels, in the front of the building.

Books in the Tower
Books not listed by call number in the Goodell printout are in the Tower.

Periodicals in Goodell
Recent, unbound issues of all social sciences and humanities journals are shelved in the Current Periodical Room, Goodell 506. Backfiles of 1,200 selected titles are bound and shelved on the 2nd floor, three flights down the stairs near the card catalog. Some titles are in microformat; these are shelved in the Microforms Room, Goodell 410. Both bound and microform journals in Goodell are designated in the Pioneer Valley Union List by the location UMAS-UNIV and the phrase "volumes held since 1965 or later in Goodell"; they are also listed in a single blue-covered computer printout kept near the Reference Desk.

Periodicals in the Tower
All UMAS-UNIV periodicals not shown in the Pioneer Valley Union List or the blue-covered computer printout as being in Goodell are shelved in the Tower, in the book stacks.

Resources and Services

Archives
Located on the 25th floor of the Tower, this collection contains several groups of personal and historical manuscripts, as well as material related to the University of Massachusetts.

Art Collection
All art books and journals are shelved in a noncirculating collection on the 9th floor of the Tower. For hours of access check the schedule of library hours, available at the circulation desks.

Audiovisual Department
This department in Goodell 308 supports classroom instruction by distributing audiovisual equipment and films to faculty members, and by producing audiovisual instructional material for them. Enter from outside the building, at the southwest corner loading dock.

Audiovisual Reserve
On the 6th floor of Goodell, this section houses course-related audiovisual materials, and the necessary viewing and listening equipment.

Computer Search Service
Inquire at the Reference Desk, 5th floor entrance level of Goodell, or at the appropriate science library for an estimate of charges and information on computerized literature searches of bibliographic and information data bases in the sciences, social sciences, and humanities.

Computer Terminals
In the Tower, computer terminals linked to the University Computing Center are available for use on the 7th floor.

Five College Libraries
UMass students, staff, and faculty have direct borrowing privileges at the main libraries of Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke, and Smith Colleges. Material thus borrowed may be returned directly, or to Goodell Library.

Government Documents
This collection includes official publications of the United States, United Nations, and Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Most of these materials are not listed in the main card catalog, but are accessible through special indexes. Consult the documents librarians, Goodell 416, about the use of this collection.

Instruction in Library Use
Course-related library sessions are conducted for graduate and undergraduate classes, at the request of instructors; inquire at the Reference Desk, Goodell.

Law Collection
A core collection of noncirculating legal materials is shelved on the 2nd floor of Goodell and listed in a blue-covered computer print out available there and at the Reference Desk on the 5th floor.

Library cards
UMass student, staff, and faculty IDs serve as library cards. Five College patrons and other Massachusetts residents seeking borrowing privileges should apply at the Circulation Office, Goodell 512.

Loan Period
Books circulate for four weeks. Unless they have been requested by another borrower, books may be renewed by mail (U.S. or campus), by phone (three-item limit per call), or in person at the library from which they were borrowed. Forms for book renewals are available at the circulation desk in each library. Periodicals do not circulate.

Recalls
Books are subject to recall after two weeks if requested by another reader, and at any time if needed for Reserve.

Reserve Books
Reserve materials circulate for time periods varying from two hours to several days. A photo ID is required to use these materials. They must be returned to the desk from which they were borrowed — in Goodell Library, to the Reserve Desk on the 6th floor, Goodell 615.

Book Returns
Books may be returned to the library from which they were borrowed or to Goodell Library. After hours there is a book deposit box at the Goodell entrance; do not use this to return Reserve books or interlibrary loans.

Maps
A collection of approximately 100,000 sheet maps—geological and topographic, demographic, and historical—is housed in Room 269, Morrill Science Center.

Microforms
Microtext copies of newspapers, selected periodicals, government archives, and many other types of research materials are in the Microforms Room on the 4th floor of Goodell, along with reading and printing equipment.

Newspapers
Current issues of selected foreign and domestic newspapers are shelved in the Current Periodical Room, Goodell 506. Some backfiles of these, and a number of other newspaper titles, are available in the Microforms Room.

Interlibrary Loan
Faculty and graduate students may apply at the Reference Desk, Goodell, to obtain research materials not available in the University of Massachusetts library system. Undergraduates may use interlibrary loan service only for materials within the Valley area.

Library Orientation Tours
Tours of Goodell and the Tower are given several times a day at the beginning of each semester, and at other times by appointment; inquire at the Reference Desk, Goodell.

Reference
The 5th floor of Goodell houses the noncirculating reference collection. Reference librarians are available most of the time the library is open to help in using this material and the card catalogs, as well as to provide many other kinds of assistance in making use of the library system.

Special Collections and Rare Books
Noncirculating rare and fragile materials, unusual editions, and individual manuscripts are kept in this area on the 25th floor of the Tower, and are made available for use in its reading room, Room 2563.

General Information

Bicycles, Drink, Food, and Pets are not permitted in the libraries.

Calculators may be borrowed, on surrender of your ID card in Goodell Library at the Reserve Desk on the 6th floor, at the Government Documents Desk on the 4th floor, and at the science libraries.

Change for one dollar bills is available at change machines in Goodell outside the Circulation Office, Room 512, and in the Tower on the main floor near the Circulation Desk.

Elevators in the Tower are programmed so that only 3 and 5 stop at all floors. Take the first elevator which stops, and use the stairs for adjacent floors.

Handicapped Persons who need special assistance should inquire at the Circulation Office, Goodell 512. Special apparatus for the use of partially sighted persons is available in the Tower. Inquire at the Tower Circulation Desk.

Lost and Found in Goodell is located in the Library Office, Room 514 on weekdays and at the Circulation Desk evenings and weekends. In other libraries, inquire at the Circulation Desk.

Photocopying Machines (coin-operated) are located in Goodell on the 6th, 5th, and 2nd floors; and in the Tower on the main floor. A branch of the University Copy Center on the 5th floor of Goodell provides a part-time copy service.

Restrooms in Goodell are located on the 6th, 4th, and 2nd floors; and in the Tower on main, 7, 10, 13, 16, 19, 22, 25, and 26. There are facilities for handicapped persons in the Tower on the main floor only.

Smoking in the Tower is permitted only in Room 2604 on floor 26. No smoking is permitted in Goodell.

Study Areas in Goodell are on the 6th floor and on the 2nd floor, and in the Tower on floor 26 and on the perimeter of each book stack floor.

Study Carrels in the Tower are assigned by academic departments most often to graduate students and faculty who are heavily involved in library research.

Telephones in Goodell (both campus and public) are on the 4th floor. In the Tower, there are campus phones in the elevator lobby on all book stack floors, and on the main floor near the exit control desk; public telephones are also near exit control.

Typewriters are provided in the Tower near the Circulation Desk, main floor.

First week schedule unveiled

Controversy shadows planning

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

A controversy this summer between University of Massachusetts students and the staff of the Student Activities Office (SAO) over planning of the University's First Week program has resulted in a concurrent "students alternative" program called Diversity Week.

Diversity Week will feature three films, "Norma Rae", "Portrait of Theresa", and "I don't have to hide" (a film about women's eating disorders); an "El Salvador Teach-in", and an introductory workshop for first year gay and lesbian students, according to Barbara Brodley, who helped coordinate the event.

Diversity Week programming was originally proposed by students for First Week, but was rejected by SAO staff for being "too political," Brodley said.

Brodley and other student representatives resigned from the First Week Planning Committee during a July 27 meeting as a result of the dispute, but SAO staff and students had never agreed to the purpose of First Week since the committee began meeting in early July, she said.

First Week's $7,500 budget comes from Program Support Funds, distributed by Dean of Students William F. Field's office.

Though students outnumbered staff at all planning committee meetings, Brodley said SAO Program Unit Director Irene Van Schyndel and SAO Director Randy Donant ignored the votes of a majority on the committee for several programs, saying they were too political, and would not be accepted by Dean Field.

First Week is "supposed to be upbeat, very general in nature — students getting to know what opportunities and organizations exist for extra-curricular activities," Donant said last week. "The University did not see this as a program that would deal with international affairs."

Brodley claims that the rejected programs have more than political value, the El Salvador teach-in will feature "all viewpoints," and "Portrait of Theresa" "is really relevant to women everywhere, not just the Cuban revolution. It hardly discusses the Cuban revolution at all," Brodley said. The People's Gay Alliance workshop, is "important to establishing tolerance in general," she said.

While First Week is mainly for first year students, Brodley said it is also geared for returning students. "We wanted to have some programs for older students, who might be interested in something that's educational or cultural," she said.

Both Brodley and Undergraduate Student Senate Speaker Chris Sullivan expressed concern that Donant and SAO staff were taking too much control over the planning of student programs.

Donant said the Smooth Opening of Campus Committee, an administrative committee, "set the parameters of the program," and he decided the appropriateness of certain events "based on the University definitions of First Week."

Donant said he and Sullivan "are going to sit down and come up with a group of people" to decide what is "appropriate" for future First Week programs.

Noting that First Week planning "went really smoothly" last year, Brodley said students "will try again (next year). If we keep trying, hopefully we will eventually have more input."

But the show goes on . . .

Collegian Correspondent

A $1700 fireworks display last night blasted off the start of First Week, a five day program of entertainment and information to welcome students to the University of Massachusetts.

Events will continue today through Thursday in an effort to acquaint new students with University activities and each other in a relaxing and entertaining environment, said Irene Van Schyndel, program director of the Student Activities Office. The festival's $7500 cost is being financed by program support funds from the Dean of Students Office and the event has been coordinated by the Student Activities Office's First Week Planning Committee.

Today's events include the Simon Sez Show, a comedy revue, at noon on the library lawn (Campus Center first floor if it rains), and a frosh dance at the Campus Center Auditorium at 8 p.m. The cost of the dance is $1. All other First Week events are free.

There will be ongoing events on campus all week. Today through Thursday, the UMass Outing Club will be giving canoe rides on the campus pond, and the Union Video Center will be holding an exhibition, known as Video Sidewalk. The exhibition will feature music, art, and information programs on the UMass Cable System, located in the Student Union Ballroom and outside the Hatch.

Tomorrow, Wednesday and Thursday the UMass Sports Parachute Club will be holding parachute jumps onto the Haigis Mall at noon sharp.

Tomorrow's activities will include the appearance of mime Abel Silvas, a former student of Marcel Marceau. He will perform at noon in front of Franklin Dining Commons, and at 1 p.m. by the Student Union, as part of First Week's Roving Artists program. At 8 p.m. hypnotist Ken Webber will cast his spell over his audience in the Student Union Ballroom.

On Wednesday, magician Michael Waid will astound and amaze at noon in front of Hampshire Dining Commons, and at 1 p.m. by the Student Union. At 6 p.m. there will be an Afro-Caribbean Dance Show on the Fine Arts Center Plaza, featuring Eno Washington and the Bamidele Dancers and Drummers.

Students can gather information at the Referral Fair to be held from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Thursday on the library lawn. The fair is an opportunity for Registered Student Organization groups and campus agencies to distribute information about themselves to interested students.

Misinformation will also be distributed by the "Minister of Misinformation", the brainchild of comedic performer Tom Murray. If it rains, the fair will be held in the Student Union Ballroom.

Thursday's Roving Artist is singer and songwriter Judy Polan, who will perform at noon in front of Worcester Dining Commons and at 1 p.m. on the library lawn. Thursday evening at the Hatch there will be a Video and Jazz Happening, consisting of an award-winning video performance and a show by the J. B. Wyker Quartet. The video tape, by UMass graduate Hawley Hussey, is called "The Girls Tape."

Diverse population marks UMass

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
Collegian Staff

At the University of Massachusetts, numbers mean diversity.

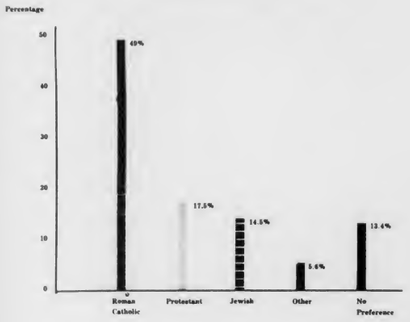
And diversity means distinction.

"Perhaps the most important characteristic of our student body is its diversity," said Tim Rinehart, director of the Academic Support Services Office. "Paradoxically, what distinguishes our students is that there is no single, distinguishing feature; it is their diverse backgrounds, talents, interests. And we're proud of this. We believe our students gain from it and learn much from one another's differences."

And differences are aplenty.

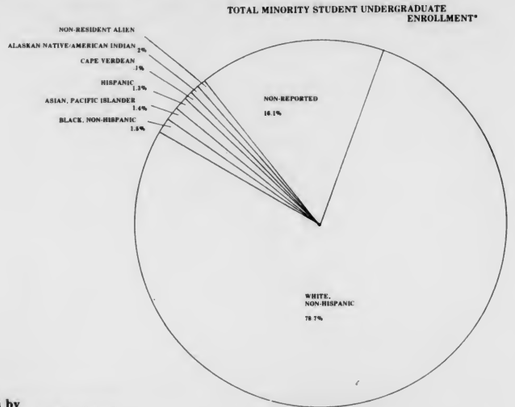
Of the estimated 19,000 undergraduate students at UMass, there are 10 men to every 9 women. Eighty-four percent of the students are Massachusetts residents; 14 percent come from N.Y., N.J., Conn., and a few other states; the remaining 2 percent come from 20 foreign countries.

The majority of students are between 18 and 21 years old; 13.5 percent are between 22 and 25; 6.5 percent are over 26. The number of older students continues to grow and services for them are increasing as well. An 'over 25' Club exists, as does a local chapter of the Vietnam Veterans Association and a child care center for the children of older students.



Minority first year students entering in the fall of 1982 numbered 219. This year the number is 311, jumping from 5.1 percent of the total entering class last year to 7.6 percent this year, a 42 percent increase overall. The actual numbers are probably higher, Rinehart said, because it is not required that entering students identify themselves as minorities, which include black, non-hispanic; Cape Verdean; Asian; Pacific Islander; American Indian/Alaskan Native; Hispanic; Non-Resident Alien. (See accompanying chart)

About half of the responding students identified themselves as Roman Catholics. Protestants number 17.5 percent, Jews, 14.5 percent, others, 5.6 percent. About 13 percent reponded no preference.



About five and a half percent of the entering first year student population is handicapped.

Compiled from statistics for this year's entering class, these facts provide a close to accurate picture of the total UMass population, a 'diverse' group if there ever was one.

Thousands march on Capitol

The lines extended for miles for those thousands who participated in the recent march on Washington for jobs, peace and freedom.

UMass students join others in march for jobs, peace, freedom

By JOSH MEYER
Collegian Staff

On August 27th, students from the University of Massachusetts were among the 250,000 marchers who traced the footsteps of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s historic march on Washington D.C. in 1963 to demand equal rights, jobs, peace and freedom. While some went to relive the tumultuous events of the past, others marched to share in the dream for a better future.

This year the march was different, although the demands for jobs, peace and freedom were the same. While the 1963 march was used as a plea for equal rights and opportunities for black Americans, the 1983 march will be remembered as an attack on the policies of the Reagan administration. Many speakers spoke of the necessity to create a wide-ranging grassroots political coalition to defeat President Reagan in the upcoming 1984 presidential election.

"We're fired up — we won't take it anymore! Send them back to Hollywood," said Rep. Walter Fauntroy, D-District of Columbia, one of the sponsors of the march.

"Twenty years ago, we came as individuals. We came back as organizations," said Andrew Young, mayor of Atlanta, and one of Martin Luther King's lieutenants or the original march. "There were many women here then, but no women's organizations; many Hispanics, many members of organized labor, many handicapped, but none nearly so organized as they are now."

For the people that marched, there seemed to be as many causes as there are colors in the spectrum — and balloons of different colors were used to separate these groups during the march to the Lincoln Monument.

"This is history repeating itself, just a new generation," he said.

"This is just an outing though. I don't see it as a political thing...Three years from now we'll see what this march did or didn't do. A holiday for MLK (one of the demands of the marchers) is good symbolically, but it is nothing compared to the real issues, like jobs. This march may just be pacifying people."

Other students had different views on the march and its ramifications.

"However, the march unnecessarily focused on President Reagan as a target. You can get a liberal Democrat in office and that won't necessarily change the incredible inequity that exists today. Jobs, peace and freedom won't be achieved just by getting rid of Reagan," Ferris said.

So while some went to relive history, and others went to plan for the future, no one may be able to agree on the successes and the failures of the march, because everyone had different expectations. But most seemed to agree with Michael Branch, an 18-year-old student in the Boston Upward Bound program for disadvantaged students, who came "to be more enlightened, and to simply gain some inspiration from something that happened long ago."

"I hope the youth of today really understand what happened on August 27th, then and now," he continued "and that they continue to strive for ideals as high as his were. America should know that there are great men like King, who can use nonviolence to demonstrate, and help to achieve unification of people of all ethnic backgrounds."

Goal of Asian leader: upping minority grads

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

The main source of traffic on the second floor of the Graduate Research Tower Annex isn't near the elevator or the information desk but in front of Dr. Judy Toyama's office, the kind of place people are always bopping in and out of, trading news, picking up this or that form, stopping to chat, arranging later meetings, or just standing around, waiting to be seen.

Judy Toyama always seems to find the time. She seems to have no other choice. The director of the Minority Graduate Student Recruitment Office is, in short, the person to reach if you're a minority student interested in grad school.

Most minority grad applicants eventually find the path to her office at one or more points during the application process, whether they need help combing through financial aid requirements or juggling work schedules to make time for classes — all in step with the main purpose of the office — to gain acceptance to grad school.

Toyama is realistic. The University of Massachusetts, she points out, had little more than a scarce number of minority students five years ago, when then dean Paul Preier decided there were too few minorities in the UMass grad programs. Toyama, who was then an assistant professor in the sports studies department started working part-time for the office two years later, and turned the job into a full-time position.

The track record is good. Toyama's office, under her own direction and efforts of earlier directors — former Provost Carol Lamb and Ting-Wai Tang, notably — has upped the minority graduate student enrollment figures from less than 1 percent five years ago to the 1983 figure of 8 percent (500 students) of the graduate school population, which is higher than the undergraduate school percentage.

The School of Education has the largest number of minority students, and Toyama is working to diversify the minority contingent to make graduate professors and their department heads more aware of their presence on campus.

"At first, we had a little trouble making some people aware of just how many minorities there are on campus," she said. "It's amazing what you find sometimes," she added, as she recalled receiving the results to a questionnaire given to teachers a few years back to gauge the number of minorities in their classes.

"In response to the question 'How many Native Americans do you have in your class?' one professor wrote me back, '18.' I thought that seemed a little high, so I asked him how he came to have that high a number. He said, 'Oh, I just asked how many of them were born in the United States!'" She rolled her eyes in disbelief. "That's part of the thing we're trying to do here — help out students and make their peers more aware of who they are in the community."

Toyama is quick to point out that the office addresses the needs of not only Asian and black students, but of less numerous groups like Portugese, Cape Verdean, Hispanics, Native Americans, and Middle Eastern students.

"We're trying to get groups that are not normally represented in certain schools to apply to other schools," she said, noting for instance, that many Asians belong to the technological fields, while many blacks and Hisparics belong more to social science programs. "To give you an example, if you don't have Asian-Americans in English Literature, you don't have an American literature that reflects Asian-Americans."

If anything passes within the next year, though, Toyama wants it to be to place less emphasis on standardized admission procedures for the graduate school, applied on a cultural basis. In other words, Toyama believes too many people don't realize standardized tests could be misleading in showing the intelligence or potential of minority students. "Students at the 80th percentile on a standardized test might have higher percentiles within their own cultural group," she said. "This has to be realized, in order to give the minority student a fair chance," she said.

Judy Toyama
director, Minority Graduate Student Recruitment

And minority students, less verbal before, now have expressed an interest in forming a minority grad students association. Toyama wants to see it go through. As for the job?

"When the question becomes one of me becoming bored," she said, smiling, "then I'll leave."

Speaking out on issues

Two leaders view human relations

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
and MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

The elimination of racism and discrimination of minorities at the University of Massachusetts is not complete, say two administrative officials, but UMass can be proud of the work it has done.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson said racial incidents continue on campus.

"I'm not as optimistic or encouraged as certain others on campus. There are biased people in the world - young as well as old. I wish I could be more optimistic as others but — I don't understand — what troubles me is that I see college students repeating the acts of bitterness I saw 20 years ago when I went to school."

But University efforts are for the better.

"Some changes have been positive, but not much. We're doing better. Minority enrollment in this year's freshman class is 311; that's 7.5 percent of the entering class. This summer we had a program where 80 minority students were able to stay here for six weeks, taking classes and going through orientation. There were discussions on careers and career choices. They feel like veterans up here.

"This is good. Hopefully people will get to know each other as human beings," Madson said.

Dean of Students William Field said racism and sexism were particularly important and are priority items because they are so deeply rooted in American history and culture.

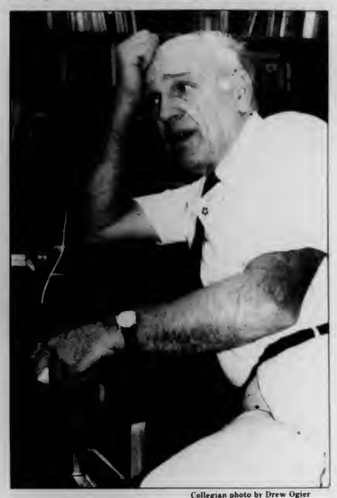
"I don't believe everybody's going to deal with all those things with equal energy, but I think the University has done a creditable job in dealing with racial discrimination.

"It's not done.

"In terms of admitting the admission of students, we do strong affirmative action recruiting. It's a commonly accepted goal. There is no intention to discriminate by class or race here.

"I think the University can almost be proud of what we've done. We've tried. There's been no foot-dragging. We're not perfect, but we've tried.

Field commented on the increase in Asian and Asian-American students.



"It's an exciting thing. It's new, exploding. We've accepted blacks and we've accepted Hispanics. Now we're accepting more Asians," Field said.

"proud of what we've done"

"The University administration — from staff to bottom — accepts the elimination of racial discrimination and the introduction of positive programs to promote civility."

Madson said the work is positive but must be continuous. "You have to keep after these programs. We know we can't change someone's soul — we want to eliminate at least overt behavior, overt racism."

Center provides resources for women

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Emphasizing the need for different women to work together is one of the major goals of the University of Massachusetts Everywoman's center, according to the center's outreach coordinator.

"We are all working together as women and we all have to come together as women," said Aquila Ayana

The Everywoman's center, located in Wilder Hall, provides free, year-round counseling and a variety of programs designed to meet the needs of women in the five college community.

Some of the programs the center offers include a Violence Against Women Program, individual and couples couseling, support groups, a Resource and Referral Program, a Third World Women's Program, a Working Women's Task Force, and the Poor Women's Task Force.

"The center is a multicultural, multiracial center. We are always conscious of having a diversified staff, " she said.

Such a diversified staff enables women "of different class backgrounds, race, religion and cultures to work together," she said.

The staff is composed of 11 professionals and 120 volunteers and interns. The center employs the largest staff of any women's center in the region, Ayana said.

The staff was enbroiled in turmoil last year following the notification of the termination of three women's contracts.

The three women, Mary Wentworth, Malika Jones, and Marianne O'Leary subsequently levied charges against the center. Some of those charges focused on the center's alleged lack of committment to poor women in the area.

"Morale was low at that point. Some of the staff was divided. It was difficult to work around office politics," Ayana said.

Over the summer those problems were put behind the center and now there is a "central focus again," that being towards helping women, she said.

"We may not know all the answers to people's questions, but we know where to find the answers," she said.

The center is open year-round Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday, 9 a.m.- 4 p.m., and Wednesday 12 p.m.- 7 p.m.The center's phone number is 545-0883. The center also has a 24-hour crises hotline, for victims of violence, 545-0800.

New Third World Office director

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

Slipping a check in the mail is what most people do when the old alma mater asks for help. (That's most people, now, not all. Graduates of Harvard, for instance, seem to have a propensity for donating whole buildings.)

Anyway, UMass alumni are different. They get up and come back.

Sherwood Thompson is an alumnus, thank you, class of '74, School of Health Sciences, who is now the new director of the Office of Third World Affairs.

He has only been in town two weeks. He has yet, in fact, to formally meet with members of the Administration or even his predecessor.

Thompson has been observing as much as he can about Third World student activities, and has been drafting plans for OTWA.

"I want to incorporate the objectives of this office with those of the entire campus so we can benefit from what Third World students have to offer to the school. I want them to use every outlet they possibly can here, and not forget about the importance of their heritage in that endeavor."

Thompson's specific ambitions are due in part to his experiences at UMass. A co-founder of Nummo News, a Third World newspaper (subsidized by the Student Government Association and student fees), Thompson was also a Collegian reporter and the second Black Affairs editor. An activist in political groups, he was also the host of a public affairs show on WMUA.

Part of his returning to UMass is his desire to transfer what he has learned on campus in the diverse UMass atmosphere, "to continue in manner reflective of my sensitivity and experience in Third World extracurricular activities."

But, if pressed, Thompson would rather keep that part to himself, insisting, "I don't want to be judged on my resume, I want to be judged on whatever level of professionalism and effort I bring to this job."

"To make Third World students more aware of their leadership potential, to make them aware of their own heritage, and assure them that they can have an effect on the workings of this university is my goal."

Grad student activist seeks to 'wage peace'

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

During the late 1960s and early 70s, when anti-war demonstrations were the norm on many college and high school campuses, Felice Yeskel, then a high school student, was usually in the middle of things in the middle of New York City, marching for peace and freedom and civil rights.

More than a decade later, campuses are empty of protesters; demonstrations against 80s issues like selective service registration or financial aid cuts seem to pale against the efforts of a more vehement generation. Thirty-year-olds who weathered sit-ins and tear gas attacks say students seem to prefer listening to Michael Jackson to reading about nuclear missile deployment.

Some demonstrators put the past behind them and became stockbrokers. Some, like Felice Yeskel, continue lobbying for peace.

Yeskel strives for world peace as well as peace within society. She is as philosophical as she is allowed to get in the face of reality, but never worries that her battles are not valid. To Yeskel, fighting and straining, for the education of society on such issues as feminism or violence against women or homosexuality is as such of a paradox, she reasons, as trying to make people think.

"men went out to wage war, now women go out to wage peace"

A member of such organizations as Women's Pentagon Action, a feminist anti-military group; a supervisor in the lesbian and gay counseling collective; and a member of an Office of Human Relations task force on heterosexism, Yeskel is considered a leader in the women's community. She has been seen as a catalyst for change and success of not only women's concerns but other civil libertarian factions.

She is most widely known for her participation in peace demonstrations, most notably and recently the Women's Peace Encampment at Seneca, N.Y., where hundreds of women gathered to protest the storage of Pershing and Cruise missiles, scheduled to be deployed later this year.

Yeskel cancelled a trip to Europe to attend.

"That experience was very important to me personally," she said. "We as a group drew a lot of attention toward the weapons, and that was very good for the group of us but it especially drew a healthy response from me as that (deployment) is what I'm fighting for and will continue to fight for."

Opponents of Yeskel and her peer often view her feminist efforts as too dramatic, too vehement, even narrow-minded.

This does not bother her.

"That's the whole idea of a demonstration," she explains. "The demonstration, the theatre aspect, the whole ritual is important as the demonstration itself. Women have the power to fight for what we believe in and make changes. We have done so in the past, and we'll continue to do so."

"I've always been concerned about justice and freedom," the 30-year-old graduate student and directorial assistant of Dwight House said, noting that her interest in feminist issues sparked as an undergrad at the University of Rochester, where a women's discussion group talked about their lives and roles as women. "It (the feminist movement) finally made sense to me about society and the roles of women," she said.

She picked up a copy of a letter she had submitted to a feminist publication. "It was like living in a war zone," she began, describing the atmosphere of the peace encampment, "... it was like being part of a global feminist network..."

Yeskel took a minute to summarize the significance of the peace encampment.

"When Dr. Helen Caldicott had a patient who was doing badly, and when she told the relatives the condition of the patient and they didn't show emotions, she would send them to a psychiatrist. She says people who aren't stopping business as usual, who are numb, are blocking what's happening. It's the same thing with the peace encampment. People are still there. Every day women are still fighting against having those missiles there. To go on with 'business as usual' is, is—unfortunate."

Yeskel is earnest in her intentions. She is blunt, sometimes controversial, always willing to speak.

"For their own sakes," she says, "it is very important that women become empowered, to themselves, of themselves, for the betterment of the society."

Duo works for "people" issues

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
Collegian Staff

For Judith Davis and Grant Ingle it all comes down to helping people to help themselves.

Davis, coordination of the Office of Human Relations, and Ingle, process consultant, are, in Ingle's words, "trouble shooters for people problems." Ingle said, "The 'mission' of this office is to increase the ability of the University to anticipate and address human relations issues effectively."

Both Davis and Ingle said explaining the office's role on campus can get bogged down with professional jargon and peoples' misconceptions of the office, but they said they act more of a consulting team with individuals, small groups, offices and departments to "find ways of improving the system they are part of," Davis said.

"We provide a neutral territory to which various parties and sometimes opposing parties can talk about their problems and work toward a solution," she said.

They organize meetings, help produce reports and give their clients access to decision makers. In a way, they continue the work begun 10 years ago as the Resource Network. Davis began with the network and Ingle joined the office in 1976. The network was technically disbanded then reformed last year as the Office of Human Relations during the Year Toward Civility. The two stayed with the office in the same capacities doing the same kind of referral, coordinating and consulting work. The only change was switching supervision from the vice chancellor for student affairs office to the chancellor's office, and the addition of a full-time secretary.

The two have been responsible for compiling a victim assistance directory (see p. 8), developing a Jewish Awareness/Anti-Semitism Task Force, convening meetings of agencies which respond to racial crisis and training administrators and faculty on sexual harassment.

The office was also the force behind several public forums last year dealing with human relations issues and special projects including creation of a Campus Center Human Relations Committee which "put human relations issues on the agenda" of Campus Center leaders and workers.

"Just by reconnecting people, a number of long standing problems can be over quickly," Ingle said.

Davis said, "As long as services are localized and separated, they are not as effective as if they were integrated.

"Essentially we're networking people. We're a free-floating team that can reach across campus picking out people needed to address problems of human relations," Davis said.

Grant Ingle and Judy Davis of the Office of Human Relations are consultants in "trouble shooting" for human relations issues.

Davis and Ingle said the name of the office leads to misconceptions about them.

"It's almost a minsomer. People think we're a big office with a big staff. They think we handle specific incidents directly," Davis said.

"We look at a department or agency and say, 'What do you need here to solve this problem;' we set up the problem-solving process," Ingle said.

Davis added "which the client can use again to solve other problems."

Ingle said their office has a major responsibility to "model ways of addressing problems before they become crises. Much of what we do is prevention. You see a problem down the road and ask 'How can the University get ready for this? We see a minor incident and ask do we go in now or do we wait for major incidents to arise on campus?"

Davis said the future does not hold any specific human relations issues but the office is gearing up for several personal goals.

The two hope to "change an 'unrealistic notion' that 'a campus should be free of human relations conflict' to one that 'a campus address human relations conflicts creatively and competently'," Davis said.

The two also hope to work on "-ism equity," the demand for equal/comparable resources to address each of the "isms", so that by addressing one others can be addressed similarly.

Davis and Ingle also see a need to shift the institution's emphasis on students as the source of human relations problems to one that includes staff, faculty, and administrators.

Upon the talents of the person, and the quality of the materials, depends the beauty and the character of the finished piece.

UMass Jewish community Thriving, Living, Rebuilding

BY MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

The UMass office of B'nai B'rith Hillel is too small for its contents. Aside from boxesand brochures and religious announcements to be sent out, books, magazines, and newspapers are stacked all over the place. The bulletin board is full; posters proclaiming "There Is A Place For You In Israel," and "Peace Is The Zionist Way" dot the walls. Rabbi Saul Perlmutter keeps having to interrupt the interview to answer the phone. It is two weeks before the beginning of school.

He looks a little tired, and happy. It's been a long year for him and other members of the Jewish community here and the new semester offers hopes of an end to the trouble Jews on campus have had in the past.

What follows is not an article on anti-Semitism.

It is an article on a community thriving within itself on the UMass campus and wanting to thrive with the whole UMass community — Jewish and non-Jewish.

Perlmutter has been acting rabbi at Hillel for almost ten years. He's 33, looks 23, and says he'll probably stick around for a while. He likes the challenge of enlarging the roster of Jewish community activities and encouraging Jews of any sect within the religion — orthodox, conservative, reformed — to participate in Hillel activities. And he is well liked. ("Aw, he used to be a lot less laid-back," winked visitor Robert Goldman during the interview, "but he's a cool guy now.")

Hillel is a Registered Student Organization (RSO) which does not pay any dues to anything but itself. It has a student council which is elected by UMass students which makes policy and does academic planning for Jewish students. Perlmutter is an advisor. While some Hillel chapters may have more of an alliance with the B'nai B'rith foundation in Washington, UMass chooses not to. Perlmutter's salary is paid by the national foundation, and he is chosen by students and faculty.

Perlmutter has seen the Jewish community grow and change during the past ten years.

"When I came here," he recalls, ticking off examples on his fingers as he spoke, "there was no kosher meal line, no Jewish grad group, no organized Jewish faculty group on campus, not much of a communal feeling, even."

Now, Perlmutter nods, "there's a stress on just having fun together." Another major change, he says, is the students' concern for doing things for other people. "We've visited nursing homes, raised money for the United Jewish Appeal..." Perlmutter goes on to list basically the whole September calendar of Hillel, including religious services as well as films, plays, lectures, even intramural sports.

"We have at least 200 people a week participating in Hillel activities," Perlmutter said.

Besides a Hillel chapter, many campuses have a Chabad House, which has no formal or contractual allegiance to Hillel, and provides an atmosphere serving the needs of Jews who prefer a more orthodox manner of worship (though Jews of all sects and non-Jewish students are welcome). It can be considered the more mellow, if you will, of the two.

The UMass chapter is located in a brick Tudor on North Hadley Street near Southwest. It is an old house, secluded, with 12 rooms. It houses up to four students a semester (no housing discrimination here, Jews and Gentiles are welcome); it has a room where services are held, presided over often by Rabbi Deren. "Chabad" is a Hebrew acronym for Wisdom, Understanding, and Knowledge.

The physical seclusion of Chabad House doesn't carry over into the attitudes of its members, who are just as concerned with and involved in their community; as longtime resident Dan Seigel says: "We're encouraging Jews to identify with their historical roots. Hillel is more broad in that it doesn't push so much for a religious identity. At Chabad, we're pushing more of an orthodox philosophy."

"People have to teach each other that the myths about homosexuals — that we lead lonely lives, that our only motivation is sexual, that we're mentally sick, or that we're a lower level of psychological development according to the interpretation of Freudian theory — are just untrue."

Gay and proud but not 'out'

Editor's note: Because of the possible repercussions of this article several of the quoted sources requested anonymity and it was granted.

By TRICIA A. YACOVONE
Collegian Staff

Steven Pineo says he does not like to frequent "straight" (non-homosexual) bars because if he dances with someone he wants to dance with, he risks receiving stares, mutters or even being thrown out.

Ken Paulsen felt the same way at his summer job. "At work, I had to keep in the closet. I couldn't join in the heterosexual conversations but I wanted to say something, so I changed the names and the places to avoid trouble," he said.

Although the Kinsey Report states that one in every ten Americans is homosexual, homosexuality has been historically closeted or evaded by the social majority of this nation. In fact, declaration of homosexuality is called "coming out of the closet," or in the gay community, simply "coming out."

"I've been conditioned into thinking that being gay is something to be ashamed of. It makes me feel uncomfortable because I'm unprepared to accept that role," said Brett Becknell, a straight male, given the hypothetical situation of being incorrectly labelled homosexual.

Sheila Newman, after experiencing being mislabelled a lesbian, said she felt offended and angry at the time.

"I felt offended because the term was used in a bad way. I felt angry not because that being a lesbian is bad, but because people weren't accepting relationships I had with my women friends. It made me feel that I shouldn't be as close to my women friends as I want to be," she said.

Affects both communities

Homophobia is a problem which affects both the heterosexual and homosexual communities, and each community has its own way of dealing with the problem.

To answer some of the homophobic harassment, homosexuals interviewed said they'd ignore the attack or confront the issue.

Paulsen said, "I could either ignore it or say something derogatory back, which serves absolutely no purpose."

Pineo said, "I deal with it the best I can....it depends on how confronted I am."

Both agreed that prejudice was due to a lack of knowledge about the homosexual lifestyle.

"At work, I had to keep in the closet. I couldn't join in the heterosexual conversations but wanted to say something, so I changed the names and the places to avoid trouble."

Educating the plurality

"It's a prejudice that people have to overcome and this can only be achieved through education...but then there are some people who will never get educated," Paulsen said.

The most important obstacle to dispel is misinformation and generalization about gays and lesbians, they agreed.

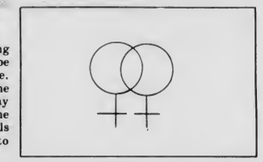
"Homosexuals are just as diverse as straight people. Not everyone is a stereotypical gay or lesbian," Pineo said.

"People have to teach other people that the myths about homosexuals — that we lead lonely lives, that our only motivation is sexual, that we're mentally sick, or that we're a lower level of psychological development according to the interpretation of Freudian theory — are just untrue," Paulsen said.

Pat Carter said this labelling "only isolates people. Everybody's different, so generalizing just tends to get in the way of helping people get along."

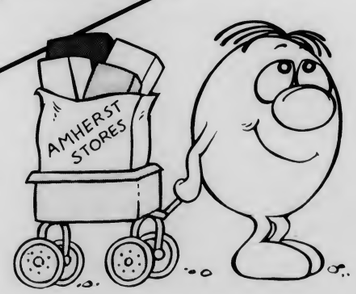
Homophobia is a problem which affects both the heterosexual and homosexual communities, and each community has its own way of dealing with the problem.

Dealing with one's homosexuality



"Coming out of the closet" and making the necessary adjustments can often be difficult, many homosexuals agree. Counselling avenues open through the Everywomen's Center at the Lesbian/Gay Men Counselling Collective at the University of Massachusetts, offer referrals to other groups and additional services to their counselling.

"Almost every (lesbian) case that comes in is concerning homophobia on one level or another," said Suzanne Slater of the EWC. Among these problems are a loss of friends or important people in the life of a lesbian who has recently come out, a lesbian mother's concern on how to protect her children from prejudice, fear of loss of custody of her child, the fear of losing a job or job advancement and problems couples have dealing with the pressure of having to be secret, and dealing with the absence of social structures which make the lesbian couple feel they have a withdrawal of support from society, she said.



John Grae of the Lesbian/Gay Men Counselling Collective, believes homosexuals coming out need to talk to someone at either of the organizations.

"People wonder if they're the only ones like this. You don't find out unless you talk to someone. This is where labelling comes in. This can put a restriction, but it also makes you feel like you belong," he said.

Grae said his organization provides help for "people not knowing their own sexual orientation because they were brought up in a straight world which says it is wrong."

No one said it was going to be easy.

No one said developing an "awareness" for others' sensitivities while attending the University of Massachusetts was going to be easy. Hell, it's hard to escape bigotry when you've grown up with it and have been socialized in a racist, anti-Semitic, homophobic, sexist society. It's hard to accept people for who they are and not what they are. It's especially hard when you have to leave UMass and return home where others have not been exposed to the different cultures that make up our campus.

But we make the best of it. We say 'woman' when we talk about females over 18. We avoid derogatory slang depicting one's race, sexual preference or religious affiliation. We unite on the March on Washington. We're together in our movements of peace. We are united against bigotry in whatever form it takes.

At least we'd like to be. These would be ideal situations.

The education has to start now, while we're still living here...together.

UMass football is ready

Simeones, Jenkins head up offense, defense is solid

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts football team minus the dynamic two-time All American Garry Pearson and r'll the injuries that decimated the team last year opened up their 1983 season Saturday night against the University of Toledo, healthy and looking for their sixth Yankee Conference title in the last seven years.

Since 1977, UMass has won or shared five of the last six Yankee Conference championships. And head coach Bob Pickett and company would love to add another this year.

The 1983 edition of Minuteman football looks to be an exciting one. One in which Massachusetts has experienced players at key positions.

Sophomore Jim Simeone, already a veteran, will start at quarterback. Among the fleet targets he has to throw at are his junior brother Bob Simeone and senior tri-captain Gary Freker.

The backfield is solid with senior Rich Jenkins finally emerging in his own right along with Duckworth Grange and Jim Rice.

The defensive secondary is tops with tri-captain Grady Fuller, Glenn Holden and Chris Wood and Jim Shay.

"Our players came back in excellent condition," said Pickett. "The guys really lifted over the summer and are very strong.

"We had some concerns with the offensive backfield, offensive line and some spots on defense." But the coaching staff feels that they have plugged up the holes.

UMass was concerned with the running back situation because Demo Drougas is out for the year and Minutemen had to do a bit of shuffling to fill in.

Jenkins and Rice were moved to fullback while Duckworth Grange and Frank Fay were promoted to tailback.

"The team was tremendously disappointed in Demo not playing," said Pickett, "but we stabilized the situation by moving Rich Jenkins from tailback to fullback."

None of these backs, though, are a Garry Pearson. And none are expected to be.

"We haven't dwelled on it (Pearson loss)," explained Pickett, "We have just gone ahead. It's 1983. We have to establish our own identity.

"We'll be a more balanced football team. We were dependent on him before. Now we'll be dependent on a lot of other people and it will make our team better."

At quarterback, UMass has the luxury of three quality players. Barrett McGrath and Simeone have both started games last year and Mark Tabor has varsity experience.

Simeone, who became a starter in the eighth week last year, is solid. Seniors Tabor and McGrath are the backups.

The offensive line is young with two sophomores and three juniors. Center Ken Runge and guard Tom McEvilly are returning starters. Transfer Vince Reppert from Syracuse, Don Day and Peter Borsari make up the rest of the line.

The defensive line, shattered by injuries last year returns Todd Comeau, a second team Yankee Conference pick in 1982, Dave Cavanaugh, and Craig Lesinski, last year's leading tackler.

Peter Tracy, a transfer from Navy, Ken Johnson, who missed all of last year with an injury, and Scott Rose, injured early last year will make up the rest of the front line. Mike Favreau will be opposite Lesinski at linebacker.

The secondary is one of the most experienced parts of the team. All the starters from a year ago are back. Glenn Holden, All-Yankee Conference, returns with Chris Wood at cornerback. Seniors Grady Fuller and John Shay return at safety.

Fuller led the team in interceptions a year ago and was a second team Yankee Conference pick.

"Defensively, that is where we will show the greatest improvement," said Pickett. "I feel that you have to have a good defensive football team to be a good football club.

"We're cautiously optimistic. The players have great hopes. It's whose willing to make the sacrifices that'll make the difference," said Pickett.

The first goal in mind for the Minutemen is to win a berth in the NCAA Div. I-AA playoffs, by winning the Yankee conference title and the automatic berth that goes along with it.

"In order to do anything, we have to win the Yankee Conference championship to have the opportunity to do something else," said Pickett.

The fate of UMass football will be in the able hands of sophomore Jim Simeone this season.

UMass, along with Boston University, are rated as co-favorites in the coaches pre-season poll.

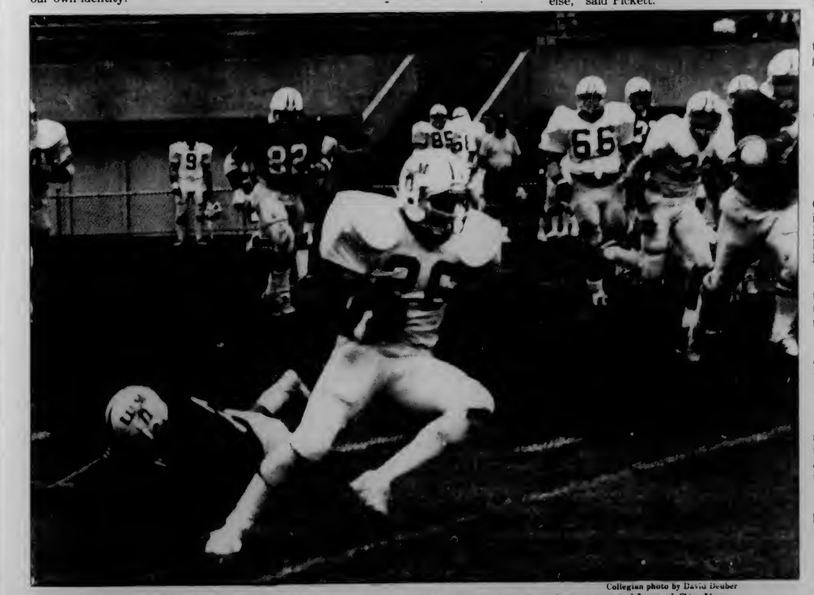
"I don't put a lot of stock in it (poll)," said Pickett. "We're going to work as hard as we can and let the chips fall as they may."

UMass will have to work hard in '83 due to the fact that they have only four home games and seven on the road this season.

"Most teams play better at home," Pickett admitted, "But we have played well on the road and I expect this to continue. We are not really travelling far.

"We do have a tough beginning with Toledo, Holy Cross and Harvard."

Holy Cross is at home followed by the Crimson on the road. Rhode Island comes into Amherst for Homecoming, followed by Delaware, who were runnersup in Div. I-AA last year and two home games with Maine and BU.



Then it's on the road again to finish out the season with four road games in Connecticut, Lehigh, New Hampshire and at Northeastern.

The Minutemen opened at the University of Toledo last Saturday. The results weren't available at press time. Complete results will be in tomorrow's Collegian.

Toledo is the only 1-A school on the schedule. The Rockets went 6-5 last year in the Mid-America Conference. Quarterback Jim Kelso and Capus Robinson, his favorite target give Toledo quick strike capability.

UMass has played Toledo only once before and defeated them 28-14 at home in 1976.

Holy Cross comes to visit on Saturday and whether the Minutemen are 1-0 or 0-1 you can be sure the young Massachusetts football team will be ready to play.

UM athletes named All-NE, All-American

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The sport actions didn't stop at UMass with the coming of summer. Several athletes were honored and some coaching changes were made. Here is a summary of the summer activity.

MEN'S LACROSSE — UMass placed two players on the North squad, coached by UM mentor Dick Garber, as part of the annual North-South game. Midfielder's Tim Cutler and Paul Fogarty were honored. In the All-American selections, Cutler and defenseman Barry Cain, the team MVP, received Honorable Mention awards. UM finished 5-10 last spring.

BASEBALL — Chris Waszczuk was selected to the All-New England squad. Waszczuk, who led the team in hitting (.344) and five other categories, was also named as the MVP for the 1983 squad.

Andy Connors and Tony Presnal were elected co-captains for the 1984 season. Connors plays third base and Presnal is a left-handed pitcher.

SOFTBALL — Jackie Gaw was named first team All-American for the second consecutive year as catcher. Gaw was the team's leading hitter (.461) last year. Shortstop Allyson Rioux was named second team All-American. Rioux and Gaw were both members of ASA National Champion Raybestos at the National Sports Festival and Rioux was a member of the silver medal United States softball team at the recent Pan-Am games.

Four Minutewomen were named All-New England. Gaw, Rioux, pitcher Lynn Stockley and second baseman Missy Oman were honored.

MEN'S BASKETBALL — Edwin Green, who was elected MVP of the 1982-83 team, and Donald Russell were members of the Atlantic 10 All-Star team which competed in Spain last spring. Russell and Green were also elected co-captains 1983-84.

Al Wolejko, 33, the head basketball coach at Smith Academy in Hatfield, was appointed an assistant men's basketball coach. Wolejko joins Mark Shea as assistant coach.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL — Barbara Stevens, head women's basketball coach at Clark University in Worcester, is the new UMass women's coach.

Stevens has led her team to the NCAA Division III Final Four for the past two seasons. Clark had a 123-42 record over the past six years.

No excuse to miss a home game

HOME FIELDS: So you can never use the excuse, "I didn't know where they were playing?" here is where the fall sports teams will hold their home games: football — Alumni Stadium, men's and women's soccer — Boyden Field, field hockey — NOPE, women's tennis — NOPE, men's tennis — Boyden, volleyball — NOPE (except for tournaments and those are held in Boyden), men's and women's cross-country — NOPE, men's and women's golf — Hickory Ridge golf course.

"The crowd (at home) helped us last year. We had a 4-1-2 record at home," said Gettler. "I have tried to establish a tradition that we don't lose at home."

UMass soccer is looking to win

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

It's not important to head coach Jeff Gettler what other people predict that his University of Massachusetts men's soccer team will do this fall. He wants them to do just one thing. Win.

For the past few years, the Minutemen have done more losing than winning. But with the arrival of Gettler last year, the team became more competitive. They didn't have the greatest record last year, 7-8-2, but they weren't blown out either.

And so this year, people are expecting more from the 1983 edition of the Minutemen. With ten seniors and the addition of some freshmen and transfers, UMass is definitely an improved team. But Gettler just wants them to win.

"We're shooting for the best season ever at UMass. We want more than 10 wins," said Gettler. This year UMass has the potential to do just that.

"We're a lot better this year. We have improved all over," said Gettler.

The leader of the pack will be two time captain Kevin Flynn, a midfielder. Flynn, a senior, is looked upon for leadership and Gettler hopes to see him score some.

More scoring will be expected from senior frontliners Fritz Pike and Kayvan Khatami. Pike is a center forward and Khatami, who was the second leading scorer last year for UMass, plays out on the wing.

The defense will be anchored by senior Frank Neffinger, the team's best defensive player according to Gettler. Neffinger and Simon Ostrov, who spent three years at URI, are transfers.

Freshman and first year players are expected to contribute a lot, notably back Peter Geeded and scorers Paul Serafino and Luigi Romeo. Tom Uschok will be at midfield after starting every game last year as a freshman. Sophomore Mike Belino will also be in the midfield picture. He missed his freshman year with a broken collarbone.

The goalie situation is up in the air at press time. Gettler has nine goalies in camp and none have a clear advantage at this time.

So on paper, the problems that beset UMass last year — a lack of depth, weak goal tending and forward line — seem to have solved.

"We're better," said Gettler, "but we still have to do it on the field." The Minutemen take to the field tomorrow night for their opener at Boston University. After visits at Southern Connecticut (2nd in Div. II last year), UNH, and the Cornell tournament, UMass plays nine of their next ten games at home.

"The crowd (at home) helped us last year. We had a 4-1-2 record at home," said Gettler. "I have tried to establish a tradition that we don't lose at home, and make it tough for the other teams that come to Amherst."

Among the teams that will come to Boyden Field, Yale, Rutgers, URI, Hartwick and Boston College, who played in the NCAA tourney last year, will be the toughest.

The Massachusetts men's soccer team, ranked ninth in the 1983 New England pre-season poll, have a simple job. Win

Minutewomen to use sister power

"I think we're going to be competitive but we're not going to be great," Banda said. "There are better teams and we have a tougher schedule. Everyone has improved more than us, although we're still good."

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

As coach Kalekeni Banda helps the young University of Massachusetts women's soccer team get ready for opening day September 17, he is putting his faith in two sisters to guide the team to victory during the season.

The team lost four senior captains to graduation last year and with them went their leadership and All-American play. With the opponents improving and becoming stronger for the season, UMass needed to fill some big shoes and Banda feels that sisters Christine and Ellen Taggart are the ones that can lead the team.

No one pushes the capable senior Stacey Flionis, a speedy midfielder, off the ball.

"I think we're going to be competitive but we're not going to be great," Banda said. "There are better teams and we have a tougher schedule. Everyone has improved more than us, although we're still good.

"The surprise of the camp has been Ellen Taggart," Banda said. "She looks good and if she keeps up with intensity, she'll make the difference in the team."

Ellen, a sophomore, contributed two goals last season and saw action in the quarterfinal loss to Central Florida due to the absence of leading goal scorer Debbie Harackiewicz, who was out with an injury. This year she will play a more important part in the team.

Last season with the help of All-New England and All-American captains Jackie Gaw and Nina Holmstrom, and fellow captains Natalie Prosser and Debbie Pickett, the team reached the quarterfinals of the NCAA Championship at Central Florida. It was a group Banda called "unique". Although Holmstrom and Prosser will be assistant coaches to Banda this season, an onfield leader is needed.

"If she (Ellen) can pick up the pieces from Nina and Jackie and come in and do the job, that would be great."

Last season junior Christine Taggart had six goals, seven assists and 13 points for the most assists and points on the team.

"Christine Taggart is probably the leader," Banda noted.

"I think those two sisters are added incentive. If they don't play then we're in trouble."

Banda will be counting on Lori Stukes and Mary Szetela in the defensive picture. For the second consecutive year, Stukes was selected to the All-New England team.

"Mary Szetela is tough. Her leadership on and off the field will be very much needed. Lori looks exceptionally good. She's ready to break out as one of the best players in the nation."

The goaltending situation is the only unsettled part of the team. Tammie Easton who started the majority of games last year is not returning. Guard duties will be up to sophomore Laurie Webber and three contending freshmen.

Senior Stacey Flionis, one of two seniors on the team, and Deana Denault will anchor the midfield for the Minutewomen.

"Stacey is an exceptional player. She's got all of the skill and right now she's the fastest girl on the team with the ball. Her speed makes her the number one player in the mid-field."

After a few weeks of hard pre-season practice, the Minutewomen will take the field playing defensive ball on Saturday in their opener when they host Plymouth State at Boyden

UMass All-American defender Carol Progulske moves to catch the ball in a women's lacrosse game last spring. Despite Progulske's fine defensive efforts, UMass finished 4th in the nation.

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

"It just happened to be one of those days you hope you never play," Pam Hixon, coach of the UMass women's lacrosse team, said of the NCAA Division I semi-final game against Temple, last May.

The 10-4 loss eliminated the defending champions from a shot at their second consecutive title. It was the team's worst defeat all season. The loss was only the second one of the season, however it was the most important game.

"We just happened to be flat and Temple played very well," Hixon said. "We were not as together as we could have been as a whole team."

The following day in a consolation game with Penn State, the Gazelles were determined to go out in style. Despite Penn State winning 7-6 in overtime, last year's national champs went out the way they wanted to.

"We came back with the fortitude and toughness we've had in the past," Hixon said. "We left the nationals letting people know we're quality. With a couple of breaks we could've won. It was one of our best games all season," she said.

UMass had tied Temple during regular season play, 4-4 here in Amherst.

UMass went on top in the semi-final 1-0 on a Tish Stevens goal (Pam Moryl assist) but Temple roared back with five unanswered goals before Linda Haytayan scored with thirty seconds left in the first half to make it 5-2, Penn State.

UMass closed to within two, 6-4, on goals by Stevens and Haytayan, but with 4:43 to go in the game, the Owls broke loose with three goals in 2½ minutes and went on to win.

In the consolation game with Penn State, UMass scored four unanswered goals after a Nittany Lions score. Haytayan and Moryl had two each and UMass led 5-2 at the half.

Penn State closed to within one after scoring on two of four penalty shots in the second half. With 1:58 to go, Penn State got the equalizer and sent the game into overtime.

Penn State scored first in the six minute overtime but 13 seconds later Haytayan made the score 6-6. Laurie Gray gave Penn State the winning goal 11 seconds later and the 7-6 win.

After the tournament, three UMass players were selected to the all-tournament team. Rita Hubner, Carol Progulske and Moryl got the honors as well as being selected as All-Americans.

Moryl was the team's leading goal scorer with 40 goals, 11 assists for 51 points. Hubner, who graduated in May, held her ground in front of the UMass net and Progulske was the Gazelle's top defender.

"What made that team successful was their ability to play as a unit," Hixon said. "They played with intelligence and as a unit instead of playing player for player. And that's what made it rewarding for us to go as far as we did. It was a challenge and the team really picked up the challenge," she said.

Veteran field hockey team returns

Experienced offense and defense to bolster UMass

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

"If the first weeks are any indication, yes, we'll have a very strong team," said Hixon.

E.S.P. is something the 1983 edition of the University of Massachusetts field hockey team has plenty of.

No, the Minutewomen will no' be reading their opponents minds with extra-sensory perception. However, they will overpower the opposition with Experience, Strength and Power.

The experience will come in the hands of eight seniors and a handful of juniors. Two vacancies, at the most, will be filled by incoming freshmen.

"Just look at the personnel who are returning," coach Pam Hixon said. "They've come back in the best possible shape they could. It's the last year for a lot of them and they want to go out with a bang."

The defense seems to be in good hands. Seniors Carol Progulske, Nancy Goode, Chris Coughlin and junior Andrea Muccini will anchor the backfield during the season.

"The defense is relatively intact from last year," Hixon said. "Those four players will see the most action in terms of defense. There's new people behind them but right now they (veterans) probably have the most experience and will do the best job."

The goaltending duties are well in hand with senior Patty Shea returning. Shea kept the Minutewomen's opponents scoreless for 14 out of 20 games dating back to 1981. She should have no problems handling the net duties this season but if she does, Hixon is well prepared for it.

"In goal, this year I have the luxury of having a number of goalies to choose from. Unless Patty doesn't have a good pre-season and the other goalies have a good pre-season, Patty will see the most action.

Pam Moyrl and a Northwestern opponent spar off in a game last year. UMass hosts NW in their season opener tomorrow at 4 p.m. at NOPE.

"There's three other people vying for her job. That's nice because it keeps everyone on their toes."

The team will also have Chris Kocot back after missing last season with a broken ankle. Transfer Maura Coughlin, who was ineligible to play last season, will also add to the lineup of experience the Minutewomen have this season.

Strength is also something this team is not lacking in. Although last year was considered a rebuilding season by Hixon, the team recorded a 15-4-1 slate while reaching the first round of the NCAA Championship only to bow to Iowa 1-0 in double overtime.

This year the team is strong and healthy all around from playing all summer. Shea, Progulske, senior Patty Smith, junior Pam Moryl and sophomore Megan Donnelly saw most of the action playing at the U.S. Field Hockey team tryouts this summer.

"We accomplished our goal last season," Hixon said."I think this year we have one of the stronger teams at UMass. We had people from j.v. move up and that's given us depth.

"If the first weeks are any indication, yes, we'll have a very strong team."

And the Minutewomen will be a very powerful team.

"We lost a lot of scoring power last year. We have a lot more scoring power this year just from what I've seen. We have the people who have the potential to score."

One of those is Donnelly, who was voted first team All-American last year. Senior Sue Packard has improved and is playing her best hockey since coming to UMass, according to Hixon. Diane Kobel and Martha Lozeau are playing well and will be seeing more action around the net this year.

"They've improved a lot," Hixon commented on the Minutewomen as a team. "We are definitely a threat to score which is something we lacked."

The Minutewomen open up a challenging slate tomorrow against Northwestern at 4:00 at the NOPE Fields. North Carolina, Temple, Old Dominion and Connecticut are just a few of the powerhouses UMass faces this year.

Field hockey training camp long and hard

"Someone asked me what I do besides field hockey. I said, 'Eat and sleep.' It was true. It was a simple life, and one with great definition. Get through. Do well. Every day. And there was nothing else besides that struggle."

Mary Cazzetta moves in on goalie Sue Bell in pre-season workouts.

It is hot, even in the morning. I'm up at 8 a.m. for a 9 a.m. practice. I get on my bike and ride to the NOPE field. I don't think my body is ready for another day, but before I allow myself to think of it, I am stretching and warming up with the team again. I am ready. I've got to be ready. And this is only the first of three sessions, so i don't think ahead either. It is one at a time.

During the first week of pre-season practice (from August 24th to the 28th), the University of Massachusetts women's field hockey team went three sessions a day. After the warm-up of stretching, running and footwork, we did conditioning drills. We rotated in small groups to three stations from 9 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. for drills that worked on shooting, defense and stickwork.

At 12:00 we went swimming to rejuvenate our tired and sore muscles. At 2 p.m. we met again for another two hour session with the whole team together for passing and defensive drills. At 6 p.m. we'd be back for a session of scrimmaging. The scrimmage was the culmination of the day's work, emphasizing the plays we had worked on earlier. Finally, we'd weight train or run, on alternate days.

That week someone asked me what I do besides field hockey. I said, "Eat and sleep." It was true. But it was also the most wonderful feeling at the end of every day, to know that I had made it. It was a simple life, and one with great definition. Get through. Do well. Every day. And there was nothing else besides that struggle

It was amazing how water had become so very important. When the coach said "Get water" it was enough to draw us to jog over with what energy we had. I remember realizing that no matter what anyone could offer me then, all I wanted was water.

During the next two weeks (from August 31st to September 9th), we had double sessions. The workouts never got less intense, but despite the fatigue everyone felt, we kept pushing.

On September 4th, we went to Springfield College to scrimmage against their team. We played hard, as always. It was an unofficial scrimmage and we didn't play regulation time, but it was a chance to use everything we had gotten from the past two weeks of endless training.

Playing field hockey at UMass is a commitment. It is a lifestyle. We may rest for a while, but we know that we will be back on the field for practice the next day, and that the best is expected of us. That is the kind of program we have.

Playing on the team is also a matter of pure choice, which makes one wonder why we subject ourselves to such hard work. The answer is easy to see. For me, it is easy to feel. It is the relentless effort that everyone out there puts forth. It is the shouts of encouragement from teammates that echo inside you when you feel tired, and make you go on. It is a drink of water that spurs you on. It is the simple acknowledgement that all you are working for belongs to you and the people around you. It is that you are there because you want to be. It is that everyone is together. That the women at UMass want to be the best. And that they will be.

Editor's Note: Michele Dolan is a sophomore field hockey player at UMass trying out for a varsity position.

No seniors on squad that hosts UMass Invitational this weekend

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Seniors are usually the backbone of every college team. They are your leaders, the experienced ones. More often than not, a team with no seniors is in a rebuilding stage. How much can you expect from them?

Coach Elaine Sortino's University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team lost three starters from last year and this year they have three juniors, three sophomores, four freshmen and no seniors on their 1983 roster.

But the six upperclassmen all have game playing experience — there are three starters back — and all four freshmen have participated in junior Olympic competition. This team will be no slouch.

"We're doing things now in practice," said Sortino, "that we just started doing at the end of last season. The kids we brought in have all played volleyball in good, established programs." And the upperclassmen all have vital college experience.

Thus, Sortino and assistant coach Sara Bonthuis hope their team can attain some high goals. Sortino hopes that the team will finish with a .700 winning percentage or better, make the finals of the MAIAW state championships and qualify for ECAC play in November.

Juniors Patti Grant, Joanne Siler and Kirsten Smith head up the veteran part of the squad. Grant, a setter, has been more consistent than ever and K. Smith is improved.

Siler, who was the team MVP in 1981, sat out last year with an arm injury. The way she's playing in training camp "if you didn't know she hurt it, you could never tell. It's a miracle," said Sortino.

Sally Maher, Ann Ringrose and Leslie Smith return for their second year of play. Significant contributions from Ringrose and L. Smith, slowed by an injury early in camp, are expected.

Maher, a starter last year, is hitting the ball very hard and looks really good.

The freshmen can definitely hold their own. Ellen Deady and Micki Barys were All-Globe last fall and both played in the junior Olympic Susie Grant, Patti's sister, and Debbie Cole were All-State in Connecticut and both played in the junior Olympics, too.

"Their skill level and experience show in their play. We've never had that before," said Sortino. It's exceptional for freshmen.

The Minutewomen open their slate Wednesday night at American International College (AIC) of Springfield. UMass will host two tournaments including this weekend's UMass invitational and travel to five others including tough Division I tourneys in Delaware and Hofstra.

"We have a very tough schedule for a Division I team," said Sortino. Still UMass plays many Division I schools. UMass also plays valley rivals Smith and Mt. Holyoke.

Without seniors and with a young team, UMass has high hopes and good talent to hopefully make 1983 a successful season.

After two weeks of triple sessions and with the talent assembled, UMass hopes to drastically improve on last year's 25-27 record.

Fall golf outlook

UMass linksters look ahead with budding team

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's golf team is ahead of the pack. The Minutemen spent this weekend at the Army Invitational. Results were not available at press time.

What was available was the fact that UMass looks to have a strong team this year and a young one.

"We are looking for better things (this year)," said coach Ed Vlach. "We picked up a few kids who look to be assets to the team. Now, it looks like we'll have five or six strong people. We are a much more balanced team than we've been in years past."

The lineup that went down to West Point was a balanced one. Leading the team was senior captain John Courig, back after service in the Army, and who is really coming into his own, said Vlach. Courig, junior Tyler Shearer, and sophomore Alan Vorce were joined by two freshmen, James Ryan of Springfield and Tim Smith from Syracuse, N.Y.

Vlach held tryouts for the West Point slots during the middle of August. Two notable players that missed the trip were sophomore Brian Fitzgerald, who played at number one at times last spring, and sophomore Bill Meade.

The two should make the regular squad after school starts.

"It looks to be a good year," said Vlach. "I'm looking forward to it."

Women's golf hurting for players, return only three

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Jack Leaman's University of Massachusetts women's golf team is hurting. On one hand, the team lost New England and state champion Marlene Susienka to graduation along with Nola Eddy and Susan McCrea. On the other hand, he only has three players left on his team.

The team needs new players badly. Anyone interested in trying out for the team contact coach Leaman in his office at Boyden 228.

Returning for Leaman's linksters are Jane Egan, Judy Guzy and Teresa Collins, Guzy was the number two player last spring and Leaman hopes she can pick up some of the slack from Susienka's graduation. Egan was the fourth player.

Collins has improved a lot over the summer according to the coach.

UMass finished third in New England last spring mainly on Susienka's performance. It will be tough to do that again. The Minutewomen have a very young team and the outlook isn't good.

"Golf is kind of a prep school game," said Leaman. The team plays at Hickory Ridge, also Amherst's home course.

The bottom line is, according to Leaman, the need for some more players.

"There are golfers here at UMass. It's just a matter of finding them," said Leaman.

UMass harriers are optimistic

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

A young, but experienced University of Massachusetts men's cross-country team opens their season Friday in their only home meet of the season against a veteran Boston College squad.

Coach Ken O'Brien has four of his starting five returning this fall. Captain Rick Doiron, the number one runner a year ago, is back along with number two runner Rod LaFlamme.

"We drew a tough opener," said O'Brien, "but the team has done quite a bit of running over the summer." Boston College is ranked fifth in the New England preseason poll. UMass is ranked ninth.

Helping out will be juniors Jim McPhee, John Panccion and juniors Peter Larry and Jack Marinelli who rounded out the top 7 last year.

The harriers have nine races, few of which will be dual meets. UMass went 2-3 last year in dual meets.

Among the racers on tap for the Minutemen are the Atlantic 10 championships at West Virginia and the New England championships in Boston.

"Hopefully, we'll move up a notch at the Atlantic 10 (from last year's fifth)," said O'Brien, "but Penn State, West Virginia, Rutgers and St. Joseph are all returning runners too. They're very strong."

O'Brien is confident of improving in New England.

"I anticipate great improvement. We finished 11th last year but McPhee and Panccion were injured just before the meet," said O'Brien. UMass should have finished 4th or 5th according to the coach.

Friday's Boston College meet will start and end at NOPE. The meet starts at 3:30.

Frosh dominate women runners

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

It's tough in intercollegiate athletics with freshmen. Sometimes they work out great and fit right in. Sometimes they don't. That's why it is difficult to say what kind of year the University of Massachusetts women's cross-country team will have this year.

The lady harriers are returning only two lettermen and the majority of the rest of the team will be freshmen. Hopefully, they'll have enough talent to fill in the holes caused by graduation.

Juniors Maureen O'Reilly and Kim Baker return from last year's 1-5 team. They will be the leaders on this young squad.

Tops among freshmen should be Sally Howes from nearby Frontier Regional and Deidre Doyle from Mohawk Regional. The rest have potential, but it's hard to know what to expect.

The women open up on Friday in their only home meet of the year against Boston College. It will be a tough battle because the Lady Eagles have been undefeated for the past two years. The women's meet will start at 4:00 and the meet will start and finish at the NOPE fields.

UM is 0-7 vs B. Hens

UMass has traditionally had success with their football program except against a few teams, some of which are on this year's slate. UMass holds a 16-12 advantage over Boston University, 30-21-2 advantage over UConn, and a 29-12-3 record over New Hampshire.

Umass leads in their series against Maine, 23-5-1. Maine didn't score a point against UMass from 1970 to 1976. And when Maine beat UMass last fall, it was their first win since 1965.

Here is how UMass stacks up against the rest of their 1983 slate: Toledo (1-0, UM), URI (28-27-2, UM), Northeastern (7-6-1, UM), LeHigh (0-1, UM), Holy Cross (16-14-4, HC) and against Delaware, UMass is 0-7.

For interested trivia buffs, Amherst College holds a 42-10-5 advantage in their series over UMass, which started in 1881. They haven't met since 1946, a 6-6 tie.

Emerson wins award

Bruce Emerson, of Rockport, MA., one of the most versatile members of the 1983 UMass baseball team has received the Dennis DellaPiana Memorial Trophy for Dedication, Courage and Sportsmanship. Emerson, the starting shortstop in 1982, was one of UMass' top pitchers in '83 in addition to assuming the role of designated hitter.

Graduation doesn't hurt tennis

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Graduation didn't take a big bite out of the University of Massachusetts men's or women's tennis teams and both look optimistically towards the fall.

Coach Bob Szlosek's men's team returns four of their top five singles players from last spring. Steve Jordan, at number 2, Stuart Goodman, at number 3, Nick Julian (4) and Rich Zindgren (5) are the top returnees for the Minutemen this fall.

Besides coping with the loss of Neil Mackertich (1), UMass, who finished sixth in New England last spring, must tackle a challenging slate that includes Army, UConn, Dartmouth and Clark.

The men's team hosts Rhode Island at the Boyden tennis courts on Thursday in their season opener at 3:00.

The women's tennis team, under the leadership of Pat Stewart, returns three of their top five singles players from last spring. Elizabeth Sullivan (2), Chris Frazier (4), and Trish Sullivan (5) head up the Minutewomen squad. The top doubles team of Maureen Hanlon and Wendy Scheerer are also back.

The women, who open Thursday at Tufts, hope to top their fine 7-4 record from the spring. To do it they have to beat the likes of Northeastern, Harvard and Holy Cross.

The Minutewomen's first home match is against Vermont on Sept. 21. Besides hosting the Catamounts, the women also host UConn, Harvard and Springfield. The women play at the NOPE courts.

Massachusetts— Connecticut: spirited rivalry

This is the first in an occasional series about UMass rivalries.

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

There are rivalries and then there are rivalries. There is the Boston-New York baseball rivalry, one of the oldest and most bitter in the country. The Cowboys and the Redskins don't particularly care for each other and the Celties and the 76ers are not pals.

And then there is the University of Connecticut. To athletes and fans of the University of Massachusetts, UConn is a name to be respected and/or hated.

For years, UMass and UConn have been the closet rivals. Through the sixties and into the early seventies, these two members of the Yankee Conference have staged intense athletic contests. More often than not, UMass and UConn were battling it out for the championship.

With the demise of the Yankee Conference in the mid 70's, except for football, some of the polish surrounding the rivalry dimmed. UConn went big time and joined the Big East. UMass joined the Eastern 8, later to become the Atlantic 10.

Still, the football team, both soccer teams and the field hockey team have the utmost respect for those Blue and White Huskies from Storrs and possess a great desire to beat them.

For Bob Pickett and his Minuteman football team, the Yankee Conference still lives and now gets an automatic bid into the NCAA Div. I-AA playoffs.

UConn-UMass games are very hard fought battles. In 1981, the Minutemen traveled to Memorial Stadium and came from behind to beat UConn and propel them selves back into the YC picture.

In 1982, the injury wracked Minutemen made seven changes in the starting lineup including moving fullback Tom Murray to middle guard (defense) and starting freshman quarterback Jim Simeone. Simeone, on the games first play, almost teamed up with his brother Bob for a touchdown bomb.

And for the third year in a row, Garry Pearson saved his best for when the Huskies were in town, rushing for 215 yards, a new school record. Pearson and both Simeone's are from Connecticut.

In the last six years, the football Huskies have won just once over the Minutemen, in 1979.

However, in men's soccer, UConn has had Massachusett's number for the last few years. UConn nipped the upstart Minutemen 2-1 in 1981 enroute to their second NCAA soccer crown.

But in 1982, here in Amherst, UMass almost toppled the defending champions. Although UConn spent most of the time in UMass' end, UM scored on two fast breaks to take a 1-0 and later a 2-1 lead. They led 2-1 and the unusually large crowd started to count down as the clock rolled under a minute.

UConn's pressure was intense and with just 26 seconds to go, Matt Addington tied it up.

UMass captain Senior Kevin Flynn just happens to be from Connecticut.

In 1981, only one thing stood between Pam Hixon's undefeated (17-0-2) field hockey squad, ranked first in the country, and the National crown. It was the pesky 4th ranked Huskies, who had earlier in the season tied UMass.

On their home field, UConn took advantage of UMass mistakes, controlled the game and handed the Minutewomen a 4-1 loss.

Last year, UConn was the "opportunist" and took a 2-0 win over the stickers. Due to that loss, UMass drew Iowa in the NCAA playoffs — the winner to face UConn. Iowa won 1-0 in overtime.

In women's soccer, UConn and UMass are as close as rivals for the National crown can be. Last season, UConn finished 4th in the nation, UMass was 5th.

The Huskies stole a 1-0 double overtime win from the Minutewomen last fall and the hard play was typical of the two teams.

The two squads do respect each other and early in training camp two weeks ago, the two scrimmaged against each other here in Amherst.

Both coaches told their players to take it easy, but still the players got carried away at times.

Connecticut and Massachusetts. It's a rivalry fueled by pride, sportsmanship, personnel (14 football players are from the Nutmeg state), respect and the drive for athletic competion.

It will continue in Amherst and Storrs this year and the next and the next.

Daring Yankee Conference picks - UMass nipping BU

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Making predictions is the easiest way I know to get people mad at you and the easiest way to be proven wrong. However, undaunted and unafraid, I will attempt to predict what will happen in usually unpredictable Yankee Conference. Most of the teams are close in talent, but someone has to win.

MASSACHUSETTS — The Yankee Conference title will come down to the game on Oct. 22 at Alumni Stadium when Boston University comes to town. With a strong defense, experienced secondary, UMass should be able to keep BU at bay providing that Jim Simeone and company produce enough points on the scoreboard.

Targets Bob Simeone, Gary Freker and backs Rich Jenkins and Duckworth Grange should provide Massachusetts with ample offensive power. The home field advantage will make the difference for UMass. PREDICTION — first, 4-1.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY — Coach Rick Taylor and his Terriers have 37 of the 44 regulars from last year returning. Jim English is solid at quarterback in his third year and Paul Lewis leads the Terrier ground attack.

BU has an experienced defense, but that won't be enough to overcome Massachusett's home field advantage. PREDICTION — Second, 4-1.

MAINE — Lorenzo Bouier is gone along with nine starters from the defense. The Black Bears should have gone to the NCAA's last year, but even with the return of QB Rich LaBonte and HB Paul Phelan, it's just not enough for Maine.

This team will be spoilers or with a little luck could be in the hunt. PREDICTION — third, 3-2.

RHODE ISLAND — The Rams will be a tough, tough fourth place team. With a strong defense led by pre-season All-American Tony Deluca, URI could go somewhere, but Dave Weinke is a rookie quarterback and URI's depth is suspect. PREDICTION — fourth, 2-3.

CONNECTICUT — UConn returns two starting quarterbacks Larry Corn and Rob Trivella and although first year coach Tom Jackson has 18 starters back, Connecticut will miss out. The Huskies are always tough and the teams will have to watch out. PREDICTION — fifth, 2-3.

NEW HAMPSHIRE — The poor Wildcats lost twenty-one lettermen last year and Curt Collins, who led the team in rushing and receiving last year, won't be enough. UNH won't win many games, especially in the Yankee Conference. PREDICTION — sixth 0-5.

Curing the munchies with a sense of flair in the Amherst area

By DOUGLAS MUISE
Collegian Staff

Given the decidedly modest (read: depraved) savings account balances most of us are struggling to maintain, it's difficult to see beyond that next box of Price Chopper Mac & Cheese let alone an honest-to-goodness "dinner-out" at a local restaurant. But sometimes a great opportunity necessitates a great expenditure — like getting to know the Cleopatra that sits next to you in Shakespeare, for instance. There's nothing like a cozy table, an elegant environment, and an expensive meal to give that 'ole courtship ritual an added push. So if your looking for a nice place to really thin out that billfold, but get what you pay for, here's a few suggestions:

Amherst Chinese Food
Amherst Chinese is settled on 62 Main Street, a store front or so down from Plumbley's, and offers the best chinese food that you're likely to find in Amherst. It's even all-natural to boot. Try their luncheon specials. For reservations, call 253-7835.

La Raclette
Not French but Swiss cuisine is featured at La Raclette, located on Boltwood Walk in Amherst. La Raclette has lots of daily specials and great homemade desserts. The Sunday brunch is reportedly excellent. For reservations, call 253-5297.

The Lord Jeffery Inn
Located adjacent to the Unitarian Church on the Amherst Common, the Lord Jeff is a full service country inn that features "classic" American fare in a genuine American Colonial environment. The Lord Jeff might be just a bit too stuffy for a casual dinner, but if you insist, a coat and tie is recommended. For reservations, call 253-2576.

Plumbley's Off the Common
Another coat-and-tie place situated on 30 Boltwood Walk (just around the corner from the Lord Jeff). The restaurant is really quite beautiful inside and out if you're into Victorian Revival and even if you're not. The entrees are traditional, varied and not bad at all. Prices vary between $7 and $12, which is pretty reasonable. Aside from the food, Plumbley's Pub (located in the basement) is a great place to quaff down a few cocktails after a flick at the Amherst Cinema. For reservations, call 253-9586.

Judie's
Situated between Delano's and Barselotti's on South Pleasant Street in Amherst, Judie's is probably the town's most well-known eatery. Judie's specializes in French cuisine but you'll have no difficulty in reading the menu. The food is distinct and the prices as well. The front patio of the restaurant has just recently been glassed-in making the area a great place for beautiful people to see or be seen. Try Judie's new sit-down bar for great Pina Coladas. For reservations, call 253-3491.

Carbur's Restaurant
Located on Route 9 in Hadley (the Northampton PVTA bus stops here regularly), Carbur's claims that it is "The Place For Ribs." But it's no hype, the prime rib is excellent, though the decor of the place is a bit tacky. What you really should check-out is their two-fer happy hour in the upstairs lounge. The atmosphere is much cleaner, there's lots of free munchies (chicken wings, no less!), the tunes are always hopping (they make their own tapes), and the mixed drinks are always perfectly mixed. For more information, call 586-1978.

Plumbley's Off the Common: great eats in a Victorian setting.

Jack August's Original House of Seafood
You might think it odd to find a restaurant that specializes in fresh seafood so distant from any appreciable body of water. And I'm not sure how Jack August's does it (a Lear Jet express from Gloucester, perhaps?), but the food is always fresh and always delicious. And the prices are even reasonable: starting at $4.25 for their basic seafood plate, to $11.95 for Alaskan King Crab. You'll be hard-pressed to find a better seafood restaurant in the entire Pioneer Valley and I'll even venture to say West of Route 128. Jack August's is located on Bridge Street in Northampton, right across from Roz's Place. For reservations, call 584-1197.

Fitzwilly's
Located a few store fronts up from Jack August's, on the opposite side of the street, is one of the more trendy eating and drinking establishments in Northampton. If you've got any sort of an allergy to Boston Ferns or aversions to brass tubing, pass this place over. If such an ambience doesn't disturb you particularly, you might want to sample an entree from a menu that includes everything from crab legs to quiche. For reservations, call 584-8666.

Greenstreets
I honestly have never eaten at this place, but for what it's worth I've pressed my nose up against the glass front on numerous occasions and it looks rather chic inside. From what friends have told me, Greenstreets specializes in French and Swiss cuisine, they have a decent champagne bar, a neat outside courtyard, and an excellent Sunday brunch. Try their veal dishes! Greenstreets is located on 8 Green Street (where else) in Northampton, adjacent to the gates of Smith College. Call 584-8791 for reservations and more information.

Packard's
The home of the stuffed potato in Western Massachusetts, Packard's feature's barbequed chicken, burgers, ribs, steaks, seafood and salads. The back dining room is the definite attraction here; it's a renovated movie theater. If you come to dance, you'll find the juke to be nicely stocked with all your favorites. Packard's is located on 14 Masonic Street in Northampton. For more info., call 584-5957.

Joey D's: Stayin' Alive

Route 9 nightclub gets a second chance under new management

By LISA MOSLEY

When I sat down to write this story, my initial reaction was to satarize, rip apart and just generally rag all over the now defunct Joey D's. But that would hardly be fair, especially since I never managed to set foot inside the place.

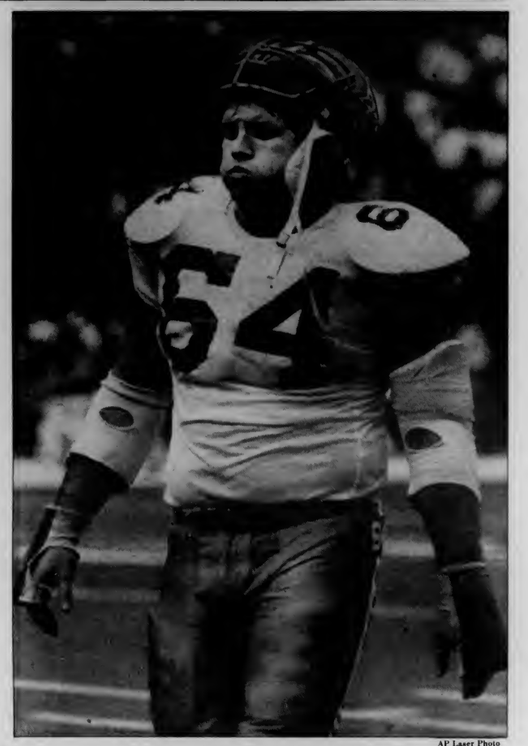
Oh, I'd heard plenty about the steamy Rte. 9 hotspot: the Calvins-only dress code and enough throbbing bass and flashing lights to give even a combination Motorhead/Zaxon freak sensory overload.

Well, for all you poor souls who've been without inspiration or motivation since the dynamic disco closed its doors last winter, chin up! In the very same building, a brand new, but I suspect very similar "rock and dance club" (that is indeed the new term for disco among the nouveau chic, isn't it?) will soon spring to life.

This time around, though, the building will also house a restaurant and caterer. All three facets of the establishment will be owned by Bob Ross, a 23-year-old graduate of UMass.

This may seem like an ambitious project for someone so young, but Ross is convinced that his age makes him more sensitive to the wants of college-aged patrons.

According to Ross, the establishment will be called Justin Ryan's Meeting Place, and should, if all goes according to schedule, be open sometime in October.



Ross has dedicated the restaurant, which will be located downstairs, to sports fans. The food will be short order — potato skins, nachos and such — and no dish will cost more than $4.00. The focal point of the restaurant will be a 50-inch screen on which sporting events and an occasional movie will be televised.

Ross hopes that the restaurant, which he has dubbed the "Kickoff Lounge" and plans to carpet with artificial turf, will attract townspeople as well as students.

Ross wouldn't disclose details about the disco, except to point out that the disc jockey would play all audience requests. Hmm. We shall see.

The catering service, which will also be located in the building, will be availablefor weddings, semi-formals and parties. Ross feels that there is a demand for this type of service in the area.

According to Ross, Justin Ryan's will open as soon as the Amherst selectmen approve the transfer of the licenses.

A response to revolutionary ideas

Third World Theater opens its fall season

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN

The Third World Theater Series will open its fall theater season with an original production of "Stepping Into Tomorrow," by Yolanda King, daughter of the late Martin Luther King Jr., and Atallah Shabazz, daughter of the late Malcolm X, at 8 p.m. Oct. 15 on Bowker Auditorium, Stockbridge Hall.

The play will be performed by Nucleus Incorporated, a New York-based theater group organized by King and Shabazz, and will initiate the Third World Theater Series' fifth year.

King and Shabazz will also conduct a workshop entitled, "Changing the Face of Theater: The Next Step," at 2 p.m. Oct. 15 (that same afternoon) at Smith College.

According to Roberta Uno Thelwell, director of the theater series, the workshop is in response to King and Shabazz's fathers' revolutionary ideas.

"They've taken their fathers' ideas into the theater and used them as an educational tool," she said.

The second production, "Do Lord Remember Me," is an original play written by James DeJongh of the City College of New York.

The musical "employs traditional black spirituals and work songs and really speaks to and incorporates black church and history and experience," Thelwell said.

Thelwell said DeJongh had interviewed black men and women who had been slaves prior to 1865 during the Depression as part of a WPA oral history project.

"These are the actual living words of many slaves," she said.

Horace Boyer, professor of music at the University of Massachusetts and a noted gospel singer, composer and arranger, will direct the music.

Performances of "Do Lord Remember Me" will be held on Oct. 27, 28 and 29, Nov. 3, 4 and 5 in Hampden Theater. All shows begin at 8 p.m.

Auditions for the five members of the all-black cast will be held at 6 p.m. Sept. 19, 20 and 22, in Bowker Auditorium. Only those with strong singing ability or experience need audition, Thelwell said. Call 545-0190 for more information.

The last production of the series' season is a one-man show entitled, "ABC: American-Born Chinese," by "Charlie" Chin, a songwriter, poet, musician and Broadway actor of Chinese descent.

The play is a collage of monologue and music that relates the history, joy and sorrow of being Chinese-American. The show will be presented at 8 p.m., Dec. 2 in Bowker Auditorium.

All Third World Theater Series shows are $2 for students and $3 for non-students.

Parker presents 2500 chances your father never had.

Enter the Parker Top of the Class Sweepstakes and you could win something that can give you a real advantage in life.

Your own Texas Instruments home computer.

While you're at it, pick up something better to write with, too. A Parker Jotter ball pen.

Its microscopically-textured ball grips the paper to help prevent messy blobbing and skipping.

And it writes up to five times longer than most ball pens.

Look for sweepstakes entry forms and details at your college bookstore. But do it soon. With over 500 computers to win, this is one sweepstakes worth entering. While you still have the chance.

To enter the Parker Top of the Class Sweepstakes, no purchase necessary. Void where prohibited. All entries must be received no later than October 15, 1983. ©1983 TPPC.

No place like home: WMUA's efforts to relocate

By LISA MOSLEY

Curse this high tech age! In a time when familiarity with the latest software is considered infinitely more valuable than proficiency in the Classics, and one computer programming course seems to be worth more than an MFA, the future of the artistically inclined and trained seems uncertain at best.

Even established sectors of arts and music are being pushed to the wayside by a society that looks toward the Silicon Valley as Mecca. At first glance, this would appear to be the fate of UMass' now homeless radio station, WMUA. You know the old plot: the Engineering Dept. wants more space, radio station is occupying said space, radio station loses space, Engineering Dept. gets space, and all the microchips live happily after after, right? Well, not exactly. The story of WMUA's relocation is a bit more complicated than that.

According to Bill Stepchew, chief engineer (oops! Maybe he should see about having his title changed...) at WMUA, the Department of Engineering had decided as early as 1976 that it would need additional space for academic use in Marston Hall.

"WMUA was notified of this in December of '79," said Stepchew.

It was not until last spring, however, that the Campus Center Administration proposed that WMUA move into the basement of the Campus Center.

The actual move from Marston Hall (where, by the way, the station has been located since the building was constructed in 1954) did not take place until this past summer, though. Stepchew said that the station will eventually move into the "102 Complex" (rooms 101 - 107) in the Campus Center.

The only thing that stands in the way of WMUA and its new studios, however, is money. Or, more accurately, the lack of it.

After plans were drawn up for the new studios, Stepchew said that bids were taken from twelve area contractors. It was after the bids were received that 'MUA's management began to realize that its estimated bill for the relocation - $58,000 - was painfully low. A more accurate figure for the forty-five day construction project, said Stepchew, is $88,000.

Stepchew pointed out that WMUA, which is nonprofit and therefore cannot finance the building itself, has amassed only $35,000 toward the construction thus far. According to Stepchew, the money has come from "various sources, including the provost's office and the Engineering Department."

The University Administration wants the rest of the bill to be footed by the SATF, according to Stepchew. Academic affairs sources could not be reached for comment.

Financial problems are not all that have plagued 'MUA these past few months. The recent telephone workers' strike caused the station to go off the air for most of the summer. Stepchew said that WMUA was to take up temporary residence in the WSYL studios. Unfortunately, the day phone service was to be installed in the temporary studios, the workers went on strike.

Stepchew said that he hoped that WMUA would be back on the air by Sept. 2, but at this writing, dead air is all one hears upon turning the dial to 91.7.

Despite the many headaches that relocation has caused, Stepchew and the 'MUA staff are optomistic about the future of the station, especially in its soon-to-be home. When 'MUA finally does move into the Campus Center (between November and January, Stepchew hopes) they will be much more visable to the student population than they were in Marston. This new accessability should lead to a greater interaction between the station and students, especially student groups and organizations. There is even talk among the 'MUA staff of trying to get the station piped into the Campus Center (hear! hear!).

For now, the staff of WMUA can only hope for a great future at new studios in a convenient location. In the meantime, though, they have no permanent home, and are in the dark about where the money for one will come. What's a rock and roller to do?

FCR gets new general manager

By LISA MOSLEY

The vast majority of University students probably don't associate excitement with classical radio stations, but for those involved in or just interested in UMass' noncommercial WFCR (88.5), a new thrill is in the air.

The cause of this exhiliration is the appointment of Joan Rubel as general manager of WFCR, a National Public Radio member station that was founded and is supported by the Five College Consortium.

The appointment was announced by Miriam Williford, associated provost for continuing education here at the University. Williford described Rubel as being "committed to high quality radio." Said Williford, "I am very excited for the future of WFCR. Joan Rubel...will help WFCR reach its full potential."

Such enthusiasm, it seems, would suggest some sort of changes looming ahead for the station, which currently devotes 60 percent of its air time to broadcasting locally performed classical music. The station's format also features daily locally-produced news programs that include art and music news and stories of area interest. Staff produced speciality programs include Third World, French and Spanish music and information shows. Radio drama, some of it locally produced and some syndicated, is also aired.

According to program director Joan Wilbur, no possibility of changes for the campus based station would be discussed for a few weeks. Rubel, too, declined to talk about her plans for the future of the station, saying that she would be spending the next several weeks familiarizing herself with the station and its procedures.

Rubel was chosen by a search committee from among 74 applicants. It's easy to see why Rubel stood out in the eyes of the committee. She is a graduate of Harvard Business School Executive Management Program and the New School for Democratic Management in Madison, Wisconsin.

In addition to her extensive experience in many aspects of radio, ranging from management to production, Rubel has also been involved in the public service sector. From 1974 to 1977 she was project director for the Dane County Project on Rape and was a research assistant for the Equal Rights Division of Wisconsin's Department of Industry, Labor and Human Relations from 1973 to 1974.

What makes Rubel just about perfect for the job, though, is her experience as station manager for WORT in Madison, Wisconsin, for Madison, like Amherst, is a town that is the home of a large university (U-Wisconsin).

Rubel, who assumed her duties on August 29, replaces former 'FCR general manager Robert S. Goldfarb, who left the station last June to become chief executive officer of Eastern Public Radio Network.

Barselotti's gets itself a new look

By DOUGLAS MUISE

It wasn't until the first semester of my junior year that I first ventured into Barselotti's downtown. By now, I was a whiz at the Tron game in Time Out and I bore my lumps from the plumbing-studded stratosphere of the Drake with pristine dignity, but on 'the gang's' frequent downtown bar binges the raucous front of Barselotti's was always carefully side stepped. From what I could make out through the haze of the front door, Barselotti's had a lot more in common with another watering-hole — Dastardly Dan's — than any other bar in town. It was a local haunt, and that meant trouble for a smart-assed, know-it-all college kid like myself.

But soon my fears will be no more.

Judie's, that chic dispensary of haute cuisine to the Amherst community, has just recently bought-out "Barsie's" and the future of the little bar looks more promising than ever.

"It's a totally new concept," said Judie's owner Judy Teraspulsky. "Rather than rebuild, we intend to memorialize the place."

According to Teraspulsky, the flavor of the original Barselotti's will still be preserved: all of the trophies, photos, and other assorted memorabilia will remain. However, the scuzzy smoke-infested aftertaste you've come to associate with the bar will be gone forever. Renovations will include the insertion of a large plate-glass window in front, several smaller windows along the left alley wall, an array of sit-down booths beneath the windows (each with its own mini-juke box), a new bar top, along with the installation of an expansive MTV video screen.

"Barsie's" will also start serving food. The new menu will feature such oddities as Sausage on a Stick, Chicken on a Roll, Barbequed Ribs, and Barselotti's Original Baked Beans, as well as a variety of fresh-baked desserts. Prices for these goodies will run between $2.25 and $3.00.

A new take-out service will also be initiated, said Teraspulsky. "There's a real lack of good take-out in town and the new Barselotti's will cater to people who want to be in and out more quickly," she said. Food and liquor will be served until 9 p.m., after which Barselotti's will open for its regular bar business.

"The new Barselotti's will aim at attracting a higher quality of clientele, professional types during the day looking for a quick bite and kids at night looking for a fast beer," she said.

Teraspulsky remarked that the Barselotti legacy stretches back a remarkable 50 years. "Not too many people know that Barselotti's was the first bar in town to get a liquor license after the end of Prohibition. I think that alone makes it worth saving."

The new Barselotti's will open on September 11.

Budget office director demoted, cites sexism

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

The Associate Director of the Office of Planning and Budget claims her job description has been changed and she has been "stripped of full supervisory responsibilities" because of a sexual discrimination charge filed by her against the University of Massachusetts.

Rosemarie Strother, who filed the charge against the University with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrinination, and the Federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission last May said Paul Page acting associate director of the Office of Planning and Budget "presented me with a new job description (over the summer) which is in my opinion a demotion."

The "demotion" is a result of the charge filed last May in which John L. DeNyse, vice-chancellor for Administration and Finance, was specifically named, Strother said.

Page had "no comment" about the "demotion" claim of Strother.

DeNyse said it is "a personnel matter and I just won't talk about it."

Strother said she did sign the new job description given to her by Page, but did so "under protest" on the advice of her lawyer.

Strother, who has been the associate director of the Office of Planning and Budget since 1979 and a University employee since 1966, was passed over for the position of acting director of the budget office last March.

The position was given to Page, then director of Financial Affairs in Whitmore, and a "less qualified man" for the job, Strother said.

Since she filed the discrimination charge, Strother said DeNyse has stayed away from her.

"I would have expected him (DeNyse), to come to me and talk about things. That has not happened," she said.

Strother assumed the position of acting director of the office last November after Marie Reid, then assistant chancellor and director of the office announced she was resigning her position, effective in January.

Reid cited racial discrimination as her reason for leaving.

The position of acting director of the office is a temporary one because a permanent person will be named to the position after a search is conducted, Strother said.

Strother said she is unclear as to what other kind of action the University may take against her.

Provost search resumes

By JILL LANG
and ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

Dean of Physical Education David C. Bischoff has been named interim acting provost to replace former acting provost Dean Alfange, who resigned last week, Assistant Chancellor Deirdre Ling said Monday.

Ling said Chancellor Joseph Duffey "would be moving fairly quickly" to fill the acting provost position, for which Bischoff has been the only candidate identified.

"It is incorrect to assume that he (Bischoff) is the only one under consideration for this post," Ling said. "There are several other candidates, all within the University."

Ling declined to say whether these candidates are from within the administration itself.

The new acting provost will serve until a permanent provost is found, which could be up to a full year, Ling said. The post was officially vacated by Loren Baritz in June, but Alfange took over as acting provost last winter.

A nationwide search to find a permanent replacement was initiated at that time and culminated this summer with final interviews and recommendations to the chancellor, who must finally appoint a candidate. By the time a final selection had been made, however, Duffey's choice had already accepted a position at the University of Tennessee.

Last week Duffey announced the search would be reopened, which entails reposting advertisements for the position and soliciting new applicants. Finalists from the last search can reapply but are not being considered exclusively, Ling said, because quality applicants who were not available at the time of the original search may be available now.

"One would hope to get the best possible talent available at this time," Ling said.

Considering qualified applicants may have obligations that would not allow them to come directly to the University, Ling said she projected the target date for a new provost for the end of the year. The acting provost would assume all duties until that selection is made, she said.

Future bonding legislation could raise student fees

"Selling bonds is like taking out a mortgage...the only way to pay off the Building Authority is through student fees."
— Charlene Allen SGA co-president

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Student fees at the University of Massachusetts could go up next semester if a bill favored by University President David C. Knapp gets special approval to be considered in this legislative session, Student Government Association (SGA) co-President Charlene Allen said last week.

The bill, which would raise bonding, or borrowing, ceilings to $100 million within the UMass Building Authority to help pay for renovations on the Curry Hicks Cage, is "part of a whole package of legislation which Knapp has asked the Governor to file," Allen said.

Paul Gosselin, chair of the Undergraduate Student Senate Public Policy Committee, said the $2.3 million project planned for the cage "amounts to a $15 to $20 fee increase," but the University cannot make the renovations without the legislation.

Selling bonds is "like taking out a mortgage" on new construction, Allen said "the only way to pay off Building Authority bonds is through student fees" the building is then owned by the state, she said.

The legislative session resumed Monday and will end in November. If the Governor doesn't file Knapp's proposal, "it will have to go through a late filing procedure, which is rather difficult," and renovation may be put off until next year, Gosselin said.

Renovation plans for the Cage include a new cover for the dirt floor, a new ceiling, new bleacher seats, a new indoor track, improved lighting and a removable wood basketball floor.

Other parts of Knapp's proposed legislation would "extend Building Authority purview to Worcester and Boston," to allow for construction at those campuses, Allen said.

Gosselin said this would affect student fees "in the long run," because students at the Amherst campus could end up helping pay for projects like a "huge, multi-million dollar" parking garage on the Worcester campus.

Allen and Gosselin said the Governor appears to have turned Knapp's proposal down too late to file it in this legislative session, but Susan Lane from the Governor's Office of Educational Affairs said last week she could not confirm or deny this.

US demands compensation

By HARRIS JACKSON
Associated Press

The United States demanded compensation from the Soviet Union on Monday for the 61 Americans killed in the Soviet destruction of a South Korean airliner as a pilots' boycott of flights to Moscow took hold in Europe and NATO governments prepared to bar the Soviet airline from their airports.

Meanwhile, a third body believed from the wreckage of the downed jumbo jet was found on Japan's northernmost coast, and the Kyodo news agency reported the plane did not crash for more that 12 minutes after one or more of its four engines was hit by a heat-seeking missile from a Soviet fighter.

The U.S. demand for compensation was presented in Washington by John H. Kelley, an acting assistant secretary of state, to Oleg Sokolov, second-ranking member of the Soviet Embassy staff, but Sokolov refused to accept it.

Kelley also tried to give Sokolov a note on behalf of the South Korean government demanding compensation for its

Soviets expelled and called spies

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department disclosed Monday that two Soviet diplomats were expelled from the United States last month as alleged spies, and charged that a U.S. diplomat expelled Monday from the Soviet Union had been mistreated.

The two Soviets were identified as Yuri Petrovich Leonov, an assistant air attache at the embassy here, and Anatoly Yevgenyevich Skripko, another attache at the embassy. Both were declared persona non grata "for engaging in espionage," said Alan Romberg, a State Department spokesman.

Skripko was declared persona non grata on Aug. 17. The action against Leonov was taken two days later.

A State Department official, who spoke only on condition that he not be identified, said the decision to announce the expulsions was made because the Soviets disclosed the expulsion of a U.S. diplomat, Lon David Augustenborg, on spying charges.

Augustenborg was vice consul at the U.S. consulate in Leningrad. His wife Denise also was declared persona non grata.

Also, the expulsions of the two Soviet envoys preceded the Soviet downing of a South Korean airliner carrying 269 people on Sept. 1, which has caused a serious deterioration in Soviet-American relations and prompted worldwide criticism of the Soviet Union.

citizens who were killed, but Sokolov rejected it also.

State Department spokesman Alan Romberg said the United States would "continue to press the Soviets to meet their clear obligation under international law to pay compensation to both the United States and Korea."

The pilots' ban, begun Friday in Britain, was joined by pilots in Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Denmark, Finland and Sweden, cancelling 13 of the 27 weekly flights into Moscow from NATO countries.

Pilots of Air France, which operates six flights a week, were to join Tuesday, and the West German Lufthansa, which operates the remaining seven, said these would be halted Thursday.

But the government of neutral Switzerland delayed deciding whether Swissair pilots could suspend their four weekly flights to the Soviet capital, and Finland's state railway began adding extra passenger cars to its two daily trains to the Soviet Union.

Most of the pilots were observing a 60-day boycott agreed on last Tuesday by officials of the International Federation of Airline Pilots Associations.

Twelve of the 16 NATO governments began calling in Soviet ambassadors to inform them that they would refuse landing permission to Aeroflot, the Soviet airline, for two weeks starting Thursday.

But four members of the alliance — France, Greece, Spain and Turkey — refused to take part. And the Danish pilots' association proposed that the pilots' boycott be reduced to two weeks also. It said a two-month boycott "primarily will hurt Western airlines, and it could jeopardize Soviet route allocations."

Japan, which banned Aeroflot charter flights last Friday, was preparing to join in the ban on all Soviet flights, Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe told the visiting Irish foreign minister, Peter Barry.

Romberg said the United States is "vigorously protesting the physical mistreatment" of Augustenborg. He refused to elaborate on the matter, and went no further than to say that Augustenborg was a junior officer at the consulate.

The U.S. official who spoke on condition that he remain anonymous said Skripko was caught handing money to someone for a classified document he had just received.

Roberts crusading

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Tulsa evangelist Oral Roberts is urging viewers of his television program to send in for packets of "anointing oil" so that he can heal them.

Roberts said Sunday that he and his son, Richard, will hold a healing crusade at Oral Roberts University on Oct. 20-23.

In the meantime, he asked listeners to write "for small packets of anointing oil." He displayed a packet about the size of a postage stamp.

"Send for these packets and tell me where you hurt," Roberts said. "When I pray for you on Oct. 2, you may anoint yourself by placing a drop on your forehead or the affected area of your body," he said.

Roberts told viewers he will depend on the Holy Spirit for the healings.

God always responds to prayers made in that manner, Roberts said, "but not always right away."

Hemorrhoids cured

PEKING (AP) — A 400-year-old prescription for hemorrhoids has proved 96 percent effective for thousands of sufferers and officially designated as a cure, the English-language China Daily newspaper reported.

The newspaper described the cure as an injection of insect secretions on Chinese sumac leaves mixed with Chinese crystal salt, and said it was used on 40,000 patients.

Students having housing hassles

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

Students temporarily living in the Campus Center Hotel are happy with their rooms, in spite of complaints against the University of Massachusetts Housing Office and the thought of moving their crates and boxes again.

Only students who failed to pay their bills by the due date or were not guaranteed housing do not have permanent rooms and are currently living in "swing spaces," the hotel, or have been sent home to commute, according to Gerald Quarles, coordinator of the Housing Assignment Office.

One homeless student is a sophomore from Weston, was academically withdrawn over the summer because of an unpaid lab fee, and lost his housing.

The student, who didn't want to "make too many waves" by being named, said the Housing Office was unhelpful at first.

"They (Housing) are almost avoiding to guarantee anyone housing. And they're not encouraging anyone to be assertive."

The student said neither hotel rooms nor "swing sapces" were mentioned as temporary solutions to his situation until he got tired of "living out of his car" and complained to the Housing Office. Quarles said first year and foreign students, and those who live far away would be given priority. Upperclass students are familiar with the opening of school, and have a "higher cope level" he said.

"I'm supposed to have a higher cope level, but I was hysterical," the student said.

Students patiently bear the long lines and heat that are common at the beginning of the semester.

Paula Stashis, however, is content with her living arrangements in the hotel. "I have air conditioning and a nice color television," she said. "I'd rather live here than in a dorm, especially when the University is paying for it," she said.

"What really stinks, though, is knowing that it's only temporary, and I'll have to lug all of my stuff across campus again," she added.

Stashis, a sophomore from Topsfield, said she didn't sign her housing contract card, so she lost her room assignment. "It's my fault, I didn't think of it."

Thomas Wigmore, a sophomore from Hingham, said the students without housing were victims of a confusing system.

At the end of the semester during room choosing, students have "so many different things to fill out, and they have to run between the dorm and Whitmore to hand in forms," he said.

He suggested that the Housing Office should require students to sign one housing contract card to last for their freshmen and sophomore years since they must live in dorms during those years.

Quarles was unavailable to reply to the students' comments.

Exhibitionists, voyeurs plague Lincoln Apts.

Task force confronts voyeurism

by MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

The coordinator of an Amherst neighborhood task force formed to take legal action against peeping toms will meet today with a lawyer from the Legal Services office and a member of the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association (SGA) to draft a document to address the problem.

Barbara McGlynn, leader of the committee, and SGA co-President Charlene Allen will meet with a lawyer to draft a formal document intended to initiate change of the town by-laws regarding voyeurism. The document will be presented to Amherst selectmen and the UMass board of Trustees upon completion.

The document is in response to what McGlynn and her supporters term "unsatisfactory" actions of the UMass police in punishing one of their officers accused of exposing himself to residents of the area bordered by Lincoln Avenue, Sunset Avenue, and McClellan and Beston streets. Where he has been spotted most often has been at the Lincoln Apartments. Because the apartments are located on university property, UMass rather than Amherst police are obligated to bring charges against the officer.

The man has been terminated for engaging in activity unbecoming an officer.

The present Amherst policy follows Massachusetts General Law in charging peeping toms with merely trespassing or engaging in disorderly conduct.

McGlynn, a 27-year-old university employee and two-year resident of Amherst, has been considering legal action since mid-July when she and her committee began meeting weekly to discuss ways to assist police in capturing the suspect.

"To change the policy would require consent of the Hampshire County district attorney's office, and I think they've decided not to press charges because it was agreed the man would receive psychiatric treatment within six months," she said. "I want something to be done now."

McGlynn is supported by her neighbors and other members of the university community, most notably the Everywoman's Center, which encouraged action from all Amherst residents in helping to bring attention to the matter last summer.

Police receive 23 complaints since Jan. '82

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

The peeping tom incident resulting in the accusation and subsequent arrest of a University of Massachusetts police officer this month may have been the most publicized occurence of that sort, but not the first, as Amherst and UMass police have received at least 23 complaints since January of 1982.

Most complaints came from residents of the Lincoln Apartments located on the UMass campus across from the Southwest Residential Area, and described a man whom they said was a white male about 155 pounds, who wears a ski mask. He is said by residents to knock on doors and windows, look in, expose himself, and masturbate in front of witnesses.

Though the last incident occured in mid-June, police are still fielding complaints from residents who say they have seen the man around the area since then. Other residents say there are actually two exhibitionists.

Both UMass police and a small number of residents have said they could not be absolutely sure that the man was a university police officer, and though many still believe this view, the unnamed officer has been pinpointed and terminated.

UMass police have been following the events closely since the autumn of 1981. Police had continued work on the problem, but continually received more complaints.

Interest in the case heightened this past summer when more events were reported — the last in mid-June — and a community task force committed to finding and prosecuting the man met with community police to air their dissatisfaction with the treatment of police.

Police responded by meeting with the residents privately and assuring them strategies for capturing the suspect would be developed. In an interdepartmental memo, Chief Donald N. Mais upped the force's effort in attempting to capture the suspect by recommending a more stringent patrol of the area.

Also at this time, residents disagreed with the police who said at one time the profile of the suspect did not match any of the descriptions residents had given him.

The case is now still at the attention of the police, who are still working with residents in attempting to wrap up the problem.

Orchard Hill/Central path to see lights, get paved

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

A "main path" to Orchard Hill and Central Residential Area dormitories, currently unpaved and unlighted, will be lighted probably and praved before the winter, Student Government Association co-President Tom Ahern said Monday.

Ahern said he reached "a verbal agreement" with Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance John DeNyse that the path, which begins at the Rhododendron Garden behind University Health Services and goes up the hill to the right of the Chancellor's House, would be lighted and paved "for safety reasons."

DeNyse said he is working on getting some temporary lighting for the path, "and also to see if it is possible to do a little regrading." A paved walk is a "long-term possibility," DeNyse said, but he could not guarantee that it would happen.

"It's a direct line from Orchard Hill to main buildings (on campus) and it should be taken care of," Ahern said. The path "is dangerous to walk on, especially at night and during the winter when you can slip down," he said.

DeNyse said he "is trying to see if there is anything we can do to improve that path."

The path, which is surrounded by trees and completely dark at night, is unpaved except for long flat stones, used for steps, placed at uneven intervals up the hill. Physical Plant workers removed the path's one light last year "to force students not to use the path," Ahern said.

Ahern, who used to live in Field dormitory in Orchard Hill, said the path's condition has been a source of complaints from Orchard Hill residents for at least two years, but the University has never done anything to improve it "because it wasn't an official path."

"In Orchard Hill, when we went out campaigning (for the SGA presidency) last spring, it (the path) was the major complaint," Ahern said.

Students using the path yesterday, who would only say they were from Central and Orchard Hill dorms, said lighting and paving the path is "a good idea," because the path is "a quicker way" from campus to dorms in Orchard Hill and some parts of Central Residence Area.

"Within reason," DeNyse said, "traffic patterns on campus do dictate where paths will be."

WOMEN'S FORUM

Women's Forum is a weekly listing of upcoming events relating to women's issues. Notices should be sent to the Women's editor, care of the Collegian, 113 Campus Center, before the Friday preceding the event.

The Educator/Advocates of the Everywoman's Center design and implement educational programs in the five college area and in the local communities. The program is now seeking volunteers interested in conducting community education around issues of violence against women. Credit may be available. For more information call 545-0883.

The New Song Library is a collection of feminist and other progressive political songs. Assistants are needed to help with collecting and cataloging music, researching requests, expanding services and fundraising. For more information contact Johanna Halbeisen 586-9485.

Wednesday — Norma Rae and A Portrait of Theresa, the first in a series of films designed to celebrate the richness and diversity of women's lives will be presented as part of the women's Film Festival at 7:00 p.m. in the Student Union. Admission is $2 for the double feature.

Saturday — The New England Learning Center for women in Transition presents Debbie Fier and Annie Hassett in concert at 7 p.m. at Guiding Grange on Chapman St. Greenfield. Tickets are $3.50 and $5.00 and are available at Food for Thought in Amherst.

There are two hotlines available on campus for aid to victims of rape or other violence. The 24-Hour Rape hotline is 545-2677. The Everywoman's Center Hotline for victims of violence is 545-0800.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

'IT IS INHERENT IN THE WESTERN CHARACTER TO HANDLE ADVERSITY WITH A BLEND OF OPTIMISM AND HUMOR — NOW, SHUT UP!'

An open letter to our readers;

Whether you're a new student seeing the campus and the Collegian for the first time or you're an old pro at living at UMass, we'd like to introduce you to the Collegian, and tell you a little about why we're here.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is the independent student newspaper of the University. We're here to provide the public services normally associated with newspapers, such as informing and educating our readers, and allowing all members of the community the chance to express their opinions in an open, public forum. Therefore, everyone is encouraged to let us know how you feel. If you want to say something, write an editorial. If you want to make a comment on an issue, or respond to something already printed in the paper, send a letter to the editor. Students, faculty, staff persons, and residents of the five-college area are all part of our general readership, and therefore, are all encouraged to speak their mind openly and freely.

Our purpose:

- to report news of campus, 5 college and community activities, and to present news summaries of national and international news developments of interest to the University community.
- to offer "news analysis" of news developments
- to express student, faculty (and other) opinions
- to offer students the opportunity to acquire newspaper experience and skill in writing, reporting, and photography as well as knowledge of the advertising, circulation, business, graphics and production aspects of newspaper work.
- to support the best traditions of the University
- to record the history of the University
- to disseminate information of and about the University to all interested parties outside the scope of the immediate college community
- etcetera, etcetera

It will be noted that we neither claim nor want to be a gripe sheet, humor magazine, or partisan organ for any faction. Our main purpose is to impartially and objectively record the news. Expression of student, faculty and staff opinion is provided through the editorial page, and we encourage letters from readers as long as they are typed, signed and do not violate the laws of libel or decency. We reserve the right, of course, to comment editorially either on the content of letters received or on the conduct of campus affairs in general.

It should be remembered that the Collegian is not a student action committee, and cannot be held responsible for correcting all campus ills. We will certainly oppose any action contrary to the best interests of the student body and our other readers, and will "sound off" when we feel that any such actions have been contemplated or taken. However, we need your help. Any time news developments occur that are of interest to the University community, let us know about it — either in writing, in person or by phone. We're very accessible and open to suggestions.

— the Editors

Welcome to "ZooMass"

David B. Miner

Welcome to the ZOO!!

This is an expression that those of us who are returning students have heard on many occasions, and one which I am sure that those of you who are just starting out on your journey through the UMass menagerie are bound to hear many times before you graduate.

To be sure, at times, life on the UMass campus can be hectic, what with classes cutting into a very heavy social schedule, the need to cram for the next morning's test conflicting with the need to wander down to the local watering hole to down a couple of cool brews with the rest of the pack, and the need to sit down and finish that term paper (it was only due last semester for Pete's sake) pulling at your need to get it on. But to refer to good old UMass as "the Zoo" or "ZooMass" is, I feel totally unjustified and uncalled for, in fact, whenever I hear those expressions used, my feathers get ruffled and the hackles on my back rise up and I want to let out a probosidian bellow.

Feeling the way I do, I decided to make it one of my summer projects (sic) to try to track down how these expressions came into popular usage.

So, one fine summer afternoon I dropped in to see an old friend of mine, Dr. Pollard Grimalkin Dolittle, who just happens to be one of the most renowned experts in the field of interspecies communications.

"Jocko," I said (all his friends call him that. "I'm disturbed. Some idiot just called my school "the Zoo" and I'm angry. Can you tell me how this term came about?

Placing his beaverskin tophat firmly on his brow, straightening his pale blue ascot, and picking up his walking stick (Jocko was a throwback to the Victorian age), he uttered a single word - "Rosebud".

"Rosebud?" I said, baffled. "The last time I heard that word was the last time I saw Citizen Kane, and I didn't think the Prof. was referring to Orson Wells' sled, especially when it was the middle of the summer and there was not any snow on the ground!

"Rosebud", he repeated once again in his soothing tone of voice. "Consider the rosebud. A beautiful work of art to some. Others look at the rosebud and only think of the hidden thorns. You, my friend, see only the thorns, while I see the beauty.

"Take your getting uptight over the expression ZooMass. You only think of it as a term of ridicule, while I think of it as a term of endearment."

"This university was founded 120 years ago as an agricultural college. Closely linked, in those olden days, to agriculture, was the field of animal studies, Zoology, from whence we get the term zoo. Sometimes, misinformed persons linked the study of animal husbandry with the study of wildlife, zoology, and used them interchangably.

"Mass Aggie, as it was called then, kept large herds of animals (there are still large numbers of interesting animals and programs dealing with domestic livestock located at Stockbridge School, directly across from Commonwealth Avenue), and I am sure that in the misguided usage of the day, the misconception that there was a zoo here came about.

"Therefore, my young friend, I don't think ZooMass is a derogatory phrase; rather, I think back to the history of the university's founding and say 'you're right'."

Put that way I couldn't help but stop feeling the sting of the phrase ZooMass and see the beauty of it.

So the next time someone comes up to me and refers to the University of Massachusetts campus as "the zoo," I'll just smile and say "you're right", — but you better be smiling when you say it.

New Riders have become old hat

NEW RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE
Monday, September 5
Hanger One

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

What is the role of a reviewer? I wonder whether it is my place to evaluate the politics of the performers or just the performance as it stands. Obviously, the reviewer should remain impartial. But one subject that always forces me to write about the performers politics: the direct harrassment of people as individuals by making them overly self-conscious about the way they look, act, or exist.

And so it was with the new New Riders of the Purple Sage. Playing beautiful songs like "Crazy Little Girl," dedicated to "all those crazy little girls in the audience and the men who are crazy enough to stay with them," and asking things like "Who's here to get laid?" singer John Dawson was only leading up to the latest in NRPS hit, "If You Want to Know How a Women Makes Love Look at the Way She Dances." Oh boy. And the worst part of it was that men in the audience were reacting positively to the idea.

About the performance. The new New Riders feature the bass player from the Fugs and the drummer from It's a Beautiful Day. Good deal. These guys are professionals, and so it was with violin and guitar player Rusty Gauthier. On the other hand, lead guitarist Allen Kemp had no energy and kept the ensemble from really leaving the ground. Musically the first four or five songs were pretty good but after that things went down hill. Problem? Songwriting. Dawson hasn't written a good song in about six or eight years and so they relied on the oldies to pull through. In some cases this worked out, like on "Glendale Train" and "Lonesome L.A. Cowboy" but songs like "Dirty Business" were pretty bad. I guess they can't space out like they used to. The worst though was a cover of "Friend of the Devil," which Dawson co-wrote. They added nothing to the song; it sounded like a straight cover. At least when Robert Hunter plays it you can really sense his contribution.

I've seen NRPS twice in the past seven years: the first time they were amazing the last, terrible. It was outdoors and Dawson was so burnt that he was saying "it's really great to be playing in here tonight." It was daytime outside. I'm beginning to wonder if the only way to save NRPS is to dump Dawson.

As if all this wasn't enough, there were two bands on before NRPS, one good the other terrible. Yankee Rhythm is a tight C&W band that plays basic cowboy ballads, lovesongs, heartbreak numbers — the whole bit. They were pretty entertaining. Borderline on the otherhand was a Marshal Tuckeresque band who were pretty awful.

New Riders of the Purple Sage: oldies pulled 'em through.

Get to the answers faster. With the TI-55-II.

What you need to tackle the higher mathematics of a science or engineering curriculum are more functions – more functions than a simple slide-rule calculator has.

Enter the TI-55-II, with 112 powerful functions. You can work faster and more accurately with the TI-55-II, because it's preprogrammed to perform complex calculations – like definite integrals, linear regression and hyperbolics – at the touch of a button. And it can also be programmed to do repetitive problems without re-entering the entire formula.

Included is the Calculator Decision-Making Sourcebook. It makes the process of using the TI-55-II even simpler, and shows you how to use all the power of the calculator.

Get to the answers faster. Let a TI-55-II show you how.

Get down to business faster. With the BA-35.

If there's one thing business students have always needed, this is it: an affordable, business-oriented calculator. The Texas Instruments BA-35, the Student Business Analyst.

Its built-in business formulas let you perform complicated finance, accounting and statistical functions – the ones that usually require a lot of time and a stack of reference books, like present and future value calculations, amortizations and balloon payments.

The BA-35 means you spend less time calculating, and more time learning. One keystroke takes the place of many.

The calculator is just part of the package. You also get a book that follows most business courses: the Business Analyst Guidebook. Business professors helped us write it, to help you get the most out of calculator and classroom.

A powerful combination. Think business. With the BA-35 Student Business Analyst.

Crews prepare for Cup Finals

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — A key member of Liberty's crew claimed Monday that Australia II's radical keel was a "trick" that should not be permitted in the America's Cup finals that begin Tuesday.

The Aussies downplayed the accusation, and syndicate head Alan Bond exuded confidence that he would fulfill his "magnificent obsession" with breaking America's 132-year stranglehold on the Cup.

Meanwhile, crews of both 12-meter yachts remained on land, putting the finishing touches on the boats and going over final details. Liberty skipper Dennis Conner played golf.

Moderate winds of about 15 knots were expected for the start of the best-of-seven series on Rhode Island Sound. Australia II performs best in moderate winds, while Liberty, a heavier and longer boat, should have an advantage in stronger breezes like those expected Wednesday.

On virtually the eve of the showdown with Australia II, Liberty navigator Halsey C. Herreshoff clung to his contention that the keel, with wings that extend outward, is a "peculiarity" under international 12-meter rules.

"It is a trick, and the trick is an unfair advantage to the challenger," he said, adding that the keel "shouldn't be there."

There virtually was no chance that Australia II's winged keel would be barred from the current America's Cup.

Furey is champ

The Josh Billings attracts some of the best bicyclists, canoeists, and runners in New England and the University of Massachusetts has had a hand in supplying one.

Pittsfield's Eileen Furey, 21, a UMass student who is taking this year off, was phenomenal as she won her third straight Iron Woman title (that's doing all the events). Furey posted a time of 3:08:42 good enough to finish 128 out of the 500 teams in the race.

To be sure, there are better ways to open a football season.

Ask the 1983 University of Massachusetts football team that flew to Toledo to take on the Red Rockets in the opening game Saturday and come crashing home after a 45-13 devastation at the hands of the Red Rockets.

After a summer full of weightlifting and three weeks hitting nothing but tackle dummies and teammates, the Minutemen finally got to hit someone for real. The problem was the defense was doing all the hitting.

The UMass offense failed to get on track and the defense was forced to pull double duty, staying on the field 33:22 while the offense occupied the ball for only 16:17.

The UMass line of tackle Ken Johnson, noseguard Peter Tracy and end Dave Cavanaugh lined up for 78 plays, including 65 running plays, as twelve different Toledo players rolled up a combined 334 yards on the ground.

Defense set up the first UMass touchdown when All-Yankee Conference cornerback Glenn Holden came up with a fumble on the Toledo 25 yard line. Sophomore quarterback Jim Simeone (10 for 23, 1 interception, 1 TD) hit senior tight end Gary Freker for a 14 yard gain. Duckworth Grange took the ball to the one yard line before senior Rich Jenkins took it over to give UMass a 7-0 lead that they held after one quarter.

That would be it offensively for the Minutemen, discounting a meaningless touchdown late in the fourth quarter. UMass turned the ball over four times, three of which lead to Toledo touchdowns in the second and third quarters.

After Toledo scored on the second play of the second quarter, problems started for UMass. First, Simeone was intercepted at the 48 yardline by Al Maguire who returned the ball to the UMass 21 yard line. The UMass "D" stiffened and Toledo settled for a 34 yard field goal by Ben Lee and Toledo had a 10-7 lead.

Then Simeone was hit while looking to pass and coughed up the ball and the Red Rockets recovered on the UMass 44 yard line. Quarterback Jim Kelso lead his team to paydirt in just six plays and the Minutemen found themselves down 17-7 at halftime.

Toledo opened the second half with three touchdowns before the quarter was half over and UMass was staring at a 38-7 deficit midway through the third quarter.

After UMass offense stalled on their first possession of the second half, punter Jim Sears fumbled the snap and took a one yard loss on his own 29 yardline. Kelso hit Johnny Tucker with a swing pass to the UMass eight yard line. John Walker went over the right side three plays later and the Toledo romp was on.

On their next possesion Toledo drove 38 yard on three plays and then took advantage of another Sears fumble on a punt snap and drove 33 yards on seven plays and the game was out of reach.

There's no way UMass head coach Bob Pickett could be pleased with the results of the 1983 season opener, but obviously there is room for improvement.

"We have to get better," said Pickett, now in his sixth season as top man in UMass football. "We must eliminate our mistakes. We made too many big errors against Toledo. We must achieve more balance in our attack."

This is a football team that was picked to finish no worse than second in the Yankee Conference in preseason polls and was chosen as a co-favorite with Boston University in the coaches poll, a logical question arises. Was Toledo that good or was UMass that bad?

"I'm not dwelling on this loss," said Pickett. We are still very positive about this season. "We feel we played a fine football team in Toledo."

Toledo may be a good team but chances are they're not 32 points better than the Minutemen.

"We are a young football team," said Pickett, "and I know we are going to improve. I can think of no better time to start the improvemnt than this week."

Field hockey hosts NW

A veteran University of Massachusetts field hockey team will play host to a tough Northwestern team in their season opener this afternoon at 4 p.m. at NOPE.

The stickers are an experienced team all around. Senior goalie Patty Shea, Carol Progulske, Chris Coughlin and Nancy Goode make up the defense. Pam Moyrl and All-American Megan Donnelly lead a top-notch offensive line.

Last year, UMass nipped Northwestern 1-0 in overtime.

Tonight, the men's soccer team will travel to Nickerson Field and a 7 p.m. date with Boston University in the Minutemen's season opener.

Coach Jeff Gettler will field a strong team led by Kevin Flynn and Fritz Pike.

Josh Billings - A team event for solo athletes

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

LENOX — The waiting is the worst part of the day.

At Sunday's Josh Billings triathlon, consisting of biking, canoeing, and running, the canoeists and the runners are forced to play the waiting game as they wait for their teammates in front of them to finish.

The Josh is a team relay race. The annual Berkshire event is in its seventh year and is patterned after the great Iron Man triathlons consisting of a 26 mile marathon, a 2.4 mile swim and a 130 mile bike race. There was a race like that on Cape Cod this weekend.

But I was part of the Three D's at the Josh, which is the biggie among team triathlons in Western Massachusetts and New England.

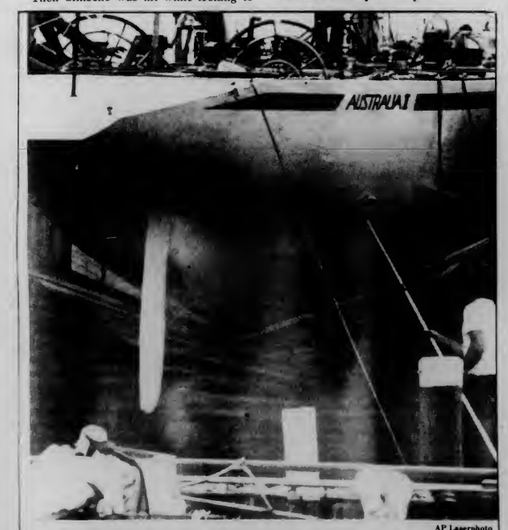
As part of the canoeing team, I waited at the launch for our biker, my father, who would paddle the short canoeing course with me.

It was hot and humid and as the first rider finished, the nervous feeling of anticipation and fear grew in my stomach.

The fear wasn't of our leg, the actual canoeing isn't that hard. It was the fear that one of the teams in our class would build up too big a lead for our canoeing and running legs to overcome.

The first handoff was made and then the first pack of ten to twenty bikers came in and handed off their wristbands (batons) and the launch area was filled with dust and people running, dropping their canoes in the water.

More and more packs came in and more and more boats left. Two boats in our class left and the area was beginning to thin out a bit.



Soon the feeling of fear turned to frustration and I realized as did many around me, that we were way behind and there was almost nothing we could do to change that.

Out on Stockbridge Bowl, where the canoeing was held, the water was choppy and the sun was hot. We handed off to my brother at the runner-canoe exchange and he could only catch one runner in our class to give us a third place finish in The Family Class. He, too, had seen the others go by him.

Still, even without a win, the excitement of the relay race is better than just a simple canoe or road race. Triathlons are unique. Bikers, canoeists and runners like them because it gives them an opportunity to participate on a team with sports that are traditionally solo sports.

Some teams have more fun and design their own uniforms and invent snazzy new team nicknames. There is 55 trophies given out in eleven classes but the rest of the 500 teams go home satisfied. For most, it's not the trophies that count (most just gather dust at home unnoticed). It's the competition. And the Josh seems to draw some of the best.

Author's Note: The author has been participating in triathlons for the last three years.

Student sculpture dedicated

By JILL LANG

A free-standing sculpture by student artist Stephen Oakley was dedicated in a noontime ceremony Tuesday with balloons music and remarks by University officials. The sculpture, entitled ' Playfully Nodding to Its Fall," is located on the west (libr ary) side of the campus pond.

Dean of Humanities and Fine Arts Murray Schwartz called the sculpture a "celebration of community efforts," and a "testament to the community that surrounds and created it."

"This sculpture is al o a perfect counterpart to the library," Schwartz said. "It (the sculpture) symbolizes durability, composition, balan e, and it lasts forever."

Chancellor Joseph Duffey called the sculpture and its dedication part of an "age old activity of creative spirit."

"There is an old tradition of people taking pride in Amherst," Duffey said.

"The restoration and well-being of our community is in the hands of all of us," he said. "It is things like this that help us to better stand together as a community."

The ceremony was originally planned as an unveiling, but vandals ripped the protective plastic off the sculpture, and spray-painted grafitti on the lower part of the sculpture. Oakley used laquer thinner to remove the damage.

Oakley said the vandalism was more of an inconvenience than anything else.

"It was inevitable," he said. "I'm just glad it came off so easily."

"Playfully Nodding to Its Fall" is Oakley's sixth large sculpture and his first piece made of steel. It is ten feet high and weighs 1100 pounds.

"This sculpture is geometric, hard and industrial," Oakley said. "But I feel this can be part of the landscape instead of alienating it."

He added that the sculpture is supposed to rust, and the strength of the sculpture will not be weakened by the rust.

Oakley received $2950 from the UMass Arts Council to cover his expenses. Oakley built the sculpture at the UMass foundry, and moved it to its present site with the help of the Physical Plant.

Senate will meet tonight

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

With only half the usual number of senators expected to attend tonight, the first meeting of the Undergraduate Student Senate this semester will be small but should be exciting according to senate Speaker Chris Sullivan.

Besides endorsing the actions of the Summer Coordinating Committee, which assumes the duties of the Senate during the summer, the Senate will decide on dates for fall nate elections, consider a motion to support a state-wide coalition for legislative reform, and possibly vote on two contradictory motions concerning the appointment of a student attorney general.

"It's going to be a busy meeting," Sullivan said. "Only 40 of 80 or 90 senators will be left after the loss of graduating senators," Sullivan said, "but the members we do have are core members who will stay active until elections."

Sullivan said the Coordinating Committee spent $9,491 out of a possible $10,000 in student money this summer.

"I think we did all right," Sullivan said. He added that the Senate would probably approve the committee's actions with little debate.

Planned dates for fall senate elections are October 6 and 7, but Sullivan said he was not sure the Senate would approve the dates.

A motion to support a state-wide initiative petition for legislative rules reform will be presented by Public Policy Committee Chair Paul Gosselin. Gosselin, who works to get student-interest bills passed by the legislature, said he is lobbying to put the reform petition on the state ballot in November.

"Right now, we have extreme difficulty getting anything to the floor, to simply get a vote on them, the way the rules are set up," he said.

"I know for a fact that a lot of our bills would have passed if they could have been voted on (in the legislature)," Gosselin said.

The petition has been stalled because State Attorney General Francis Bellotti has questioned its legality, but if a State Supreme Judicial Court allows the petition to appear on the Fall ballot, it will probably pass, Gosselin said.

Most of tonight's meeting will be taken up in debate over two motions concerning the status of the student attorney general, a source of Student Government Association (SGA) controversy in recent years. SGA co-President Tom Ahern said he is "baffled and angered" that a motion calling for him to appoint a permanent attorney general will come up before his own motion appointing six members to an attorney general selection committee.

"I suspect everything will come to a boil tonight," Ahern said.

Conti replaces Alfange as new acting provost

By DAVID MUNIZ
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Joseph Duffey Tuesday named Samuel Conti, dean of the University of Massachusetts Graduate School, new acting provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs.

"He was an excellent choice," Duffey said of the appointment. "I look forward to working with him.'" Conti replaces Dean Alfange, acting provost since former provost Loren Baritz announced his resignation last fall. Deirdre Ling, assistant chancellor, was incorrectly quoted in Tuesday's Collegian as saying David Bischoff, dean of the School of Education and acting deputy provost, had been named interim acting provost. Bischoff, as deputy provost, merely assumed the duties of interim acting provost upon Alfange's resignation.

Duffey, however, Tuesday appointed Bischoff associate to the chancellor. Bischoff will assist Conti as he moves from the Graduate School and will assume general administrative duties along with Professor Bonnie Strickland upon leaving his post as acting deputy provost, Duffey said in a memo announcing the appointment.

Conti said his new position will take priority over his post as dean for the moment.

"Right now, the provost is taking a priority over graduate affairs, but it (graduate affairs) has a very competent staff, as does the office of the provost. Hopefully, neither department will have problems." he said.

Conti, who has been at the University since 1980, is involved in many activities. They included: member UMass Executive Council; chairman, Federal Relations Committee. Member, Chancellor's Long Range Planning Committee. Advisory board, Institute for the Advanced Study in the Humanities at UMass. Advisory committee, Polymer Research Institute at UMass; director, graduate professional opportunities program, U.S. Department of Education at UMass.

As acting provost, Conti will serve only until a permanent provost is found, for whom Duffey reopened a nationwide search last week.

"I cannot say when we will have a replacement because we have to find the right person," Conti said. "Finding the right person takes time.

"There are good candidates and there are outstanding candidates for the job," he added. "The University deserves an outstanding provost because we have such an outstanding staff."

Duffey wines and dines new staff

By DAVID MUNIZ

The invited guests were treated to hot and cold hors d'oeurves, munching on stuffed mushrooms, crudites and petits fours.

Beneath overcast skies, the newest faculty and staff members of the University of Massachusetts mingled and got to know each other better and Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, — still fairly new to the University himself — picked up the tab.

Some 200 UMass staff and faculty members Tuesday attended the chancellor's annual reception for new personnel.

The guests in Duffey's backyard included those faculty and staff who have joined UMass since January, 1983.

Along with red and white wines, guests sipped punch and apple cider beneath the green and white tents set up behind the house.

Karl Stephan and his wife recently came to Amherst from Texas. When asked if they were enjoying themselves, Stephan said "Yes, we're having a wonderful time. Amherst is very nice we are very happy to be here." His wife nodded in agreement.

Other guests at the reception echoed the Stephans' sentiments. But Richard Robinet, a new member of the Physics department, seemed to be the only guest not having fun. His main complaint: "The food is terrible."

The entire event was catered by "Campus Catering," though exact cost estimates were not available. But an invoice tacked to a bulletin board in the chancellor's kitchen said the wine cost $517 — a small price to win over the hearts of the newly arrived.

Marines keep aggressive peace in Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — U.S. Marines received White House approval Tuesday to call in air strikes and British jets buzzed Beirut, roaring in over Soviet ships shadowing the U.S. fleet. Syria warned of a new Vietnam, and the Kremlin said the Marines were preparing to seize Lebanon.

No U.S. air attacks were ordered, but the United States appeared poised for deeper military involvement in Lebanon's civil war.

Two British Buccaneer fighter-bombers flew a rooftop sweep over Beirut in a show of force for the multinational peacekeepers. They thundered in from the island of Cyprus, flying over U.S. and other ships off Beirut.

The Western warships were shadowed by a Soviet missile frigate, the Leningradsky Komsomelets, and a Soviet radio intercept ship, which were both spotted about two miles away from the U.S. aircraft carrier Dwight D. Eisenhower.

In battlefield action, Syrian-backed Druse militiamen launced a three-pronged attack on the strategic mountain top town of Souk el-Gharb, held by units of the Lebanese army.

State-run Beirut radio said the soldiers were "heroically countering the attack" and claimed the rebels suffered heavy losses in lives and equipment. It gave no casualty figures.

A Marine Harrier Jet hovers above the deck of the USS Tarawa during excercises Tuesday. Other U.S. warships are anchored off the coast of Lebanon to serve as a peacekeeping force and President Reagan agreed to let Marine Commanders in Beirut request air strikes from the U.S. Fleet.

The Lebanese army has been locked in battle for the past four days with the Druse militias at Souk el-Gharb, located on a mountain ridge nine miles southeast of Beirut.

Loss of the town and a road junction to the south would allow the rebels to link up with other Druse and Shiite Moslem militias in the southern suburbs of Beirut, on two sides of the 1,200 Marine force guarding the international airport.

President Reagan agreed to let Marine commanders in Beirut request air strikes from the U.S. armada off Lebanon if they are needed to defend the peacekeeping force or if threats to Lebanon's army endangered the Marines, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said in Washington.

The 1,200 Marines on shore are backed by 2,000 Marines who arrived on Monday on ships posted off the Lebanese coast.

Conservatives urge more sanctions

WASHINGTON — Senate conservatives broke with President Reagan on Tuesday and called for further sanctions against the Soviet Union if Moscow remains unrepentant for the destruction of Korean Air Lines Flight 007.

Among those sanctions under consideration are suspension of arms control talks with the Soviets unless they retract a threat to shoot down U.S. reconnaisance planes, and a reduction in the number of Soviet diplomatic personnel.

Senate leaders of both parties had sought a quick, unanimous vote for a resolution condemning the Soviet Union for the Sept. 1 attack in which 269 passengers, including 61 Americans, were killed.

The resolution, backed by both Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee and Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, Jr., of West Virginia, is scheduled for debate and a vote on Wednesday.

Agreement had been reached with the White House on the language of the resolution which said the "cold-blooded attack...will rank among one of the most infamous and reprehensible acts of aviation history."

But Republican Sens. Jesse Helms of North Carolina and Steve Symms of Idaho and other conservatives decided those words weren't strong enough.

Helms and Symms introduced a resolution which would call on Reagan to recall the U.S. ambassador to Moscow for urgent consultations, expel all but a handful of Soviet diplomats in the United States, demand the withdrawal of all Soviet military equipment in the United States, and demand a public apology and reparations for the victims of the air attack.

Pope visits Austrian village urges peace

MARAZELL, AUSTRIA — Pope John Paul II visited an idyllic Alpine village Tuesday where he urged the faithful to pray for victims of violence and expressed sadness over the Soviet attack on a South Korean airliner that killed 269 people.

The pope ended his four-day Austrian visit by paying homage at the grave of Hungarian Cardinal Jozsef Mindszenty, a symbol of anti-communism in the 1950s, before returning to Vienna.

The Pope departed from his prepared texts to mention the victims of the Sept. 1 air disaster. He spoke at the end of an outdoor mass for 5,000 priests, nuns and friars.

The pope also visited a 14th century chapel dedicated to the Virgin Mary and knelt for a minute of prayer at Mindszenty's red marble tomb in a gesture of support for the church in the Soviet bloc.

Wells Fargo security guard nets $7M in Conneticut heist

WEST HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — A Wells Fargo armored car guard pulled a gun on his partner and boss, tied them up, gave each an injection and then carted at least $7 million in cash to an auto and fled, police said Tuesday.

The heist late Monday was the biggest since $11.1 million in cash was taken from a Sentry Armored Car warehouse in New York City nine months ago.

The FBI put out a nationwide alert and state and federal arrest warrants were issued for Victor M. Gerena, 25, a New York City native who had been working at the West Hartford depot of Wells Fargo for less than a year and a half.

The robbery occurred after the truck was unloaded. Police said Gerena pulled a gun on his partner and driver Timothy Girard, 21, and depot security manager James McKeown, 25.

Gerena threatened to "blow McKeown's head off," police Chief Francis Reynolds said. However, they apparently were unharmed.

No other Wells Fargo employees were in the one-story depot at the time.

The driver and manager told police they were bound and had coats thrown over their heads.

Gerena said he "was going to give them a shot that would put them to sleep," Reynolds said, and "both men felt Gerena administer a needle to their arms." Both got drowsy, but that could have been due to exhaustion and the injections might not have worked, he said.

FBI special agent Daniel Mahan said Gerena loaded several money bags into a car and might be trying to flee the country.

Students accidently shot in California school

COMPTON, Calif. — Five students shot and wounded in the hall of their high school on the first day of classes were bystanders who got in the way of a gang war, authorities said Tuesday.

The students were hit Monday when two or more youths fired at members of a rival gang who had fled down a hallway at Manuel Dominguez High School, police said. One of those shot was seriously injured and two others remained hospitalized Tuesday.

Six youths were booked, with four released to their parents and two turned over to juvenile authorities, police investigator Dwight Dobin said. Two weapons were recovered, but police would not describe them.

Police released few details because the suspects are juveniles.

"It's my understanding that this was a continuation of a fighting incident that happened over the weekend," said Superintendent Ted Kimbrough, the head of the Compton Unified School District.

Kimbrough said two of those arrested were students at the school.

He described all of the victims as good students. Two were cheerleaders and one was on the student council.

Arrested couple says marijuana is holy herb

SPRINGFIELD — Court officers wheeled in 103 pounds of marijuana Tuesday as testimony opened in the trial of a Monson couple who say that in their church, marijuana is the "body and blood of Christ."

David and Christine Nissenbaum, both 35, were arrestee March 20, 1981, on charges of trafficking, possession of marijuana with intent to distribute and cultivation of marijuana.

The Nissenbaums argue that smoking marijuana is part of the worship in their church - the Ethiopian Zion Coptic Church.

Nissenbaum did not address the jury Tuesday. But he told Judge William Simons before jurors entered the room: "I am a simple man. I have told the same truth since the day I was arrested."

"Intent is the issue," defense attorney Linda Thompson told a Hampden Superior Court jury during opening arguments for Mrs. Nissenbaum, her client.

Nissenbaum, who says he is a minister of the church, is acting as his own lawyer. He told Judge William Simons on Monday that marijuana is the "body and blood of Christ."

Ms. Thompson told jurors that authorities "would want you to infer," Mrs. Nissenbaum's guilt based on the quantity of marijuana confiscated.

Workers file petition against bus company

"It is immoral and illegal and we intend to vigorously pursue the fight against them and their practices."

— Dick Courtney

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

Drivers, dispatchers, cleaners, and trainers of the Pioneer Valley Transportation Authority (PVTA) buses filed a petition last week in an attempt to preserve what they feel is an infringement of their constitutional right to unionize, officials of the union representing them said yesterday.

Dick Courtney, organizing director for local 1459 of the Commercial Workers Union, affiliated with the AFL-CIO, said employees of the PVTA, which serves the greater Northampton and Amherst areas in public and private charter service, last Friday filed the petition with the National Labor Relations Board, charging their operators, Western Massachusetts Bus Lines, with unfair labor practices.

Courtney said attempts to unionize have been thwarted by bus company officials who through policy changes and firing procedures have violated fair labor practices.

Western Mass. Bus Line owner John Herlihy and dispatcher Charles McNeil were unavailable for comment.

"It (the treatment of PVTA employees) is immoral and illegal and we intend to vigorously pursue the fight against them (Western Mass. Bus Lines) and their practices," Courtney said in a phone interview Tuesday.

Four employees–Nicole Sumner, John Singler, Gordon Holzhauer, and Tom Lederle have been laid off from their jobs since the inception of the dispute early this fall, a move Courtney describes as "a deliberate attempt to single out men who are active on the union organizing committee."

Holzhauer, a two year employee of the PVTA, said he works more than 60 hours a week, is considered a part-time employee, and "that some people I have trained have ended up getting seniority over me because all of a sudden the bus lines decide that because we're unionizing, they can put anyone in our places."

He added that he and his suspended co-workers have urged their peers to boycott their bus routes, thus making those persons in management positions assume driving responsibilities. "We want to show them how valuable we are and how we deserve benefits."

Currently, Courtney and his supporters are waiting for a decision to come down from the Labor Relations Board, a decision that, according to Courtney, will be able to release the results of the loyalty survey. They will pursue matters after that decision.

New office provides info on University

"When there's no information decisions tend to be more emotional and less rational. But if we can show the legislature that we're doing a good job here. . .,we can support our budget requests."

-Robert DeLauretis, Director, office of Institutional Research and Planning

The office of Institutional Research and Planning (IRP) recently formed to provide an ongoing self-study of the University of Massachusetts.

"Institutional planning and research are very related," said Robert DeLauretis, recently appointed director of the office. "The purpose of institutional research is to understand what outcomes are being achieved and what resources are being consumed to achieve them, so we can make appropriate academic and fiscal decisions, he said.

According to DeLauretis, supplying the Office of External Affairs with data necessary to provide UMass with a positive image is an important aspect of his job.

"When there's no information decisions tend to be more emotional and less rational. People go on witch hunts. But if we can show the legislature that we,re doing a good job here, that our faculty is productive in their research and teaching...we can support our budget requests."

The information gathered by IRP will also be used to help the administration allocate funds equitably, and will be utilized as a basis for planning for the University's future.

DeLauretis said he was working on a developmental plan to help meet these goals.

The information gathered by IRP will also be used to help the administration allocate funds equitably, and will be utilized as a basis for planning for the University's future. DeLauretis said he was working on a developmental plan to help meet these goals.

"It's a five-year plan, because I think it will take that long to get the office to function the way I want it to. This office has a support function (to the University)," he said.

DeLauretis intends to circulate his report among the deans, via the provosts. Deans will have the option of passing the report along to their departmental heads.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey recently appointed DeLauretis from a field of 194 applicants following a comprehensive four-month search chaired by Professor Richard Giglio that began last March.

DeLauretis served at Rutgers University in a similar capacity for 10 years.

He has also worked for Brookdale Community College in Lincroft, New Jersey, the American College Testing Program, and the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey. He did his undergraduate work at Villanova University and received a Ph.D. in Mathematical Psychology from Purdue University.

UMass told to stop Tillson coal storage

The University of Massachusetts has been ordered to stop using the Tilson Coal area because it pollutes a nearby brook.

By BROOKE STATES
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Town Conservation Commission over the summer issued a cease-and-desist order against the University of Massachusetts delivering coal to the Tillson Farm Coal Pile, Conservation Commission Chairman Carl Carlozzi said.

"We would like to work it out with the University without recourse to the courts," said Carlozzi an associate professor of Forestry and Wildlife Management. University officials were not available for comment.

The order is the latest action in the controversy between the town and the University concerning pollution seeping into Taylor Brook from the coal pike used to heat the University. The pile is 20 years old and contains 18,000 tons of coal at its low point.

"There is no fish life left in Taylor Brook and there is a marked reduction of aquatic insects. Evidence points to the coal pile," Carlozzi said.

Farmers dowstream first complained about water problems from the brook in the late 1970's, said Peter Westover, a commission staff member. In August 1979, the State Division of Water Pollution Control took water samples from the brook; the firm of Tigh and Bond did further studies in 1982 and 1983, as did environmental science classes at the University. These latter studies "did confirm the contamination of Taylor Brook was emanating from the coal pile,", Carlozzi said.

A permanent solution to pollution from the coal pile will take four or five years., Carlozzi said. The options include changing the delivery site or having the coal transported to the University by truck from Springfield. Another possibility is to have a liner put under the pile.

The Conservation Committee has seven members who serve staggered three-year terms and are appointed by the Town Manager.

Police cited Michael A. Horowitzxfor failure to use care in turning and not having a license in possesion. He was arrested at 1:14 a.m.

In other police news: UMass Police responded to a call from the Pierpont dormitory, where a small fire was extinguished on the fourth floor and a hash pipe was confiscated. Police said the fire was caused by a shirt that was thrown on a hot lamp and not by the hash pipe.

The Fine Arts Center was broken into between 9 p.m. and 8 a.m. Sunday night, police said, but nothing was found missing. Damage to a window was $20.

CASIO NOW OFFERS STUDENT AID.

We at Casio figured you could use a little help this semester (not to mention a few extra bucks). So we're offering a $5 rebate on our FX-98 and FX-910 solar powered scientific calculators, which regularly sell for $29.95.

The FX-910 is a wallet sized unit with 48 scientific functions. The FX-98 is credit card size with 42 scientific functions.

Both feature an 8 digit mantissa with 2 digit exponent.

Both feature fractional calculations (a function not found on many comparable units). So now you can work with fractions without having to convert to decimals.

And since both units incorporate a powerful solar cell that can operate in very low light, they'll not only save you time and energy, they'll save you from ever having to buy batteries.

The FX-98 and FX-910 also come with a free application manual, "Strategies for Scientific Calculating," which will save you work by showing you shortcuts for using your calculator.

So if you think you could use a little student aid this semester, take advantage of our $5 rebate offer. And bring a Casio to class.

Housing shuffle on

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The reassignment of Housing Services staff being fully implemented this semester after two years of planning and debate, should make the system more efficient and raise the quality of staff training, according to Housing officials.

Director of Housing Services Joseph A. Zannini said that assigning housing staff according to clusters and east and west sides of campus, instead of dormitories and residential areas, will "bring services more efficiently to students with more quality in terms of training and staff."

The east side of campus includes Northeast, Sylvan, Orchard Hill and Central residential areas, and the west side includes Southwest residential area. Clusters are groups of two or more residence halls, or one large residence hall (a Southwest tower, for example).

Joseph Battista, area director for Orchard Hill/Central area, said the new plan has changed "nothing" in his area, which has been clustered for six years. The difference with the new plan is that now most residence halls on campus are clustered bringing uniformity to the system, he said.

Each side of campus will now have an assistant director for residential education, who will "insure that residence halls complement the academic purpose of the institution," according to West Side Assistant Director for Residential Education Charles Durant.

Durant said he will plan programs on academic and social issues, as well as social and leisure activities, and "make sure there are sufficient materials and personnel to run the programs.

The reorganizing plan has encountered student protest since it was unveiled in spring semester 1982, but Zannini said it has been modified by a "committee of area government students, live-in and professional staff," in answer to those protests, and is ready for full implementation.

Women on screen

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

A film festival designed to show the diversity of womens lives and the full scope of roles and situations they encounter begins tonight with the showing of Norma Rae and a*Portrait of Theresa* in the Student Union Ballroom.

The festival will run through the month of September and will feature eight films.

This week's films are part of Diversity week, and alternative to First week activities and is being sponsored by the Women's Leadership Project.

"So much of media and television today only portray women in specific roles either as superwoman or little dolls who get what they want by being cute," said Karen Carmichael of Brown Woman's Leadership Project, one of the sponsors of the pogram.

"All these films show women in their entirety as competent and exciting people as well as honoring their achievements,"(she said).

Tonight's films will be shown at 7 p.m. and again at 11 p.m. and Portrait of Theresa will be shown at 9 p.m. about a woman in Cuba after the revolution.

On September 22, the Festival will introduce a pair of films about two prominent black female artists. Lady Sings The Blues is the story of the famous blues singer Billy Holiday, and A Portrait of Maya Angelou is an hour long documentary on the famous poet.

Computer to link 5 colleges

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

The director of Hampshire College library services is supervising a project which, upon completion, will computerize and connect the libraries of the five colleges.

Gail Carpenter, director of the program, said the computer link will probably be operational late next year, even though the Hampshire College library already has their computer, and the University of Massachusetts library is expected to get theirs in January.

The new system will be the result of three years of planning, Carpenter said, and will initially cost between $1 million and $2 million. The system will make all the resources of the five college libraries available on a single computer terminal, she said.

"Students and faculty already have access to all our materials, in terms of borrowing," Carpenter said. Now reference will be simpler, because the libraries will share one record for each file, and have a file telling the user where they can find a copy of the material they are seeking.

Carpenter said the initial cost of about $2 million would only pay for the hardware and software, and that in the future, more money would be needed to pay for staff and operational costs.

The initial funds for the program came from private grants.

Carpenter said the process of loading files from four libraries (Hampshire's has been done) will take at least another full year, even though all five libraries will have their systems set up in three months.

Other advantages to the system are the fact that the reference work will be shared and that computers are easier to edit with and organize a card catalog, Carpenter said.

"And of course, it's going to make finding anything much easier," she added.

Women rely on sterilization

NEW YORK AP - American women who practice birth control rely most often on sterilization of themselves or their male partners, with the pill the second most common method, according to a nationwide survey of women aged 18 to 24.

Results of the survey suggest that 11.6 million couples depend on sterilization of either the male or the female. Some 10 million women use birth-control pills.

An analysis of the survey questionnaires indicates that 33.4 million women use some form of birth control. The condomn is the third most popular method, with some 4½ million couples relying on it.

Approximately 2.3 million women use IUDs; 1.9 million use the diaphragm.

More than three million sexually active women do not use any form of birth control.

Take Charge At 22.

In most jobs, at 22 you're near the bottom of the ladder.

In the Navy, at 22 you can be a leader. After just 16 weeks of leadership training, you're an officer. You'll have the kind of job your education and training prepared you for, and the decision-making authority you need to make the most of it.

As a college graduate and officer candidate, your Navy training is geared to making you a leader. There is no boot camp. Instead, you receive professional training to help you build the technical and management skills you'll need as a Navy officer.

This training is designed to instill confidence by first-hand experience. You learn by doing. On your first sea tour, you're responsible for managing the work of up to 30 men and the care of sophisticated equipment worth millions of dollars.

It's a bigger challenge and a lot more responsibility than most corporations give you at 22. The rewards are bigger, too. There's a comprehensive package of benefits, including special duty pay. The starting salary is $17,000—more than most companies would pay you right out of college. After four years, with regular promotions and pay increases, your salary will have increased to as much as $31,000.

As a Navy officer, you grow, through new challenges, new tests of your skills, and new opportunities to advance your education, including the possibility of attending graduate school while you're in the Navy.

Don't just take a job. Become a Navy officer, and take charge. Even at 22.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Russians are not to be trusted

In one short murderous moment, a Soviet pilot not only shot down a Korean Airlines 747 Jumbojet and killed 269 people, but he also shot down any reason for the nuclear freeze movement to continue its existence. He also gave a greater boost for the smaller, yet more credible Peace Through Strength movement.

Is there any reason left on earth to think we sould enter into such a risky freeze based on mutual verifiability with such lying murderers? No, not now or ever. Reductions, yes; but a freeze which would only give the Soviet barbarians an advantage in nuclear weaponry should be unthinkable.

Steven P. Barrett

One of the sweet-sounding arguments used by the nuclear freeze advocates is that the Russian people don't want war. Who, however, in this, and past administrations ever said the Russian people wanted war with the United States? No one.

The Soviet dictatorship, however, does believe in the final showdown between the Communists and the Capitalists. They are now, and have, been preparing their nation for war. What else could explain their massive arms build-up, extensive civil defense systems and cowardly paranoia?

When a burglar walks down a crowded street, he doesn't show off his tools he conceals them, and most often in a very cautious manner.

This particular paranoia should help explain to the world why the Soviets are terrified of true and honest verification, and why they shot down the civilian airliner. But this is no excuse for cold-blooded murder.

According to Soviet General-Major A.S. Milovidov, "A thermonuclear war would be fatal to capitalism. Marxist-Leninist teaching on war and politics is applicable to the nuclear age." Milovidov gave this statement in 1975 while serving as Faculty Head of Marxist Leninist Philosophy at the Soviet Union's foremost "war college," the Lenin Military-Political Academy.

In 1972, Milovidov edited a publication titled The Philosophical Heritage of V.I. Lenin and Problems of Contemporary War. In it was a phrase which should enlighten nuclear freeze advocates: "Nuclear war has *not ceased to be an instrument of politics, as is claimed by the overwhelming majority of representatives of pacifist antiwar movements in the bourgeois world." (*emphasis mine)

Several examples of using the threat of nuclear war by the Soviets come to mind. In 1962, the Soviets under Nikita Khruschev successfully blackmailed President Kennedy into agreeing not to make any further effort to overthrow or undermine Castro's regime in Cuba in exchange for removing the nuclear missiles on that island. What may have seemed like a small concession then has now come back to haunt us in a very big way.

Would it surprise anyone to find the Soviets placing nuclear missiles in Nicaragua so they could blackmail us into backing off on our committment to placing the Pershing II and cruise missiles in Western Europe? Andropov would have to be completely daft not to even contemplate it. The timing of the Sandinista takeover, increased Soviet presence in Central America, American promises to place the Pershings and cruise missiles in Western Europe, and massive peace rallies (orchestrated by and for the benefit of the Soviets) in America and Western Europe is just too coincidental to miss.

Many people are unaware, simply naive, or worse, intellectually dishonest about the true nature of the Soviet government. It is a brutal dictatorship which views the world as a massive chess game to plot their schemes to permanently checkmate the Uited States. If they should ever accomplish this feat, the whole world will be turned into a massive Gulag Lest anyone forget, the Soviet government, ever since its takeover in 1917, has killed over one hundred million of its own people through purges, concentration-labor camps, etc.

This recent episode of shooting down an unarmed airliner should dispel any doubts about the warlike nature of the Soviet government. It just doesn't give a damn about human life. It has brutally repressed its own populace, and others abroad. It exports terrorism, and it practices terrorism at home. According to reports about the average Russian's view about the incident, it appears as if the propaganda apparatus of the Soviet government is working very well.

The Soviet Union is totally unlike most civilized nations; and we had all better get used to it. In many respects, it isn't even civilized.

Lifeguarding - fun in the sun?

Most people seem to think that spending the summer as a lifeguard would be a dream come true. What could be more relaxing than sitting back and basking in the sun, day after day? What could be more rewarding than being a friendly, but firm role model for several hundred cute, charmingly mischievious tykes? And what could possibly be more glamorous than perching on a guardstand wearing mirrored sunglasses and coconut-scented suntan oil while suavely twirling a whistle? Nothing, right?

Well, to be quite honest, lifeguarding was a dream. To be more specific, my fourth summer at a ritzy, private pool club was a terminal, waking nightmare.

Mining splinters out of a toddler's left foot was disquieting. Scattering Ajax around the women's room the way Peter Pan sprinkled magic fairy dust was distasteful. And scraping mashed French fries off the snack bar's concrete floor with my bare fingers was absolutely disgusting. But worse, far worse than performing all of these despicable tasks was constantly having to fend off the various ghouls that inhabited this particular swim club:

Elizabeth Luciano

The Blue-Faced Baby: This diminutively sized, deceptively innocent-looking creature is obsessed with trying to extract pure oxygen from pool water. Not realizing that it has been equipped with lungs as opposed to gills, the Blue-Faced Baby will determinedly plunge itself to the depths of the baby pool, (affectionately dubbed "the cesspool"). It continues to submerge against the express wishes of its parents and despite frequent interruptions by the lifeguard. Clever Blue-Faced Babies have been known to remain underwater just long enough to alarm everybody, then lift their faces above the water surface with expressions of jollity.

The Thing that Wouldn't Grow Up (Female): This saccarinely adorable ogre is recognizable by her Tracy Austin-type ponytails, which she pulls very tightly, so as to smooth out the little lines around her eyes. Thanks to tennis and aerobic dancing, she is admittedly in very good shape. However, the Thing that Wouldn't Grow Up carries this to extremes by galavanting around in miniskirts and drinking Shirley Temples. Her favorite periodical is Seventeen, despite the fact that she passed that milestone birthday a quarter of a century ago.

The Thing that Wouldn't Grow Up (Male): This demon is harmless, but can often become extremely annoying. He wears nylon bikini bathing suits nine sizes too small, which cut off the circulation in his legs. He staggers under forty pounds of solid gold neck chains. Not noted for intelligence, The Thing that Wouldn't Grow Up will play tennis until he drops from exhaustion and has to be packed in ice to prevent his internal organs from frying. In three feet of water, he will saunter up to the female lifeguard and ask, a la Steve Martin and Dan Aykroyd;

"If I drown, will you give me mouth-to-mouth?' '

"I couldn't--I have trenchmouth," is the polite reply.

"It might clear up," This nervy fellow will suggest. The best way to discourage the Thing that Wouldn't Grow Up is to tell him, whether it be fact or fiction, that you have Herpes Simplex I.

The Terrifying Trustee: With the exception of one or two very nice people, the Trustee sees him or herself as being equal in importance to George Washington and God. Although the Trustee believes him or herself to be witty, friendly, fun-loving and astute, in reality, he or she is boring, arrogant, stupid beyond belief, and usually just plain obnoxious. Hardly a paragon of virtue, the Terrifying Trustee is a petty thief who delights in stealing Fudgesicles from the snack bar.

Although I've successfully defended myself against all of these fiends and savages, the horror has yet to wear off. I sleep fitfully, and my roommate says I mutter,

"Stop running! One bounce on the diving board. You're benched for ten minutes." in my sleep.

At least I have a decent tan.

A little courtesy would help

To the Editor,

This morning a strange thing happened. I was slammed in the head by a heavy wooden door and then accused of not appreciating how 'nice' someone had just been to me for holding the door.

It started out like a typical morning. I went to buy some coffee before starting work. My hands were full of things to carry as I left the Whitmore dining shop. I assume it must have looked like a help-needed situation. But Whitmore is well built for using elbows to open exit doors. You just push.

This morning however, I was treated to some 'social politeness.' Someone walking briskly in front of me turned slightly, must have assumed that I needed help and therefore, he 'should' hold the door for me. Only he didn't bother actually to hold the door open long enough. He seemed too busy to be concerned over such details. I was halfway through when he let it go.

It smacked me heavily on the forehead and chest. He turned briefly, unconcernedly. "I'm sorry," he said and immediately turned away again. He continued walking, waiting neither for a reply to his door slamming behavior or even to see if, in fact, I had been injured. My response was directed to his back. I briefly said, "It would have been better if you hadn't held the door."

A short moment later I came out of a temporary shock. The dripping coffee staining my skirt made me realize my head hurt badly and was possibly bruising. I also realized that this person, so nattily dressed in a white shirt, tie, grey pants was busily into his own isolated world. His sense of social duty was a half intended, unconcerned act. In so doing he had actually 'attacked' me.

"Excuse me, excuse me," I called several times to get his attention. "I don't think you realize what you did."

He turned on me angrily. "Yes, I do know what I did. I won't be nice the next time!" he growled.

"That's not the point...," I tried to say.

"That is the point," he insisted, cutting me off sharply and immediately disappearing into the safety of the stairwell doors.

I was left with a soggily dripping bag, a bruising forehead and the incredible smack of utter unconcerned rudeness slapping across my face.

This man seemed to be dressed as an administrator--one who represents the University and the State. The way in which he dealt with me was childishly defensive and small. I am appalled that anyone should act in such an impolite and unprofessional manner, much less one who pretends to such respectability.

The American 12 meter yacht, Liberty (US40) and Australia II (KA-6) jog for position at the start of yesterday's America's Cup races off Newport.

A lack of wind halts the America's Cup series races

NEWPORT,R.I. (AP) — Liberty and Australia II, who waited 18 months for the right to battle for the America's Cup, were laid up one more day Tuesday when winds proved too light to start their best-of-seven series on Rhode Island Sound.

Now scheduled for Wednesday, the race was postponed after officials twice attempted to start it, but failed to get the necessary wind.

The 12-meter yachts actually did begin to race at 12:10 p.m. EDT, but the wind shifted immediately after Liberty took a two-second lead and officials had to make a course change.

After waiting nearly two hours, skippers Dennis Conner of Liberty and John Bertrand of Australia II moved toward the line with hopes of getting under way, but the winds slipped to 5-7 knots. The America's Cup Committee, which according to the rules had until 2:10 p.m. EDT to start the race, raised the final postponement flag at that time.

The race was to start in generally northerly winds of 8-10 knots. Under the 5-7 knot conditions the race probably could not have been completed within the five-hour, 15-minute time limit.

The National Weather Service forecast windy conditions for Wednesday with rain likely and temperatures in the 60s.

The postponement left Australia II, with its radical winged keel, still an unproven factor against U.S. competition. The boat compiled a 48-6 record this summer against six foreign challengers.

Liberty posted a 34-16 mark in eliminating two other U.S. boats in summer-long trials.

The United States has never lost a series in the competition, which began when the schooner America beat a fleet of British ats around the Isle of Wight in 1851. American boats have won 74 of 82 races in the 132 years of the competition.

Australia II, installed by British bookmakers as a slight favorite to win the Cup in the 25th defense by the Americans, was the center of controversy most of the summer. The New York Yacht Club, holder of the Cup, tried to havet an international body declare that the boat exceeded the 12-meter limit because of its unusual keel.

The NYYC dropped its protest late last month, just days before the International Yacht Racing Union was to consider a request to have its Keel Boat Technical committee take up the question.

That same week, the NYYC was accused by the Australian syndicate of trying to have the head of a Dutch tank testing firm sign an affidavit saying Ben Lexcen had help with the design of the 12-meter yacht when he was in Holland having models tested in 1981.

Under America's Cup rules, boats must be dsigned by citizens of the participating nations.

Football stops boy

JUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Kyle Burns, a 13-year-old, straight-A student, is repeating the seventh grade because he thinks it will help him become a bigger, better football player.

His father agrees with him, but his mother doesn't. Linda Burns calls the move "academic suicide."

"If he gets hurt, or something goes wrong, it's been a wasted year," she said. "He always has been a good student. And he's so much bigger than the kids he's playing with now; he's a monster. He could hurt someone."

But school officials say there's nothing they can do to prevent the youngster from staying back.

At 5-foot-11½, and 155 pounds, Burns already is as big as most of the varsity players at Northwest High School, where he wants to play football someday. The aim is for Burns to help Northwest win more games and get a shot at a college athletic scholarship.

Minutewomen outlast NW 1-0

Breakaway goal stands up for UM

Stickers face Ohio State tomorrow

By JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team started its season on a positive note as they shut out the Northwestern Wildcats, 1-0 yesterday at NOPE.

Coach Pam Hixon feels her team played well, despite some first game "jitters."

UMass scored the game's only goal on a breakaway in the first half. Junior forward Pam Moryl took a pass from forward Sue Packard, and shot it past Northwestern goalie Robin Clark. From that point on, the game turned into a series of exchanges between the two teams.

"After that goal we hung back, and that is not our usual philosophy," Hixon said.

Statistically, the Wildcats outplayed UMass, according to Hixon. Northwestern outshot UMass by 11-6, and UMass was also outnumbered in corners, 16-13.

"We panicked on defense, and allowed them too many opportunities," Hixon said. Minutewoman goalie Patti Shea, who has been having trouble with her back, "played great" Hixon said. "She was quick and on top."

The most exciting play of the game came at 30:00 in the second half. Shea and the rest of the Minutewomen defense had faced a flurry of shots from the Northwestern offense and Shea came out to make a sliding save. The ball deflected to a stick of a Wildcat forward, and as the shot headed for the net, defender Nancy Goode made a lunging stick save, thus preserving the shutout.

"Nancy played well, especially in the second half," Hixon said.

The Minutewomen defeated Northwestern by the same score last season, although the win last season did not come until 6:09 in overtime.

"It's nice to start the season with a win," Hixon said. "But we have to get over these early jitters, and learn to play under pressure. Towards the end of the game, we were playing bash-ball instead of passing like we should.

Hixon has a what she termed a "veteran squad" playing for her this season.

"I plan to use the sub rule to my advantage, and play as many people as I can," she said.

Thursday, the Minutewomen will take on Ohio State, on the NOPE field, at 3 p.m. This game does not appear on the athletic schedule.

The last time UMass played Ohio State, a Big Ten team, was two"I expect that we'll play well against them," Hixon said.

BU knots UM soccer on controversial goal

By TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

There is a familiar expression in the sports world - "Tie is like kissing your sister". Well, the UMass men's soccer team got a peck on the cheek at the hands of Boston University last night as both teams battled to a 2-2 tie at Nickerson field in Boston.

The artificial turf led to a fast-paced first half in the season opener for the Minutemen. UMass controlled the game early using crisp, sharp passes. At 21:57 of the first half, the dominance paid off as John Brigham took a Fritz Pike pass and deposited it in the net for the first goal of the season.

BU came back after the UMass goal and put some pressure on the defense, but junior goalie Donald Donahue responded and held the Terriers scoreless in the first half.

Boston University finally registered a Terrier goal on the scoreboard at 51:49 of the second half. Midfielder Greg Cuddy knotted the game at 1-1 with an assist from Tom Bianco. But less than three minutes later, that would change.

Once, again, it was Brigham and Pike doing the damage for the Minutemen. Brigham found Pike in the center of the field about 30 yards away from the goal. Pike then laid a picture-perfect pass to senior forward Kayvan Khatami, who promptly gave UMass a 2-1 lead by skidding a shot on the artificial turf, and the ball didn't stop until it hit the back of the net.

It looked like UMass was on its way to victory number one when, at 62:57, a questionable call went against the Minutemen as one of the players was called for pushing in the penalty area. UMass argued but to no avail and Terrier midfielder Greg Swanson knotted the game at 2-2 on a penalty kick. The pace was kept up to its frantic level but neither team could score and the game went into overtime.

BU took charge in both 10 minute overtimes, out shooting the Minutemen 7-2, but Donahue played well in the nets and kept BU at bay. By the time the final whistle blew, two tired teams walked away with a 2-2 tie.

Donahue was the star for the Minutemen in their season premeire, stopping 7 BU shots - while playing the entire game, 110 minutes long. Brigham and Pike also played well, Brigham scoring a goal and an assist and Pike adding two assists.

All in all, this can be considred a moral victory for the Minutemen. It looks like they had the game if it weren't for the controversial penalty kick. The Minutement finished at 3-7 on the road last year, so an opening day tie with a tough BU team can't be all bad for coach Jeff Gettler.

UMass, ranked ninth in the New England pre-season polls, won't see their home field until the first of October, when they take on Vermont. Until then its Southern Connecticut as their next foe on the 16th. UMass won't be looking for another kiss from good ol' little sis — heck no, they want a little action.

Think you've got troubles?

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

And you thought you had problems. Ha.

Consider the situation of second-year University of Massachusetts men's tennis coach Bob Szlosek is in.

It was bad enough when Stu Goodman, last years' prized freshman recruit, and potentially this season's top player was hospitalized for ten days this summer with a virus and by doctors' orders will not be able to compete intercollegiately for UMass until next spring. Pile on the fact that, one, Steve Jordan, last spring's number two singles player, had a shack that he was constructing collapse on top of him, putting him out of action indefinitely.

Two, Rich Lindgren, the number four singles player was ruled academically ineligible. And three, doubles specialist Dave Salem cannot compete due to class conflicts. Considering this, it is easy to understand Szlosek's peril. Hey, lesser men would be prime candidates for the funny farm.

The number one singles player at the present moment is Dave Singer, last years' number seven singles player. The rest of the lineup is in the air. The first match is today on the Boyden courts against the University of Rhode Island at 3:00 p.m.

Spikers hope to junk the opening jitters

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

It's a natural thing that every athletic team experiences at the start of the year. It can ruin your season opener or help you to overcome.

Nervousness or the jitters, as some people say, can affect a team's performance on opening night.

Coach Elaine Sortino hopes her young volleyball team are more excited than nervous as they travel to Springfield to take on American International College tonight at 7 p.m.

"I really don't know what to expect from AIC," said Sortino. "We beat them last year. They were good close games at the Central Connecticut tourney and they have most of their squad back."

It looks to be a battle.

UMass is not without their leaders, however. Although the starting lineup is not cast in stone (in other words it's still up in the air), three players look to start tomorrow for the Minutewomen.

Juniors Joanne Siler, Kirsten Smith and setter Patty Grant (the team has no seniors on the roster) should be the base for the team's 5-1 setup (five hitters or spikers and one setter).

The rest of the positions are up for grabs as Sortino will attempt to find six players that blend well together.

"We look good. In our scrimmage against Mount Holyoke, we were playing well," said Sortino.

Another spiker that will probably see plenty of playing time is sophomore Sally Mahar, a real powerful player. And chances are that one of the four freshmen on the squad will grab a piece of the action.

However, Sortino is confident in all her players and their play. "I feel that we have 10 players, any one of whom can play (at any time)," she said.

Defensively we're picking up more balls than last year. We're touching and blocking more. That's a good sign." Overall, we're stronger than we've been."

The Minutewomen won't have much of a chance to rest as they host their own UMass Invitational this Friday and Saturday. Among the teams at the tourney will be Occential College from California. Although their a smaller school than UMass, volleyball enthusiasts have to be wary of California volleyball. It's tough.

Tough for AIC and the rest of the Invitational field is that UMass has recovered from pre-season injuries. Leslie Smith and Ellen Deady previously on crutches are off and running.

"We are all healthy and strong," said Sortino. She attributes some of that to UMass' early morning weight training (7 am) and hopes that the training will help the Minutewomen in early morning tourneys.

The coach hopes that their strength and the poise of the team can overcome the first night jitters and topple AIC to start their season without a hitch.

Administrator could leave

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Rosemarie Strother says she still receives the same pay for performing the duties of the Associate Director of the Office of Planning and Budget despite currently handling the duties of a staff assistant making less than half her salary.

Strother, who filed a sexual discrimination charge against the University of Massachusetts last May, said the new job description given to her by Paul Page, acting director of the office of Planning and Budget, requires her to perform many of the duties previously handled by last year's budget director's staff assistant.

Strother's current salary, $43,300, remains intact despite being given, in her opinion, a "demotion" by Page over the summer. Her "demotion", she said, is the result of the discrimination charge filed by her which specifically names John L. DeNyse, vice-chancellor for Administration and Finance.

The staff assistant to last year's Office of Planning and Budget's Director Marie Reid, received $17,500, Strother said. Page was unavailable for comment and verification.

Strother said she feels her current situation utilizes a "poor use of resources" and has "completely and totally demoralized" her.

"I try to make myself useful, I used to be very involved...but (the University) has done nothing but kick me," she said.

"I prefer to stay at the University. I've put 17 years of my life into it. But, it may be impossible for me to stay on," she said.

Strother's situation parallels that of Reid, who announced last November she was resigning as director of the office, effective in January.

Reid cited racial discrimination as her reason for leaving.

At the time, Duffey convinced Reid to take a leave of absence for one year, while still receiving her full pay. Heavy criticism was subsequently levied against the Chancellor when Reid said she would take the leave, but probably would not return to the office.

Many professors, particularly faculty senators, expressed outrage at Duffey's granting of Reid her pay when she would not be performing any of the functions in her job description.

Strother claims her new duties are "a very major difference" from her previous responsibilities which included writing the first draft of the operating budget of the University.

Currently, her major duty entails the distribution of allocated trustfunds, a function which Reid's staff assistant performed last year, at a considerable lower pay scale, Strother said.

Reknowned hypnotist Ken Weber performed before a packed house at the S.U.B. Tuesday night. Weber put on a startling and entertaining show which included ESP demonstrations as well as the hypnosis of 12 UMass students. Weber kept the students on stage for an hour and twenty minutes, during which time he convinced them that they were too hot, too cold and too sleepy. He also made one student a martian, another a pac-man and one a "Greek god." He administered electric shocks, convinced the girls on stage that they had lost their belly buttons, and then made them believe that the entire audience was naked. The show was greeted extremely enthusiastically by the crowd, who showed their appreciation through loud and frequent applause.

Few 'no-shows' leave UMies in the street

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

An unexpectedly low number of "no shows" at the University of Massachusetts resulted in a large amount of students being without housing, a Housing Official said Wednesday.

"A lot more students showed up this year," said Joseph Zannini, executive director of Housing Services, noting there were 235 "no shows" last year as opposed to 160 now. He said he thought that as a result of this decrease there are approximately 200 students still without housing, but he could not give an exact amount.

However, Zannini said all of the students the Housing Office had contracts which now have housing, while those who came late, didn't return their housing contract cards, or didn't pay their bills on time, have problems.

"We've been able to deal with all the students that were cleared by the University, and had gone through the procedure, and those we had a contractual responsibility to," he said.

The third and fourth year students are without housing because in the spring they had planned to live off-campus. Now, he said, "they found that none is available. They have the money but there is no room."

However, Zannini said these students, or at least the third year students, should be taken care of by Friday.

"We certainly want to see if we can help them even though we have no contractual responsibility. They may not appreciate it (the situation and its temporary solutions), but at least they can stay at the University," he said.

"We have housed all the freshmen who wanted housing, and all sophomores with which we had no contractual responsibilities except for 40 sophomore males," Zannini said.

Zannini said the temporary solutions to the housing problems are living with friends in off-campus apartments, in a hotel while looking around for vacancies, or in "swing spaces." Swing spaces include rooms on the fourth floor of the Campus Center Hotel, rooms shared with R.A.s who would receive extra pay for their hospitality and rooms to be shared with other students. These students would receive a small rebate for their troubles.

Thirty students out of the original 60 are still in the Campus Center Hotel, and should be there for another week, Zannini said. He said he did not know how many students were without swing spaces, and said Friday the Housing Office would have a good estimate of the juniors without housing.

SGA still searching for A.G.

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

In its first meeting of the year, the Undergraduate Student Senate picked up where it left off last year, — debating over procedure for appointing a student Attorney General.

With only 25 of a possible 90 Senators present at the meeting, sharp debate centered on whether Student Government Association co-President Tom Ahern should appoint acting Attorney General Dakin Ferris to the position permanently, or whether Ahern should instead reopen the Attorney General selection process and choose a permanent Attorney General from that committee's recommendations later in the fall.

The Senate was supposed to have approved Ahern's choice for permanent Attorney General at its last meeting of the spring semester, and senators last night debated the reasons why Ahern never made his choice from the recommendations of a search committee at that time.

A motion by SGA Treasurer Eric Nitzsche calling for Ahern to appoint Ferris permanent Attorney General was protested by Ahern, former SGA President Jim Murphy (now a commuter senator) and many other senators for two hours, but was eventually passed by a vote of 14-0.

Ahern's supporters, including the entire Third World Caucus, walked out of the meeting when the Senate decided to vote on the motion.

SGA co-President Charlene Allen, a member of the Third World Caucus, said the caucus walked out, because "we felt that the tactics used were inappropriate and disrespectful."

Murphy said he thought Nitzsche's motion was "a backdoor move to force the president to make a decision."

But Nitzsche said he made the motion "because I think it's important to have a permanent attorney general."

Ahern said he plans to appoint a permanent attorney general, but only after another search process is completed. The Senate will vote on Ahern's motion which ap-

Mideast strife continues as druse artillery batters town

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Druse artillery set a Christian militia stronghold in the Chouf Mountains ablaze Wednesday, but the Islamic militiamen failed in another attempt to drive the Lebanese army out of a mountaintop town overlooking the U.S. Marine base in Beirut.

As Saudi and U.S. diplomats tried in Damascus to arrange a cease-fire in the 11-day-old resumption of Lebanon's civil war. Syria and radical Palestinian factions vowed retaliation if U.S. planes intervene in support of the Lebanese army.

In another civil war development, the Christian radio station charged that Druse militiamen massacred 84 Christians last Friday in the mountain town of Maasser el-Chour. Druse leaders denied the claim, and it was impossible to prove or disprove it.

The Druse artillery pounded Mechref, a hilltop stronghold of the Christian Phalange Party's militia 10½ miles south of Beirut, with an intense barrage at midday. A large fire and thick columns of smoke could be seen an hour later.

Mechref overlooks the coastal highway from the capital to south Lebanon, and the Phalangist have a major barracks in a high school there. But it could not be learned if it was hit.

Earlier Wednesday, the Lebanese army's U.S.-trained 8th Brigade held fast to the mountaintop town of Souk el-Gharb, which commands the U.S. Marine zone at Beirut's international airport.

Soldiers there said they defeated a three-prong Druse onslaught during the night, inflicting heavy losses in lives and equipment on the militiamen. It was the fourth day of attacks on the town, which also is within range of President Amin Gemayel's suburban palace and the nearby residence of U.S. Ambassador Robert S. Dillon.

Since capture of Souk el-Gharb would give the Druse another position from which to attack the U.S. Marines, there was speculation that it could become the first test of President Reagan's new policy, announced Tuesday, allowing American naval and air support of the Lebanese army if an attack on it posed a threat to the Marines.

Three convicted of murder, theft in hold-up

GOSHEN, N.Y.
Three radicals who denounced their trial as a charade were convicted Wednesday of murder and robbery in the $1.6 million Brink's armored car hold-up in 1981 in which two police officers and a guard were killed.

Judith Clark, 33, David Gilbert, 38, and Kuwasi Balagoon, 36, boycotted the proceedings and were not in court when the verdict was announced.

The jury deliberated only 2½ hours before finding the defendants guilty on all charges.

The foreman of the jury stood and pronounced "guilty" 21 times, finding each of the three guilty on three charges of murder and four of robbery.

The defendants face up to 25 years to life in prison when they are sentenced Oct. 14.

After refusing to participate in most of their two-month trial, the defendants gave closing arguments Tuesday and labeled the robbery a just act in their "war" for black liberation.

But Kenneth Gribetz, the Rockland County district attorney, said, "Politics has no place in this court. We're guided by the laws of the state of New York and not barbarism."

Boston boasts new slogan

BOSTON (AP) — "I love Boston" didn't make it. Nor did word plays on baked beans and serod. As of Wednesday, the city's new slogan is "Boston: Bright from the Start."

The phrase was picked from 57,760 entries in a 2½-month long campaign to come up with a catchy name for the city in five words or less.

Regina Hersey, 27, who edits two newsletters for a small publishing house, stammered with excitement when her slogan was unveiled at a news conference Wednesday at the Copley Plaza Hotel.

"I didn't expect this at all," she said, with a non-stop broad smile. "I'm just awestruck to be here.

"I hope it will convince my boss that I'm a good headline writer."

Mrs. Hersey, who is Austrian and moved to Boston four years ago with her American husband, receives $5,000 for her effort.

New private student loan program ready to go at Brandeis University

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Student Loan Marketing Association, the nation's largest investor in student loans, announced Wednesday it has picked Brandeis University for its first commitment to provide financing for non-insured loans.

The association, also known as Sallie Mae, said it will provide Brandeis, located in Waltham, Mass., with a $2.5 million line of credit to make loans under the university's innovative tuition prepayment plan.

The tuition prepayment plan at Brandeis enables parents to borrow funds to prepay the full four-year cost of a college education and freezes that cost at the tuition rate in effect during their children's freshman year.

Brandeis will make loans to parents using the $2.5 million line of credit. The loans, which will be made at an 11½ percent fixed interest rate, will be repaid over eight years in monthly installments.

Sallie Mae President Edward A. Fox said additional lines of credit may be offered to other colleges and universities with similar programs.

Cardinal Medeiros returns to coronary care unit after angina pains

BOSTON (AP) — Cardinal Humberto Medeiros, 67, moved back to a coronary care unit at St. Elizabeth's Hospital early Wednesday after feeling pains in his left shoulder, and physicians diagnosed his condition as angina.

He was treated with nitroglycerin when an electrocardiogram showed some changes in his heart rhythm, according to Frank Sidlauskas, a spokesman for the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Boston. The cardinal was resting comfortably afterward and was free of symptoms, Sidlauskas said.

Medeiros was scheduled to be released from St. Elizabeth's Hospital later this week, but Sidlauskas said that no longer seemed likely.

Several times since the start of the summer, church officials have denied the cardinal was considering retirement.

Medeiros had been moved to a regular ward Tuesday while recovering from a mild heart attack he suffered early last week.

The cardinal has diabetes and hypertension. It is his sixth hospitalization in the past 18 months.

Born Oct. 6, 1915, in Arrifes, the Portuguese Azores, Medeiros came with his parents as a teen-ager to Fall River, Mass., where he was later ordained a priest.

Yom Kippur: a Jewish day of atonement

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

For the Jewish people, it is a day of atonement, a time for forgiveness for sins committed before God and against one another. It is Yom Kippur, and it begins Friday evening.

"Yom Kippur means 'day of atonement' (in Hebrew)," UMass Hillel Rabbi Saul Perlmutter explained. "The notion of repentance is not only to feel sorry but to resolve to act differently. Although it's a serious holiday, it's not sad.

"It enables us to start a new year with a clean slate."

Yom Kippur falls on the 10th day after Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year, that begins 10 days of repentance.

"It's a day that is traditionally observed by fasting and meditation," Perlmutter said. "People look at their lives and assess where they are and where they would like to be."

All holiday services, sponsored by Hillel, are free and open to the public, except for the "Break-the-Fast" for which there is a $2.50 charge, payable by noon today at the Hillel Office; room 302 Student Union Building, or the Kosher Dining Commons in Southwest Residential Area. The meal will be served in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union Building, and all other activities will take place in the Ballroom.

SCHEDULE OF SERVICES, YOM KIPPUR 1983
7 p.m. Friday Kol Nidrei service
10 a.m. Saturday service
3 p.m. reading and discussion, Book of Jonah
4 p.m. group exercise, "Looking back, looking ahead"
5:30 p.m. Neilah service
7 p.m. "Break-the-Fast" following above service.

Conflict to be discussed at teach-in tonite

By BROOKE STATES
Collegian Staff

The conflict in Central America will be the focus of a teach-in at 8 p.m. tonight in the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts. Participants include Charles Clements, an American doctor who practiced his profession behind guerilla lines in El Salvador.

Other speakers include Janet Schneck of the North American Congress on Latin America and Colonel Samuel Dickens of the Council for Inter-American Security. The U.S. Department of State is sending Peter Sarros, a representative of the department's Central American desk.

"This is a good opportunity for people to hear both sides justify their positions on U.S. involvement in El Salvador," said Peter Brown, program director for the UMass Commuter Collective, who is sponsoring the teach-in. About 70 percent of the program's $1,800 cost came from fundraising, he said.

Clements is a former pilot who flew in the Vietnam war. He graduated from the University of Washington School of Medicine in 1980, and has been working behind rebel lines in El Salvador for a year.

The teach-in is part of a series of events for five college students that is exploring the role of American aid and involvement in Central America. Earlier in the week, the parents of John Horman, who disappeared in Chile during the 1973 rightest coup that brought Augusto Pinochet to power, spoke at Smith College. The film "Missing," based on the Horman episode, was also shown.

Other events to come include a panel at 7:15 p.m. today at Hampshire College and the Chilean folk Singer Daniel Viglietti at 7:30 p.m. next Monday at Amherst College.

UMass survey shows problem

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

The eating disorder, anorexia nervosa, is a potentially serious problem at the University of Massachusetts, according to a random survey of four hundred female undergraduates conducted last year.

Based on how the individuals said they felt about their weight, eating habits and diet, the survey taken by Karen Comstock, a former graduate student, roughly forty percent said they felt they were overweight.

An even more alarming statistic was that eighteen percent met the criteria for Bulimarexia, a sub-category of anorexia characterized by massive food binges and then followed by self-induced vomiting to purge the body of food in order to stay thin.

The survey agreed with similar ones taken at other Universities around the country, said Diane Wolfe, Director of Health Education at the University Health Services.

"This is the first survey of this kind taken here and I would say the numbers are very high," she said.

A Bulimia group for women who "binge-purge" is starting up this month at UMass out of the Mental Health Division of Health Services.

The experience of anorexia, which now effects over 500,000 women in the United States was the subject of a film shown Wednesday in the Student Union ballroom, called I Don't Have to Hide.

About thirty women and a few men attended the film and some stayed after to take part in discussions about it and the problems of anorexia which is now the fastest spreading psychosomatic disease in the United States, according to the film.

The film, made by a former anorexic, explored the private world of a bulimic, following her disease from its beginnings in childhood to its worst point as an adult and her efforts to cope with the terrible internal problems that no one knew about.

Although the subject of the film solved her eating disorder by attending group therapy, most of the participants in the discussions felt the film did not provide answers or a cure, but rather only illustrated the cause and the effects.

Most of the discussion revolved around the shame associated with anorexia and the problems with getting help.

'Lemon law' would give full refund

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

A consumer rights protection bill passed by the Massachusetts Senate Wednesday could give consumers a full refund on new cars if approved by the governor later this year.

Tagged as the "lemon law," the bill would provide a full refund of the purchase price, if the same defect on the car was repaired three times, or if the car had been in repair for 20 or more days.

After one of those conditions is met, the consumer would then be able to file a written complaint with the manufacturer. The manufacturer would then attempt to resolve the matter; if the resolution were unsatisfactory, the consumer would then be entitled to sue the manufacturer.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. John Olver (D-Amherst) and the Massachusetts Public Research Interest Group (MassPIRG) was passed by a voice vote and must go through further routine enactment votes in the state Legislature before it can be submitted to the governor for approval.

"This is clearly a consumer-related bill that will give an option to someone who has purchased a new car that simply can't be prepared," Stan Rosenberg, an aide to Olver said, adding that the senator had been pushing for the bill since its inception.

Many area car salesmen favor the bill — Bob Cahillane, of the Northampton American Motors dealership, for instance said, "It protects the consumer — we backed it" — but some note that the bill is not as necessary as it might seem.

Alan Kalisch of Hampshire Toyota in Northampton said, "It's alright with me, but honestly, I can't see that it is going to help us out much. Not only do Toyotas have very few problems, but more specifically, I'd like to see the law with more specifications — like if a person's cigarette lighter breaks down three times do they get a new car? Now that's extreme, but. . . ."

Some dealers have clearly not thought about the law that much.

"Yeah, I suppose it's okay," said a dealer from Baggeta Honda in Northampton who declined to give his name.

"We have a one year 12,000 mile guarantee, though, so I guess it wouldn't affect us much."

Liberals few, survey says

Students at the University of Massachusetts are shifting towards a more conservative political stance, according to a survey conducted last spring by the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office.

Asked about their political views, only 24 percent of the first-year students said they were liberal. Some 20 percent of the students called themselves conservative, and 56 percent said they were middle-of-the-road.

The majority of students surveyed when entering UMass in 1979 endorsed the legalization of marijuana, whereas one-half or less of the other samples taken since have agreed that marijuana should be legalized.

The (randon-sample) survey of first-year students was based on questions from an annual survey from the American Counell on Education given to entering UMass students. Some 320 students participated in the survey.

Clothes taken

Umass Police reported three arrests Wednesday, and a theft of clothing valued at over $300.

A basket of clothes was taken from in front of Gorman dormitory Saturday, but reported yesterday.

Two of the arrests were on default warrants for motor vehicle violations, and the third was for driving while intoxicated. William K. Batchelder, 27, of Conway, Mass., was stopped on Massachusetts Ave. at 1:08 a.m., and charged with DWI and speeding.

The Graduate Management Aptitude Test will be given on Oct. 22, 1983. The deadline for applying for this exam is Sept. 19, 1983. For additional information, contact J.S. Toyama at 545-3424.

Zoe Tamerlis to speak

Zoe Tamerlis will speak on "Curfew: USA," a political motion picture which she has written, in which she portrays the protagonist Una Horn, at 10:30 tonight in the Student Union Ballroom.

Tamerlis will speak following a panel discussion, "The War in Central America."

Trustees voting today

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees is scheduled to meet at 2 p.m. today at the Waltham Experiment Station, and its tentative agenda will include moving on the appointment of Dr. Deirdre Ling to the position of vice chancellor of University Relations and Development, and the awarding of an honorary degree to former Gov. Edward J. King.

The Trustees are also expected to consider granting tuition waivers for exceptionally talented students, and discussion into the continued financing of a remote sensing project by UMass scientists is also scheduled.

University officials said yesterday that the meeting is an important one because of the budget battle between the Board of Regents and the legislature. The Trustees are expected to develop a strategy to ensure that UMass will get its share of the higher education budget.

The Trustees are also slated to discuss personnel action for several staff members, and a long-range plan for University Relations and Development will also be considered. Several faculty members will also be considered for tenure.

"Bay State Basics" to help new students

Secretary of State Michael Joseph Connolly recently announced the availability of a new booklet prepared by his office to give direction and assistance to college students. The booklet entitled, "Bay State Basics 101, A Student Guide to Living in Massachusetts", is a reliable and helpful source of information on state government that provides answers to many questions students may have living in Massachusetts.

The 28-page booklet is organized according to 18 areas of interest. The subject areas, ranging from obtaining financial aid to the dates of state holidays, are indicative of the concerns and questions of many college students.

Watch out for hot spots

The Physical Plant advises that care should be taken when walking or parking over steam manhole covers, which can be hot. The covers found on roads, sidewalks, in parking lots and grassy areas give access to underground steam transmission lines, and other equipment that give off heat and vapors.

WMUA show on Chile

"Chile: Democracy betrayed" will be aired at noon on Sunday, Sept. 18 on WMUA, the University of Massachusetts student radio station.

The one-hour documentary is a narration focusing on the 1973 coup in Chile. The report will include testimony from persons involved in the coup, and listeners will be informed of developments that have occurred since the coup.

Rep. at F.S.O. today

A representative of the Social Security Administration will be in the Foreign Student Office, 239 Whitmore today, to take applications for Social Security numbers for new foreign faculty members, researchers, and students.

To apply, one must appear with visa documents and a passport. Those with the J-1 visa should report between 9 a.m. and noon, and those with the F-1 visa will be seen between 1:30 and 4:30 p.m.. Those unable to report today can apply for a number through the office in Northampton or Holyoke.

Mass PIRG joins new U.S.PIRG

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Student's from the University of Massachusetts chapter of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) united with members from 26 other state PIRG chapters this summer to form a national organization, U.S.PIRG, based in Washington, D.C.

Ron Lavigne, chairperson of the UMass chapter of MassPIRG, said the creation of a national PIRG shows "the ability of students to be organized and to represent common concerns that all citizens face, both in Massachusetts and around the country."

Lavigne said U.S.PIRG will "help in passing certain pieces of legislation" through the federal government and "starts the opportunity to lobby on national issues."

MassPIRG, which lobbies mainly for consumer and environmental issues, has grown quickly in the last year, Lavigne said. Students at six colleges voted to establish chapters of MassPIRG on their campuses last year, raising MassPIRG's membership to 17 chapters with over 50,000 students, he said.

Along with MassPIRG's growth last year came two major lobbying victories - - passage of the bottle bill and a Massachusetts "Superfund" to clean up hazardous waste sites around the state, Lavigne said.

"We want to continue that growth this semester so we can continue to do the work we've done with the bottle bill," he said.

U.S. PIRG will now concentrate on passing a national bottle bill now in the Senate, Lavigne said. Pushing legislation that would require creation of a national system for recycling bottles and cans will take a lot of time and effort, Lavigne said, "but it's a lot easier than having to pass it separately around the country."

points members to an attorney general search committee next week.

Ferris was appointed acting attorney general by the SGA Coordinating Committee on June, after Ahern decided that the recommendations of a search committee last spring were invalid because of "a shortage of applicants."

"It's important that we appoint a position like this that we do a good recruiting job," Ahern said.

Nitzsche replied that "the proper process was followed," by the search committee last spring. He also reminded senators that it took almost until the end of the semester to appoint all the members to the search committee at that time.

Ahern said he intends to start another search process, despite the senate vote, since the final decision on Attorney General appointments are ultimately his.

"Naturally, I consider the Senate's vote valuable. I know how a lot of people feel, and I'll be talking to a lot of senators about this," Ahern said. "But while this goes on, nobody's job gets full consideration."

In other business last night, the Senate appropriated $2,000 to help sponsor a Pow Wow presented by the UMass American Indian Students Association, to be held this weekend at the campus pond.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

RANDOM NOTES

As the leaves begin to turn color, the campus once again comes alive with its diversified masses. The buildings are filled with excited chatter as everyone gets reaquainted with University lifestyle. The new semester fills the air with anticipation. "That gorgeous person in last years' Econ. class may finally notice me!", "This time I'm definitely going to make Dean's list!", "Starting now, I'm going to party 'till I drop!" Last year's inaccessible is confidently considered obtainable this time round. As students return or arrive for the first time, mixed feelings surround the campus. Freshmen observe their environment nervously, wondering how they will ever find Marston Hall by 9:05 the next morning. Sophomores knowingly commiserate on the D.C. food, and Whitmore's mistakes. Juniors relax, sigh, and ready themselves for another semester, for the first time seriously considering visits to Goodell. Seniors frantically battle or admission to that silly Rhetoric class of final E core somehow forgotten but needed to graduate in May. The Campus Center buzzes with welcome activity once more, as students, faculty, administrators, and other state employees eagerly prepare to face the chaos and good times another semester at UMass will bring.

— by Anneke Shuman

A real freshman orientation

Josh Meyer

The UMass tour guide had given too many tours that day to groups of confused freshpersons who hadn't much of a clue of what was going on at the University. He was tired of pointing out the same buildings and rattling off the same facts and figures, and during his last tour he decided to let his cynicism get the best of him, and do something different.

Instead of telling the new students meaningless bits of information, he would tell them some of the things he had learned in his seven years as an undergraduate, so they could avoid some of the traumatic experiences he had to endure in that first and most formative year of his academic career.

"First of all, DO NOT look skyward at the tall buildings or stare at the video TV programs in the Campus Center for a prolonged period of time. — people will take you for either fools or freshmen, and you will be approached by members of crazed, fanatical cults out on recruitment drives.

- don't buy tickets to any UMass football games, schedules for the five-college bus service, or passes to ride on the Campus Center escalator. These are all FREE, and people are just trying to take advantage of you.

- when dealing with any members of the administration, if you don't get what you want immediately, jump up and down, yell and scream, and ask to see the person in charge. They'll think you are obviously right, and they'll do whatever you ask of them.

- always, but always, get everything in writing, even if your advisor says you don't have to worry about it. On this campus, take nothing for granted or you're liable to get screwed in the end.

- when asking for directions, beware of people telling you to go towards the Campus Center miniature golf course or bumper car arena, or anything else that sounds absurd. They don't exist.

- don't bother to go to the Dining Commons early on days when they advertise roast beef or chicken cutlets (pucks). If they always seem to be out of them, that's because they never really had them in the first place. They just need you to use up your meal plan. Also, those machines they use at the DC's to "verify your status" do nothing at all. They just figure that anyone stupid enough to wait in line that long for food that bad must have really paid for it.

- student ID numbers are given out arbitrarily, and mean nothing. They only separate those with numbers from those without them.

- the computer at Whitmore is never "down" or out of order. Staff persons are just sick and tired of students who don't have a clue, and wait in line an hour to ask one stupid question.

- always take a shower in the dorms in your sneakers - in the past, many contagious diseases have been spread through the shower stalls.

- "Better late than never" DOES NOT WORK with professors. if you enter or leave late, they'll remember you. If you don't go at all, chances are they'll never know.

- nobody can leave class, walk to lunch, eat, and make it to their next class on time, so tell your professor that when you walk in twenty minutes late.

- core divisions are non-existent categories. Not one person on campus can tell you the difference between a "C" and a "D" core; the administration just needed to keep some staff people busy over the summer making imaginary distinctions.

- "Back-to-school" sales at local stores are almost always twice as high as their regular prices. Merchants know that students need to, and will, buy something of importance no matter what the cost. They don't have a choice.

- most withdrawn library books were either stolen years ago, or never catalogued in the right place at the beginning, so don't even try to find them.

- don't worry about not having a key to a dorm. When encountering security personnel, smile confidently, and as you walk briskly by, jangle any set of keys you might have. They'll never even think twice about it as you pretend to run for the elevator.

- and last, but definitely not least, cheer up! No matter how trying your first few weeks may be at UMass, remember that everybody here is really trying to help you, and that when you look back on it, it just may be the best year of your life. And if it seems that nothing at UMass works the way it should, just think of the PVTA bus service — despite how complicated a job they have to do, they always come through. Or think of the swans on the Campus Pond — why would they stay if this place was so bad?

And remember that there are many others who are in the same boat as you, and just as anxious to meet people. So don't be shy — just say Hi!.

With that finished, the tour guide let out a small chuckle of amusement, and looked over the group of now-confident, but still new students. "Don't worry," he said. "I was just kidding. It's not nearly that bad. Most of what I said isn't completely true in the first place. Just be a little more observant of what goes on around here than you would have been if I hadn't told you about this stuff."

As the group scattered, one of the students could swear he heard the tour guide offer a pretty young co-ed the opportunity to see the "top-secret" recreational palace and gambling casino on the 28th floor of the Library tower. He started after the couple, to ask the guide if it really existed. Then he stopped, snickered to himself, and walked away in the other direction.

Peaceful coexistence a must

To the Editor,

The collective rage of the American people versus the Soviet Union for the downing of the Korean passenger airliner is finally diminishing. While perhaps bolstering our sense of nationalism, it is vital that the careful student of international affairs not be swayed by the anti-Soviet hysteria.

Rather than being convinced, as Mr. Reagan would have us believe, that this is definite proof of Moscow's wretchedness, I would like to advance an alternative proposition. While in no way minimizing the gravity of the incident, could it be that the jet was destroyed because decent American-Soviet relations have been destroyed? In other words, in a Cold War continuously fanned by the self-serving media of each of the superpowers into a state of perpetual tension, then weapons come to replace dialogue. The energies of hatred flowing so profusely toward the Soviet Union would be far more beneficial if transformed - for when have relationships based on contempt ever produced good? The planet's very survival hinges on peaceful co-existence.

War Powers Act is ignored

To the Editor,

I quote from the War Powers Resolution, Title 50 U.S. Code 1976:

1. President's Executive Power as Commander-in-Chief; Limitation.

The Constitutional Powers of the President as Commander-in-Chief to introduce United States Armed Forces into hostilities, or into situations where imminent involvement in hostilities is clearly indicated by the circumstances, are exercised only pursuant to

(1) a declaration of war

(2) specific statutory authorization, or

(3) a national emergency created by attack upon the United States, its territories or possessions, or its armed forces.

2. Congressional Legislative Power

Under article 1, section 8, of the Constitution, it is specifically provided that the Congress shall have the power to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution, not only its own powers but also all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

Violations: Lebanon, El Salvador.

The Sovereign Power of the United States rests with its People.

Then get in on the ground floor in our undergraduate officer commissioning program. You could start planning on a career like the men in this ad have. And also have some great advantages like:

- Earning $100 a month during the school year
- As a freshman or sophomore, you could complete your basic training during two six-week summer sessions and earn more than $1100 during each session
- Juniors earn more than $1900 during one ten-week summer session
- You can take free civilian flying lessons
- You're commissioned upon graduation

If you're looking to move up quickly, look into the Marine Corps undergraduate officer commissioning program. You could start off making more than $17,000 a year

Want to move up quickly?

Maybe you can be one of us.

Duck Rock: it's body music

DUCK ROCK (Island Records)
Malcolm McLaren

By CHRISTINE MARINI
Collegian Staff

Malcolm McLaren likes to stir things up. In 1974 he formed the Sex Pistols and punk rock was born. McLaren's musical exploits (which also include activating Adam Ant and BOWWOWWOW) are paralleled with equal iconoclastic consequence in London's mod fashion scene, where, along with Vivienne Westwood at World's End Boutique, McLaren was the first to "do" leather and studs, zippers and pirate shirts and ripped, knotted clothing. What McLaren does and plays and wears in London today, the youth of America will be sold on in two years, and adopt with feverent (albeit hollow) enthusiasm, no matter how much Elvis Costello bitches.

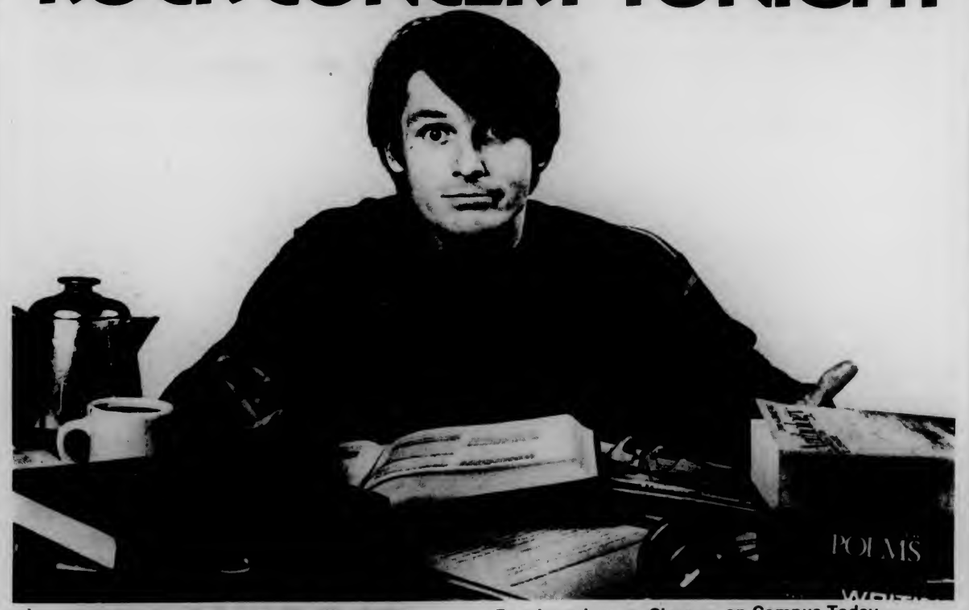
McLaren's latest musical endeavor (some would say exploitation) is encapsulated on his new LP Duck Rock. McLaren's conception of rock music as ultimately pagan/spiritual led him to such varied climes as Peru, Zululand, Columbia, Appalachia and even the South Bronx in search of...(pause) The Beat. Armed with what looks like the Primal Tunebox (complete with fake fur, feathers, and antlers), McLaren collaborated with musicians from around the world. He mixed rap music and merengue with webo and scratch, jump rope chants with square dance calls, and then laced it up with the slick World's Famous Supreme Team d.j.'s and their buffalo girls who call in on the ray-dee-oh.

Duck Rock's music is almost hypnotic. It is people music, body music, stuff that anyone who listens to can "hear". The variety in the cuts, both in musical content and in origin, serves only to affirm McLaren's musical premise. Duck Rock crosses artificial barriers and reaches for something universal in the music.

Yes, the music. Different cuts will strike your fancy. Besides the best-known "Buffalo Gals" and "Double Dutch", other prominent songs are "Jive My Baby Jive" (sung by Zulus), and "She's Looking Like a Hobo".

Some of Duck Rock is funny. Zulus, who were delighted by McLaren's Sex Pistol stories, sing:

A Sex Pistol
That's what I am
I punk it up
I'm a Sex Pistol Man



in both Zulu and English simultaneously.

As a boy-wonder, McLaren has a few flaws. Self-restraint is obviously not his strong suit. In some bits of the Latino songs (particularly "Merengue") his exaggerated treatment of lyric twists the songs into almost farcical dimensions. For one who claims such noble aspirations, any such hint of ridicule, even if self-aimed, is unfortunate. In addition, the attitude McLaren displays on the lyric-cum-explanation sheet in Duck Rock is blandly derogatory and even chastening toward the "spiritless" Northern Europeans, whose musical traditions are pointedly not represented on the album. If the scope of Duck Rock is as international as McLaren claims, then why deny its power to those who must come by it second-hand?

These are minor (and perhaps even intellectual, God forbid, flaws which have little to do with the quality of the music. Do try some Duck Rock for a digestable change of pace. Just don't expect to be able to sit still while you listen; for, as McLaren sings on "Merengue":

"Don't be frightened...
Moving's so contagious..."

UMass spikers Fly high to shutout AIC in season opener

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD — They were flying up I-91 last night. After a stirring win over American International College (AIC), the University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team was flying high.

All they did was take on AIC — A team that UMass had to struggle to beat last year. All they did this year was crush them enroute to a 15-3, 15-4, 15-4 straight sets victory (best 3 of 5 games).

"We crushed them," said a very happy head coach Elaine Sortino. "We looked terrific out there. Everybody looked good."

Massachusetts put together one of those nights in which everything just fell into place. The serving was there. The defense, blocking, transition, and passing was all working at full tilt.

And when AIC picked up the ball and started many of the nights long rallies, it was UMass that disappointed the good-sized AIC crowd by winning the rally.

After all, how can you cheer for a team that only scored 11 points all night?

It was UMass that earned the cheering this night. The Minutewomen started an experienced lineup. Junior setter Patty Grant along with soph Leslie Smith, soph Sally Mahar, soph Anne Ringrose, and juniors Kirsten Smith and Joanne Siler gave AIC lots of trouble.

And when Leslie Smith moved to the back row, speedy little Debbie Cole came in, served well and played great D.

"We picked up a lot of balls and the blocking was great," explained Sortino. "Leslie (Smith), Kirsten (Smith — no, they are not related) and Jo (Siler) were a wall (blocking)."

And the offense was nothing to sneeze at either. Grant served seven straight points in the first game and Cole served six in a row in the second game. Mahar also woke up one AIC player when she spiked a ball off the girl's face. The ball sailed high up in the air.

Not as high as UMass is now though.

"They're flying," Sortino said after the match. "We're psyched for Friday. We're ready to host the tourney."

The Minutewomen will host their own sixteen team tourney, the UMass Invitational, on Friday and Saturday in Boyden gym.

After two weeks of triple sessions and another week of practice, to come out and dominate AIC has the spikers, owners of a spotless 1-0 record, ready and willing to play.

That's if they ever come down.

The "locals" from Boston have been buried, and as the dirt settles on the Fenway Park tombstone, the only solace comes with watching the Captain finish with class, Boggs winning the crown, and realizing that this year at least they didn't wait until September to break our hearts.

So, while Haywood and Jean exchange dirty looks with Buddy, Baltimore proves it can win without Earl Weaver, the White Sox run away and hide, and the National League divisions are up for grabs.

The Orioles are five games up on their closest challenge, the Detroit Tigers. Billy Martin's return to the Yankee soap opera has made New York no better than third at this point, seven back, while Milwaukee doesn't seem to have the gusto and Toronto fades away.

Baltimore will probably hang on as Detroit doesn't have the personnel or experience to pull off the upset. The O's didn't see Weaver ranting and raving on the dugout steps but did see pitcher premier Jim Palmer do a stint in the minor leagues. They pulled together as good teams will during the period that they should have unraveled.

Milwaukee never should have traded Gorman Thomas to Cleveland, therefore giving away one of the Brew Crew's top fence busters. Don Sutton hasn't panned out as counted on and unlike Baltimore, the Brewers couldn't persevere when Sutton started losing and their top man Pete Vuckovich went down with injuries.

The Blue Jays were fun to watch and wonder about but they slowly lost their hopes. Manager Bobby Cox and his platoon system worked and made fans realize that there are now two good Canadian baseball teams, but Toronto never was quite the same after Dave Winfield killed the seagull during warm-ups last month.

Not much can be said about the A.L. West, except that, barring the sudden reappearance of Mrs. O'Learys cow, the Chicago White Sox have their tickets set for the playoffs. Chicago has a new slogan, "Winning Ugly Is the Miracle On 34th Street." Very appropriate.

Chicago has wide variety of offensive weapons from Greg Luzinski and Carlton Fisk to Tom Paciorek and Ron Kittle. This complements a pitching staff that features five starters in double figures with wins.

The Royals, pine tar or no pine tar, have been on a steady slide for a while and this race was over before any stretch drive began.

On the other side of the standings, the National League East has provided baseball with another dream race. No less than four teams have flip flopped within two games of the top and the title be there for whoever gets hot. Besides World Champion St. Louis, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, and Montreal are all a breath away. The parity, i.e., mediocrity of the four teams has caused the bunching. While each has plenty of talent, none has been able to win consistently.

The Cardinals basically have the same team. The return of Lonnie Smith from drug problems and consistent play of George Hendrick have brought the champs back from drifting away last month.

With Gary Carter, Andre Dawson, Tim Raines, and Al Oliver, the Expos are formidable enough. They also have a 17, 15, and 14 game winners in Steve Rogers (perhaps the best hurler in the N.L.), Charlie Lea, and Bill Gullickson respectively but have no big lead to show for it.

The Phillies, meanwhile, have been in chaos all year, with general manager Paul Owens coming down from the front office to manage and star Mike Schmidt's slumping batting average as concerns. Still the Phils have managed to win enough.

Pittsburgh was probably the least figured to be alive at this stage when the season began. The Pirates though have unveiled another close knit team that could carry them to the playoffs as in the case of the '79 "We Are Family" team. The Pirates have gotten a big lift from rookie pitcher Jose De Leon, who has four times gone over five innings with no-hitters. They suffered a giant loss in batting leader bill Madlock, out with a torn muscle.

The West is again a two team race and Atlanta has again slumped, allowing Los Angeles to slip into first. The questions this year are that if the Braves can rally back like last and if the Dodgers kids can handle stretch pressure.

The Braves have not only lost their lead but also superstar Bob Horner with a broken wrist. All-everything Dale Murphy will have to pick up the slack and even Chief Nagabuchi's war dances on the dugout may not save the Braves.

On the other hand, the Dodgers will have to prove that their young talent is unyielding in late September, early October. It's up to Mike Marshall, Greg Brock, and Steve Sax among others. Luckily, Sax has learned how to throw from second to first again and is playing well. Newcomer Rick Honeycutt also is a big plus and his pitching success or lack there of will be a big factor, while veterans Bill Russell, Steve Yeager, Burt Hooton, and Pedro Guerrero are the ones that have to show late season cool and confidence. More than ever, level heads rather than level play could make or break L.A.

Ohio St. at UMass

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team will finish their Big 10 swing when they host Ohio State today at 3 p.m. at NOPE. UMass defeated Northwestern, another Big 10 school, in their season opener, Tuesday, 1-0.

Iowa, yet another Big 10 team, ended the Minutewoman's year last fall with a 1-0 double overtime win in the national quarterfinals.

Coach Pam Hixon expects that her veteran team, one with seven seniors, will play well against Ohio State. UMass hasn't faced the Buckeyes in over two years.

Liberty leads 1-0

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) - Liberty and skipper Dennis Conner outsailed Australia II and its winged keel Wednesday, winning the first race in the 25th defense of the America's Cup as the challenger suddenly lost speed on the final turn.

It was the race anticipated all summer, and despite the final margin of 1 minute, 10 seconds, for much of the overcast afternoon it was one of the most intense battles in Cup history.

There were six lead changes, and the predicted patterns didn't hold. The American defenders outsailed Australia II on the pivotal fourth leg, upwind where the challenger's keel was supposed to be an advantage. But the Aussies caught Liberty on the fifth leg, downwind, where the defender's speed was supposed to be the difference.

The race was decided heading for the sixth and final leg of the 24.3-mile course.

The two boats were engaged in a fierce gybing duel, with Liberty ahead at the fifth mark, when Australia II veered off and stopped almost dead in the water as her crew struggled to drop the spinnaker for the race to the finish.

By the time the Aussies recovered, Conner was 35 seconds ahead, too much for Australian skipper John Bertrand to make up over the last 4.05 miles.

The time for the winner was 3 hours, 26 minutes, 55 seconds. That put Liberty up 1-0 in the best-of-seven series, which Conner has predicated he will win in four straight.

Parents claim racism stalls repairs

BY MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

Students and faculty with children at the University of Massachusetts claim a "subtle racism" is preventing the completion of the renovations and opening of a University day care center.

The center has the largest percent of minorities than any other center in the area, said David Zuccalo, director of the North Village Children's Center.

Zuccalo said 50 families have been going without child care for two weeks while renovations continue past the September 6 opening date.

Zuccalo said the University, which supervises the center through the child care office, "has not been too responsive" to the center's situation.

Parents had to be repeatly told the center would not open on time, he said.

"Many parents have spoken to me and to my staff, and said that the lack of responiveness is rooted in some (Subtle) racism," he said.

Marie Reid, former director of the Office of Planning and Budget, and whose son and niece are supposed to attend the center, said other parents are thinking of filing a grievance against the University because of crowded staff working conditions and because two and three year olds "have so many strange people babysitting them" that they are getting confused, she said.

"There are a lot of hispanic and black people using the center. I don't know if that's why we're being dumped on or because ther are a lot of students there also," Reid said.

No one in the administration, physical plant, or housing services was available for comment.

Zuccolo said parents have been taking their children to work and some to classes.

"It's very stressful. Single parent families are really hurting," he said. Some parents are sharing time by taking turns missing classes or work, he said.

Zuccalo said he had to hire plumbers who are arking overtime in effort to complete the renovations.

"I didn't know all the reasons because the physical plant is beyond my control...Whitmore is the only one to put pressure on people," and they have not done so, he said.

Zuccalo said some parents have called Whitmore for assistance, but only those people who work in the administration building received a response, he said.

Reid said the administration "is trying to be cooperative. I don't know if they have that many options. I just hope something gets done," she said.

Zuccalo said the parents were reimbursed for the unavailable day care they paid for, but "that still doesn't solve the problem. They still need daycare," he said.

Speed traps to be publicized

By ED HAYWARD

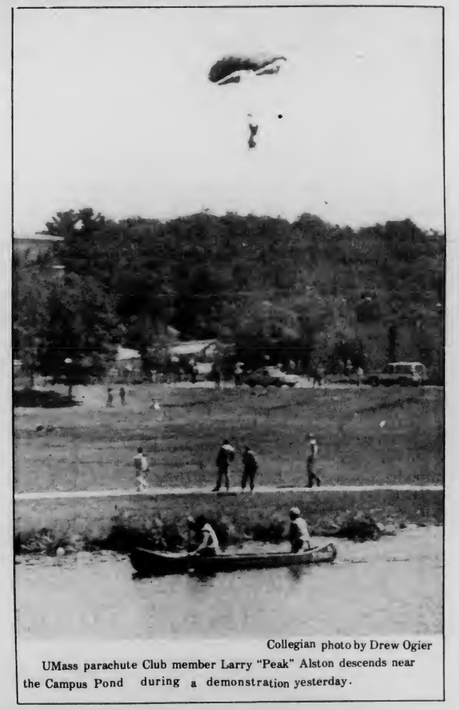
University of Massachusetts police will begin taking a new approach toward catching speeders this fall: they plan to broadcast the locations over local radio stations.

The program, which could start as early as next week, is what the department feels is a positive, up front approach to motor vehicle and pedestrian safety.



"It's our job to provide a safe environment for pedestrians," said Director of Public Safety Gerald O'Neil. "However, safety shoud be of concern to everyone."

O'Neil said the department believes that if radar locations are known then drivers become more safety conscious, thus lowering driving speeds. In 1982 the University police investigated over 275 trafic accidents and approximately 900 persons were stopped for speeding, he said.

The department's main concern is Massachusetts Avenue, he said. However, officer locations will change daily with public complaints. The officers are now better equipped to handle speeders since obtaining several new hand-held radar units, O'Neil said.

"There are several roads which have been improved. Since they are in such good condition they can encourage speeding. With 24,000-plus students in such a small area, risks concerning pedestrians are great. With new equipment and this program we hope to minimize the risks."

The stations which will carry the announcements are still unknown. Those interested in broadcasting police radar location may call Robert Joyce at 545-0893.

Long Range Plan reworked

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

A "reworked version" of the University of Massachusetts' long range plan was recently submitted to University President David C. Knapp.

The announcement was part of an opening school speech given by Chancellor Strickland, associate to the chancellor.

The most important part of the new plan, according to the speech, is a Campus Planning Council to be appointed soon which will assess "the goals and objectives for the campus as a continuing process," Duffey said. He also asked the department heads and vice Chancellors questions he had about faculty to student relationships, enrollment, demand for courses within various departments, classroom availability and scheduling, Strickland said.

Pointing out the these are not questions to be specifically addressed by the new plan, Stickland said the major revisions deal with the academic aspects of the proposal rather than student affairs or administration and finance.

The reworking of the plan came at the request of the Massachusetts Board of Regents to present "a more detailed version" of the plan submitted last spring by former Provost Loren Baritz, Strickland said.

Using suggestions of the regents, Duffey worked with members of the Faculty Senate, which must approve the new plan, to complete the revision, she said.

Chancellor Duffey was unavailable for comment as to the status of the plan, but he said in his speech Wednesday that although UMass President Knapp has received the plan, it will be subject to debate before final approval by the regents.

Strickland said she was unsure whether the plan will have to be approved again by the University Board of Trustees. Copies have been distributed to the board and other constituencies, inefuding the Student Senate, she said.

Cage renovations still in works

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

Architects designing the renovation plans for the Curry Hicks Cage at the University of Massachusetts revealed Thursday the final scheme to University administrators, physical education department personnel and Student Government Association (SGA) leaders.

The Boston-based firm of Childs, Bertram, Tseckares and Casendino, Inc. proposed a March 1984 construction date for the estimated $2.3 million project. The plans are as follows:

A two-story addition will be built to the south side of the building, to include an exterior ticket window, an entrance foyer, a trophy case and concession stand. Bathrooms and locker rooms will be situated on the right side of the addition, with offices and locker rooms on the left. Open walls will lead into the Cage itself.

Three sets of unfolding bleachers and one movable set will seat 4,000-plus patrons inside the Cage; seating on the mezzanine level will be replaced and moved forward to provide better sight lines. The ceiling will be painted and a concrete slab, sythetic surface and movable wood floor will cover the current dirt and gravel base. A synthetic track will circle the floor.

While a new entrance will be built for concert-goers at the Cage, architects noted frequent removal of the new floor could cause damage, so that most likely not many conerts will be held there, they said.

H.J. Littlefield, director of facilities planning at UMass, said objections to the fee were simply a reflex of any group faced with such an increase.

"This fee increase won't hit for almost two years if it goes through, which I suspect it will. This gives those who will begin paying for this facility the opportunity to enjoy it," he said.

Littlefield said he suspected the plans would reach approval from the Building Authority and would go to the Board of Trustees for deliberation and debate by early November.

IT Corp. files treatment plans

BOSTON (AP) - The IT Corp. of California outlined its plans Thursday for a $50 million plant to treat more than 150,000 tons of hazardous waste a year in the central Massachusetts town of Warren.

Two documents filed with state officials revealed that the company plans to build on about 200 acres of land it hopes to lease from the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority about midway between Worcester and Springfield.

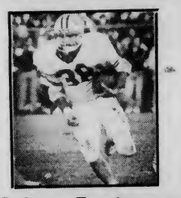
Robert Buck, a spokesman for Stop IT, said his group was still determined to block construction of any plant in Warren.

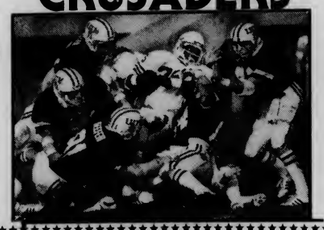
"In principle, the whole concept of a toxic waste treatment plant is not a good one," he said, adding that he would prefer to see industry reduce the annual production of waste at the source.

Despite the local opposition, company officials said they had settled on the Warren site and are not considering any alternatives, primarily because the Warren site offers direct access to and from the Turnpike over a restricted private road.

"This action today represents a significant commitment by IT Corp. to move ahead with the next phase of the Massachusetts facility," John Schofield, senior vice president, said at a Boston news conference.

Schofield said the company would persist even though it is being sued by the town of Warren and Stop IT. The company also has not yet reached agreement with the Turnpike Authority on a lease price, and Schofield said the two parties were far apart.





The papers filed Thursday with the state Department of Environmental Management and the Hazardous Waste Facility Site Safety Council, begin a lengthy approval process.

Alcohol consumption questions raised

University Health Services, police sponsor alcohol awareness seminar

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

On January 17, 1976, 39-year-old John Mott walked into the Milford Keg in Milford, and between 6:30 and 7 p.m., downed six White Russians, six glasses of a combination of vodka, Kahlua and milk.

Bartenders asked him to leave when he became unruly. He complied. An hour later he was seen at a tavern across town, where he ordered and was served more drinks.

He climbed into his car around 10 p.m. but did not arrive home before he sideswiped pedestrians Joseph Samino and his 9-year-old son, John, causing injuries to the father and immediate death to the boy.

Samino got up and raced across the street to obtain help while Mott sat in his automobile, intoxicaed at a level more than twice the legal limit.

On July 25, 1977, 17-year-old Thomas Theole walked into Gordon's Liquors in Waltham and emerged with a six-pack of beer sometime late in the afternoon. He then went home, ate dinner, and left to meet some friends. During this time he drank three or four beers and entered his car. Shortly thereafter, he struck and killed Professor David Zilberman, 39, of Waltham, who was bicycling down Crescent Street.

Described later in court documents as "youthful and beardless," Theole did not show an identification card proving he was of the legal drinking age, then 18.

The drinking age in Massachusetts has since then risen to 20.

Collegian graphic by Rick Hancock

Who is at fault? Theole and Mott? The bartenders or counter attendants for serving them? The parents of Theole, who was then a minor?

Local bartenders attending an alcohol education and awareness seminar held yesterday at the Blue Wall were concerned. And curious, because more and more victims, the court dockets show, are suing not just their defendants, but package stores and drinking establishments.

The Theole case, for instance, established a legal precedence stating that liquor stores can be held responsible for injuries sustained from the sale of alcoholic beverages to minors, a decision upheld in August by the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court, which awarded Zilberman's widow, $200,000.

Approximately 40 local tavern owners, bartenders, bouncers, waiters and waitresses attended the seminar offered by University Health Services (UHS), which has been presenting the workshop for the past three years.

Chief Donald Maia and Lieutenant Dave Janowski of the Amherst Police Department and Carlene Riccelli, coordinator of Alcohol Education at UHS, briefed and quizzed the group on enforcement issues, blood alcohol levels, ways to contend with alcoholic behavior and other difficult situations, such as "shutting off" the liquor intake of a person who has imbibed too heavily.

The discussion began with Jankowski reviewing something that interested everyone: legalities, which are as follows:

- Anyone drinking, transporting, or purchasing alcoholic beverages be 20 years of age, but persons 18 years of age or older may serve liquor.
- The altering of licenses is punishable by a $500 fine and up to five years in the state penitentiary.

Those are the main offenses. What seemed to trouble the group was where the responsibility lay in stopping someone from drinking, whether it is their business to do so and what part they play in ensuring that they are protected from lawsuits.

That can be pretty ambiguous. Say Mom and Dad decide go out for a couple and bring along their 16-year-old son, who, in the opinion of the father, is old enough to drink, and is the recipient of a few tall ones, compliments of Dad. Say a college senior walked into the Blue Wall with his new first year student roommates and slips them a few beers after buying three at the bar? Say someone passes by the bouncer all right but looks a little young to the bartender, or say a person has done drugs before coming in and is put away after only one drink?

The solution, Jankowski said, is many times just as ambiguous as the situation. In most situations, the bartender or server is protected.

"If the bartender or bouncer has a reasonable belief that the person is legal than it is pretty hard to prosecute them. But that's not the issue as much sometimes as what the bartenders should do. In my view, taverns have a duty not to serve people who are intoxicated or minors, because any amount can be dangerous."

Effects of acid rain are being tested

By WILLIAM HOPKINS
Collegian Staff

Acid rain is a problem world-wide.

In Athens, ancient Greek architecture and outdoor sculpture is being rapidly eaten away by acid rain after surviving thousands of years intact. In New England, many lakes, streams and reservoirs are becoming so acidic they can no longer support life.

At the University of Massachusetts, an Acid Rain Monitoring (A.R.M.) Project has been monitoring PH and alkalinity in 173 bodies of water across the state, about 25 percent of the total number of Massachusetts water bodies.

A preliminary report released in June by Paul J. Godfrey, director of the Water Resources Research Center, based on April samples taken by approximately 800 volunteers in the project, indicates 82 percent of the streams, lakes and reservoirs sampled are sensitive to acid precipitation to some degree. Twenty percent of those are considered "critical," based on low alkalinity reading according to the report.

When the "buffer" of alkaline particles in surface waters is depleted by acid particles, the water's PH drops rapidly and fish and other aquatic life is threatened, Godfrey said.

He said the situation is "critical enough that something ought to be done." Most of the acid particles that fall on Massachusetts come from industrial centers to the south and west, he said. Godfrey said he advocates congressional action to alleviate the problem.

"It's hard to say what kind of legislation (is needed because of political problems)," said Godfrey, but he said he favors a 50 percent reduction in acid deposition from 36 pounds per acre to 18 pounds per acre. This would require a 50 percent reduction in emissions, he said.

Godfrey said he plans to release further preliminary reports this fall and winter, with a final report due next summer.

The June report listed 229 bodies of water in the sample as "critical," 206 as "endangered," 250 as "highly sensitive," 271 as "sensitive," and 217 as "not sensitive" to acid rain.

Samples collected are sent to 75 laboratories at colleges, water treatment plants, private businesses and industries, and the Environmental Science Department of the Audubon Society. The results are compiled by the A.R.M. project.

A Laboratory Quality Assurance program is being used to ensure reliability of results by sending "blind samples" of known PH to laboratories for analysis, Godfrey said. The program is similar to that used by the Environmental Protection Agency(EPA), but is "more stringent than the EPA's," he said.

The conclusions reached in the June report of the A.R.M. project have been questioned by an Amherst Record columnist.

In an article appearing in the August 17th edition of the Record, columnist Mike Rosenthal, an A.R.M. volunteer, alleges that conclusions about conditions in some Hampshire County waterways were released without supporting data; that some samples he had taken had been lost and that the "endangered" classification for the east branch of the Mill River was based on an April sample which was lost. He also alleges that there is a lack of scientific review of A.R.M. results.

Rosenthal also questioned the validity of using "critical" or "endangered" classifications based on a single month's data, without a biological survey to determine the effects of acidity on marine life.

In a lengthy rebuttal appearing in the Record two week later, Godfrey admitted losing Rosenthal's April samples and basing the April classifications on incomplete data, attributing this to a lack of staff.

Godfrey defended his classification system, saying "scientific literature shows that water bodies with 0-2 mg/1 of alkalinity are in a very precarious or critical position," but he did not directly address the lack of scientific review.

American Indian Students' Assoc. to hold pow-wow

BY ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

An inter-tribal pow-wow with representatives from all over the eastern United States and Canada will take place on Saturday and Sunday at the Campus Pond and will include various Indian ceremonies, dances, foods and crafts.

The pow-wow, whichis being sponsered by the American Indian Students' Association at the University of Massachusetts, is free and open to the public. The day will begin at approximately noon on Sartutday with the blessing of the circle of participants of a pipe ceremony by the medicine man, Jane Colen, a representative of the association, said.

"A pow-wow is a kind of tradition when Indians get together and visit and socialize, have religious ceremonies and dances, Cohen said. "It's also a way for Indians to raise money to get across the country and to different pow-wows."

The Indians will raise money by making crafts and baking goods to sell she said. After sharing their crafts with others, they will display beads, leather work and carvings. Fry bread, soups and corn on the cob are among the foods they will sell, she said.

Music and dancing are another part of the tradition the Indians will share. According to Colen, a circledance is usually performed at a pow-wow with non-indian natives welcome to participate as well as Indian natives. Four dance contests will be held.

Two drumming groups will be performing throughout the weekend. The Mashpee Drummers will be performing on one large drum with three to six men. The Young Blood Drummers will also perform.

"One of the prposes of it (the pow-wow) is to show that there are still Indians that live with traditional values and have respect for motherearth," Colen said. "It's a good thing for outsiders to come to, and we encourage it because it's just plain fun."

Nationally known Indian leader Mark Banks will speak at the pow-wow on the problems Indians face in American society. He will also speak about his brother Dennis Banks, founder of the American Indian Movement who has recently been granted sanctuary in New York.

John Peters, executive director of the Commission on Indian Affairs in Massachusetts, will also be at the pow-wow to lead the religious ceremonies.

In the case of rain, the pow-wow will be held inside the Campus Center Auditorium.

Central America to be discussed

As part of the week-long five college conference on the "U.S. and the Crisis in the Caribbean," several events will be held this weekend at Hampshire College.

"The War in Central America: The Role of the United States and the Reality of the Situation" will be the topic of a roundtable discussion to be held at 7:15 p.m. tonight in the Main Lecture Hall.

"Morazon," a film from a liberated area of El Salvador, will be shown at 4 p.m. Saturday in the East Lecture Hall.

The slide show presentation "Women and Women Artists in Nicaragua" will be given at 7:30 p.m. in the East Lecture Hall.

On Sunday, Carlos Fuentes will speak about "Chile, Ten Years Later" at 7:30 p.m. in the Main Lecture Hall at Hampshire College.

Instructor: Edward Ernest DeLuca, Ph.D. (Phenomenal Diversionary)
Location: DeLuca's in South Hadley, formerly the Riverboat.
Prerequisites: Hunger, 101; and/or Thirst, 101; plus one graduate level course in either Amusement, 201; Laughter, 210; or Good Times, 220.
Format: Empirical Study. Groups of two or more preferable; Independent Study permissible — if you remember to bring something back for your friends!
Course Description: A popular place, relaxing, rambling, and full of life and the aroma of homemade Italian dishes. In addition to regular course offerings, there's Live Entertainment and Dancing Friday and Saturday nights from 8:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m. The definitive spot for eating, drinking, and advanced merriment, with friends — or the whole dorm!
Class Meetings: Any day of the week, Monday through Sunday.

Section I: Lunch
Mon — Sat,
11:30 a.m. — 2:30 p.m.

Section II: Brunch
Sunday,

Fri and Sat,
5:00 p.m. — 10:00 p.m.
Sunday,
3:00 p.m. — 9:00 p.m.

Required Reading List: Long, and oh, so tempting! A menu that includes a great variety of salads, appetizers, pasta, and entrees from Lasagna and Veal Parmigiana to Chicken Modena and Filet of Sole Adriatico!
Optional Reading List: Shorter, but just as delectable! A complete menu for DeLuca's authentic Pizza Parlor, located right inside the restaurant!
Attendance: Required often, but Take-Out accommodates those students unable to keep up with their studies in person.
Correspondence Course: Isn't modern education wonderful — pasta and sauces, all ready for you to pick up here, and cook wherever and whenever you want!
Orientation: Monday through Friday from 4:00 p.m. to 7:00 p.m., or Saturday nights from 10:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m. at Deluca's Happy Hours, where specially priced drinks and hearty, on the-house foods will be served.
Registration: Informal. Just hop on your bike, in your car, or on Deluca's own bus, stopping regularly at The Green in South Hadley!
Credit: Lots. From friends who'll thank you forever for introducing them to one of the truly inspiring facets of college life.
Tuition: Priced to order! Anywhere from $1.95 for the undergraduate soup and salad, to $9.95 for the graduate level dinner.
Graduation: None. An ideal course for the professional student — a lifetime of hedonistic study!

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Lines, lines, and more lines

Alas, the first week of a new semester is certainly no vacation. Waiting an hour and a half in Bartlett Hall to add a Modern Novel class is bad enough. But to finally find out that the student who has shared the wait with you, has filled the last empty seat of your class, well, that can make you pull your hair out.

Anyway, not to waste my ninety minute day dream, I step towards the desk of instructors, which suddenly resembles a murder jury which has not found your future favorable. I decided to step to the far right of the table and take my chances with the instructor there. Not because he is the only one free, but because he appeared younger than the rest, and if nothing else, has not gone through registration for twenty years previous. I hoped in fact, that it was his first registration and that he was a anxious to find me a course as I was to find one.

Marc S. Magerman

However, such was not the case, When he finally took his head out of a closed course list and acknowledged me. I almost forgot why I was there. My initial hope proved to be true, for he was younger then the rest of the panel. In fact he looked so young that I imagined him on a merry-go-round with a baseball cap on his head, eating a hot dog at the fair.

But unfortunately for me in this case, young did not mean enthusiastic, nor helpful. After pleading my case and insisting my diploma would not arrive without the novel class, this instructor bent about as much as a stone wall. "The class is closed. There are no seats left. You can take it up with the course instructor," he said. Apparently not overly concerned about my suspended graduation, he proceeded. After I realized that I was no better off than when I woke, but before I realized to ask him about other possible courses, this juror was sealing the fate of an innocent freshman who had hoped to get her name on the list for Major British Writers. How do you like that? He does not acknowledge me for minutes and then seconds after my brush off, he had already sentenced another to more waiting on lines.

On the stone wall outside of Bartlett Hall I heard laughing and reminiscing. I overheard one woman tell her friend about how lucky she was to get every course she had pre-registered for. As I looked down I noticed I had almost ripped several pages out of my fall course book. Why, I shuddered, is it never that easy?

Folding back the crumpled pages, I found the information needed about Modern Novel; the time, the room, and the professor. The professor had a name I could not pronounce, but I assumed he would be understanding. His office on the top floor looked vacant of students, at least from down the hall. And sure enough, it was vacant, of everyone. All the sign read was "In Class."

But perhaps the day would not be wasted. After all the class was meeting that morning. I would sit through class and then plead with the man to let me in. I ran through campus so fast that I was not even aware of the stifling humidity. Drenched with perspiration I arrived in the classroom. It had already seemed as though the morning had went on for days. I craved rest and thought I was at the final obstacle from a bus ride home and sleep.

The class was empty but for one student probably in the same boat as I. As I approached him though, I realized I was mistaken. This student was just searching for a quiet place to nap. While the class filled and the perspiration under my arms began again, I simply put my head on the desk in exhaustion. The professor arrived and no sooner did he set his syllabis on the table, did a mass of students beat me to him waving their add-drop forms.

"Hold it," yelled the professor. "This course is overenrolled already and will be taught again in the spring. No more ads."

A lot of good the spring course does me now, I thought. Accepting this as the final rejection to my entrance into Modern Novel, I picked up my course book, left the building, and grabbed the next bus home to sleep.

RANDOM NOTES

As I enter my freshman year in college, I cannot help but think how different my college experiences will be from the experiences of those who entered college in the late 1960's or early 1970's. I also cannot help but think how different my generation is not only from people who went to college during the Vietnam War, but also different from all other generations before us. We do not have any uniform fads or customs among us. We do not have a dance. In the twenties there was the Charleston and in the sixties there was the Twist. We do not have a particular singer or music group who we all like. In the fifties there was Elvis and in the sixties there were the Beatles. We do not even have one particular style of dress. We are a generation of nonconformists.

Some of us like punk, while others like disco, while still others like hard rock. Some of us like blue jeans and tee shirts, while others like new wave styles, while still others might like to be adorned by an alligator or two. We have got a lot of courage! We do and say what we want and what we believe in.

When it comes to politics I do not think many of us are ultra conservative or ultra liberal. I think we are a little more realistic about how government affairs work than students in the late sixties and early seventies. We realize that the government cannot do away with defense and focus the entire budget on social programs. However, we realize that social programs and the defense of our country are both important for the welfare of our citizens and that they should both be treated as two very important issues. You see, we can see both sides of an issue because we are individualists and our vision is clear.

We have so many choices ahead of us. The women of our generation have more opportunities than women ever had before. A whole world is open to them. Women no longer have to get married by thirty and they do not have to give up their job if they get married. The men in our generation treat women much more as equals than men in previous generations have. Because we are individualists and stand up for what we believe in, as a generation we are going to be a great asset to the adult community. I suppose that back in 1965 I made a wise choice when I decided to be born, because I could not have chosen a better generation to be a part of.

Many groups common place

The masses of students who comprise the lifeblood and reason for the existence of UMass are diverse to the point of incredulity. This is one of the University's strengths, for as a public institution, it should serve the public. Sometimes the variety of groups, cults, causes and lifestyles overwhelms. Consider the following:

There are the smokers, jokers, and midnight tokers. This crowd is not as big as it used to be. One of the subgroups of this crowd, the White Line Fevers, is growing as a blizzard of snow sweeps American noses. The gentle smell of Cannabis wafting out of the BOC, Bottom of the Campus, issuing up from the vents and tunnels, and generally drifting out of various other obscure places on campus, is the hallmark of this group.

Brooke States

Opposite the above mentioned group are the drinkers. They start out at Plumbley's, hit the Drake (upstairs and down), move on through "Barsies", Time Out, Judies, Delanos, The Pub, Dastardly Dan's, TOC, Blue Wall, Mike's, and if they are real men, (and women); Seven O's for last call. Some go astray during this migration and wind up in Northampton at the Red Lion Diner, where there is no booze but lots of coffee, and great company on the night shift. The survivors hit the Lord Jeff bar for a Bloody Mary the next morning, scaring the staid patrons right out of their Brooks Brothers underwear.

Then there is the crowd that is taking 42 credits with 12 more on overload. These poor pasty people can be seen furtively staring from their rooms, buying black market caffeine pills, and pulling ten all-nighters in a row. About twice a semester they sneak out for fun, before the crushing weight of guilt and duty drags them back to the books - like salmon to the spawning grounds.

The aim and wish of these three groups is to be like this one; you know, the people who major in Bio-Chem and Pre-Med, party every night all night, always pre-register, get the classes they want, and graduate right on time with a 4.0. One former colleague in the higher education process told me that she did not party on two nights of her whole last semester. Both of the nights were religious holidays. Yet she got out on time with a 3.5. Then there was my freshmen year roomate. I came home from an all nighter at six in the morning. Opened my tower room door, and found his grinning face looking up at me with a bottle of Bacardi 151 rum, dark. When I asked him why he had consumed half a bottle this early in the morning he told me he was getting ready for his eight o'clock class. 'Ere the sun rose he walked down the hallway to the elevator, rock steady and one rum bottle less. Such people should be the first to have their genes placed in laboratories so that the best of the human race can be preserved.

We have jar heads, sprout heads, and dead heads, funkateers, and disco'ers, punk rockers who are making advertisement for Walter Dyer leather. There is the Hatch crowd and the Coffee Shop crowd. Never shall they meet except when one place runs out of french fries or coffee.

There are those of us who are taking years to graduate. In sympathy with our addled minds the University calls us non-traditional rather than older students. It sounds much better to say that when some kid asks if you come with the building.

There is the pool room crowd. Some of them have never left it. Others think up inventive ways to stay there, like trigonometry or physics independent study, sociological raps on crowded areas, or investigative reporting of false measurements of pool cues. We have the Poor Richard's crowd and the Joey D's crowd. (the only thing worse then a man without a country is a clientele without a bar.)

There are politicos who sit behind many tables wearing many hats for many causes and speaking with many tongues - some of them forked, and others tied in knots. (In fairness, most of the causes are good and the people dedicated.) There are pontificating preachers who palaver their puerile pap to crowds about twice a year. (In fairness they are not bad people, but ?&!$ wide of the mark, as Mao Tse Tung once said.)

Finally there are those without whom life at UMass would be boring, such was one of my old roomates. He had a gilded framed copy of a Patty Smith poster above our fireplace. He once got a live band to play at our house on Saturday night, then announced it in the Blue Wall at Friday happy hour, to make sure we would have enough people for a party. He once told me that he could not decide to follow the Pope or Mick Jagger, but when Some Girls came out, it was no contest. After every sort of debauchery known to man he would put on a suit on Sunday, and go to church. When he came back to visit from Boston he hitched up Route 2 with a tennis racket. When I last talked to him he had just woken up in a strange room in Southie with a stranger in the next bed, and the walls covered with Elvis Costello posters. His last memory was of doing lines on a bathroom shelf in Brookline. May such a person rest in peace. So all right lets roll, and HEY HEY HEY. lets be careful out there, huh?

Arts

Trailers by Andy Gordon

Welcome back, movie buffs. Not a bad summer for film, eh? We had such raucous comedies as Mr. Mom and Easy Money heck, a whole bunch of other pisser flicks for small children and people with hurting intellects. Actually, there were a few decent films: Vacation and Trading Places were funny; Blue Thunder, War Games and the new Bond flick were well-paced actioners; there was The Draughtsman's Contract and The Return of Martin Guerre; and on a smaller scale, the beauty of Tender Mercies and Local Hero. Nothing really overwhelming, but not bad overall.

The fall should have some good offerings, most of which will be previewed here in TRAILERS during the coming weeks. Late fall is generally the season the studios release their quality films. For you freshmen, the places to catch flicks in the area are as follows: The Hampshire 4 and Mountain Farms 4 - both located in the respective Hadley malls - show first-run commercial films, with bargain twilight shows and midnight movies on Friday and Saturday. They are accessible by the Northampton bus, as are the Calvin, Academy of Music and Pleasant St. Theatres in Northampton. The Calvin changes it's policy every other wek but right now they're running second-run features. The Academy and Pleasant St. (and it's smaller off-shoot, The Little Theatre) show revivals, foreign and more obscure films. The Amherst Cinema, on Amity St. off of Pleasant in Amherst Center, runs double bills for $2.50. Usually good ones. Then there's the Majestic in Easthampton, but we won't go into that now.

Presently of interest in the area is John Sayles' new film, Baby It's You, starring Rosanna Arquette and my high school buddy (no joke) Vinnie Spano (here looking a lot like Ivan Lendl) at the Pleasant St. and Mountain Farms Theatres. "Betrayal" also at the Hampshire Mall. The Academy has The Draughtsman's Contract and through Saturday the Amherst Cinema has the awesome double feature of King of Hearts and Harold and Maude. Coming to the A.C. areBogey double-bill,Angelo My Love, A Thousand Clowns and Zelig. Coming to the Academy on September 30 is truly bizarre Liquid Sky. It involves tiny aliens who land on the roof of an androgynous New York model's apartment and feed off of a chemical secreted in the brain during orgasm. It's wild! Go see it.

TRAILERS TRIVIA: Director John Landis always plants hidden jokes in his films. Many are recurring; A bogus film titled See You Next Wednesday pops up in Kentucky Fried Movie, American Werewolf and Trading Places. This week's question: How does Landis allude to Animal House in his Twilight Zone episode? The first correct answer will receive an 8x10 glossy of Pia Zadora with a silly grin. Good luck!

Minutemen hope to slay Crusaders

Bob Simeone will be part of the UMass offense that hopes to topple Holy Cross tomorrow in an important game at Alumni Stadium at 1:30.

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

When the University of Massachusetts football team takes the field tomorrow afternoon (1:30 p.m.) at Alumni Stadium for their 1983 home opener against Holy Cross, one thing is certain. There's no where to go but up.

"We have to get better," UMass head coach Bob Pickett said after the 45-13 drubbing by the University of Toledo last Saturday night. "We are a young football team and I know we are going to improve. I can think of no better time to start the improvement than this week."

If the Minutemen plan on pursuing a berth in the Division I-AA playoffs which goes to the Yankee Conference Champion, a bad performance against the Cross, a non-conference opponent, could come back to haunt them later in the year.

It may be premature to start talking about playoffs but when you play in the Yankee Conference, where a tie for the conference championships has become expected, non-conference games become the basis for the selection of a conference representative.

What makes a victory over Holy Cross even more important is the fact that the Crusaders hung a 14-3 loss on the Yankee Conference preseason favorite Boston University last week.

Last year Holy Cross rolled over the Minutemen 27-14 in Worcester and the main man for Holy Cross, quarterback Peter Muldoon, is back for his senior year. Last year Muldoon grabbed game MVP honors with a 10 for 14, 123 yard, two touchdown performance.

"Peter Muldoon is a complete quarterback," noted Pickett, "He's a threat all over the field."

The Crusaders lost their best runner, Andy Clivio, to graduation but head coach Rick Carter was blessed with a sophomore transfer from Louisiana, Gill Fenerty.

Galloping Gill, as the Holy Cross PR people have dubbed the 5'11" 190 lb back, ran for 96 yards on 25 carries and scored both touchdowns for the Crusaders against BU.

"We thought they had a good running back last year in Clivio. They may have even gained a step forward with Fenerty," said Pickett.

As far as the Minutemen are concerned, the offense must move the ball more effectively and cut down on mistakes. Five of the six touchdowns Toledo scored came after UMass mistakes and none of Toledo's six touchdown drives were more than 52 yards.

The Minutemen haven't loss the first two games of the season since (as David Lettermen would say) the late 1950's and coach Carter knows his Crusaders will have to play well to best UMass.

"After losing three in a row last year and sustaining a lot of injuries they made position changes and won three of their last four," said Carter. "They did an amazing job and I'm sure they'll be just as prepared this year."

UMass stickers win again 1-0 over Ohio St.

BY JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team recorded its second win and shut out of the season as they defeated the Lady Buckeyes of Ohio State yesterday, 1-0.

The lone tally of the game came at 29:00 in the first half. On a set corner play, forward Sue Packard crossed the ball to forward Patti Smith, who shot the ball past Buckeye goalie Jacqueline Kelly.

UMass outshot and outpassed Ohio State, but could not come up with more than one goal.

"You have to remember that this is a low scoring game," coach Pam Hixon said. "Right now, we're scoring enough to win. We have the opportunities. We just have to get it in the net. It is a gradual process," she said.

At the 21:00 mark, the Minutewomen had passed their way to the Ohio State Circle and were awarded a series of penalty corners. Forwards Pam Moryl, Packard and Smith all got off hard shots, but the Buckeye defense held strong.

Ohio State cleared the ball, and played it downfield for a few moments, but a series of passes from the backfield to forwards Chris Kocot and Moryl brought the Minutewomen with-in striking distance once again.

"Part of our game plan was to distribute the play of the ball, and we did that really well, today," Hixon said.

Each time the Buckeyes thought they were on their way downfield, backs Andrea Muccini, Chris Coughlin, Nancy Goode and Carol Progulske fed pass after pass to the UMass forward line.

"We were on track offensively," Hixon said, "and we held to our game plan. We just have to finish it off in the circle."

The opportunities kept coming and going but UM couldn't convert. With ten minutes left in the game, Moryl took a pass from the backfield, and broke away from the rest of the pack. Forwards Moryl, Kocot and Diane Kobel headed toward the Buckeye goal, with Moryl in charge of the ball. As Moryl reached the top of the circle, the referee called Kobol offsides, Hixon argued the call, and the crowd reacted strongly, all to no avail.

"That was definitely a potential scoring opportunity," Hixon said. "But we still played around them, and that was our intent."

For the last ten minutes of the games, Ohio State kept all of their players in the circle, using all their strength to keep UMass from scoring again.

The minutewomen next play Boston College on Tuesday. Game time is 4 p.m. at the NOPE playing field.

Pam Moryl outruns her Ohio State opponent in the Minutewomen 1-0 win at NOPE.

Runners host final home meet

By MARTIN E. MURRAY
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's cross-country teams will find ideal running conditions awaiting them, along with their opponents from Boston College, as they open their 1983 campaigns today at NOPE.

The men will take off at 3:30 on a five mile course beginning and ending at NOPE. Captain Rick Doiron, will lead an experienced squad that includes Rod LaFlamme, Jim MacPhee and Jack Marinilli.

Freddy Braz of BC holds the Umass course record of 25:30 (1981). Despite his absence, UMass has to be apprehensive of a fairly solid BC team that includes a freshman sensation by the name of Jose Rocha.

Liberty outsails Australia II

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) - Liberty skipper Dennis Conner caught Australia II on one wind shift and blew it away on another to catapult into a commanding 2-0 lead Thursday in th 25th defense of the America's Cup.

Australia II, however, protested the race, contending that Conner impeded the challenger's progress by illegally crossing it's path on the fourth leg of the six-leg course.

House to vote on bill linking funds to draft

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts House of Representatives this week will vote on and probably pass a bill which will deny state scholarship aid to male students who fail to register with the Selective Service, according to Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst.

Collins said the bill, filed by Rep. Walter DeFillipi, R-West Springfield, "ties $8 million in new state scholarship money which will become available next semester to registration for the draft."

The bill is a state-level version of the Solomon Amendment, which already makes $163 million of federal financial aid awards conditional on male Selective Service registration.

The bill was originally filed in the spring, and was twice recommended for rejection by the Joint Committee on Education, said Collins, who co-chairs the committee with Sen. Gerald D'Amico, D-Worcester.

The House voted 99-47 to overturn the committee's recommendation on Sept. 13, and Collins said "the likelihood is yes" that the bill will pass in the House.

"The reason new life was breathed into it is because the U.S. Supreme Court has put a temporary holding order on a (Minnesota) District Court ruling," which last spring challenged the constitutionality of the Solomon Amendment, Collins said.

Collins said representatives are also angered by recent U.S. Marine casualties in Beirut and the deaths of 269 persons killed when a Soviet jet fighter shot down a Korean Airlines 747 over the Sea of Japan.

"The legislators who support the bill want to send a strong message to the Soviet Union" that the U.S. intends to keep a strong defense, Collins said.

Collins said he thinks the bill is "patently unconstitutional" because it "punishes people administratively without allowing them their day in court."

"Those rights are what we built a strong military for in the first place," Collins said. "I think we're sending the wrong message to the Soviet Union."

Collins said he will be leading the fight against the bill on the floor of the House, and D'Amico will oppose it in the Senate.

Paul Gosselin, chair of the Undergraduate Student Senate Public Policy Committee said his committee has been lobbying members of both chambers to vote against the bill.

Gosselin said the committee will concentrate on lobbying the Senate, where he feels they will be more successful.

Zannini claims freshmen will get housed eventually

By BEN BROGAN
Collegian Correspondent

Freshmen turned away from the Housing Office last week now have spaces reserved for them by the director of housing.

Executive Director of Housing Services Joseph Zannini said Thursday that all freshmen were placed in either permanent or "swing" spaces, but several freshmen who visited the Collegian offices vented their anger at not being housed.

Zannini, who in Thursday's Collegian was quoted as saying "We have housed all the freshmen who wanted housing," now says his office after holding a meeting on Sept. 10th for students without housing.

"We indicated to freshmen students that we didn't have housing, that we couldn't place them at that time," Zannini said.

The freshmen were instructed to return to the Housing Office at a later date, at which time they would receive housing. According to Zannini, the freshmen without housing are those who have not yet reported back to the Housing Office.

"We would be happy to talk to these freshmen and find out what happened," he said.

Gerald Quarles, coordinator of the Housing Assignment Office said Zannini had ordered several spaces made available for the freshmen in question, spaces to be assigned as soon as they report back to the Housing Office.

Buses to remain at Haigis Mall another year

By VIRGINIA WARFIELD
Collegian Correspondent

Buses and regular traffic will not be returning to the Campus Center Circle this year because construction on a baghouse for the University of Massachusetts' campus power plant will not be finished until next summer.

According to Robert Hildreth, Physical Plant engineer in charge of the $4.5 million project, work on the baghouse is on schedule, and the system should be in operation next June.

Hildreth said the baghouse is a small building designed to remove the particles of fly ash that are emitted from the plant.

The particles, which are about the consistency of talcum powder, are too big to be collected in a furnace and are carried out as smoke into the air.

"Whenever you burn coal or wood you get this fly ash," he said. "We estimate about 500 tons is produced per year."

The baghouse will take out the particles of ash so there will be no visible smoke from the plant, which will consequently cut down on polution.

Construction of the baghouse, which began last spring, has forced traffic to the Campus Center Circle and parking garage to be re—routed through parking lot 65. The Campus Center bus stop has been temporarily moved to the Haigis Mall for convenience.

Hildreth said the University is under court order to build the baghouse and eliminate the pollution.

"Our progress is being watched very closely by the court," he said.

The project is being funded by the state and the actual construction is done by the State Division of Capitol Planning and Operation.

After ten years of planning and financing, the contract of the project went out to bid last fall. It was awarded to the contractor with the lowest bid.

Director of Planning, H. Jackson Littlefield said there has been no change in the original budget.

"The contractors bid on a fixed price," he said, "and unless any unusual conditions or problems arise there should be no change in the price or budget."

Hildreth added some minor corrections may be made after the project is finished next spring, but the baghouse should be in full operations by June. Buses and traffic, he said, should be returning to the Campus Center Circle in the summer.

Cardinal Medeiros dies Saturday

Pope mourns passing

VATICAN CITY AP —Pope John Paull II on Sunday expressed his "deep personal sorrow" over the death of Cardinal Humberto Medeiros, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Boston.

The pontiff sent two messages of condolence, one to the archdiocese of Boston and the other to Archbishop John R. Roach, president of the u.s. National Conference of Catholic Bishops, the Vatican said.

Medeiros,67, died Saturday after heart surgery in Boston.

"As I extend my condolences to the beloved archdiocese of Boston that he Medeiros served with such intense pastoral zeal, I impart my apostolic blessing to all who mourn in Christian hope," the pope said in his message to the archdiocese.

The pope is not expected to name Medeiros' successor immediatelty. After the death of a top prelate, teh Vatican normally observes at least a two month mourning period, and considers suggestions from the country's bishops and Vatican delegate, before naming a successor.

Cardinal JohnP.Cody of Chicago died on april 25, 1982, but the pope did not name his successor, Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin, until July 8.

Medeiros' death reduced the number of Roman Catholic cardinals to 132, of whom 19 are under the age of 80 and eligile to take part in papal election.

HUMBERTO CARDINAL MEDEIROS dead at age 67

Cause of death a mystery

Physicians who cared for Cardinal Humberto Medeiros said his death puzzled them and an autopsy failed to reveal the cause of the cardinal's death.

"We've all seen patients die who you didn't expect to," said Dr. Joseph Stetz, a cardiac surgeon who attended the cardinal all Friday night and Saturday morning.

"But in this case everything looked normal. That's what is so crazy about this thing," he said.

The 67—year— old cardinal suffered cardiac arrest at 6:35 a.m Saturday, 17 hours after surgery. On Friday he underwent six hours of surgery to repair a leaky heart valve and improve the blood supply to his heart.

Members of the medical team said they could think of nothing that could have been done differently to prevent cardiac arrest.

It was considered possible that doctors were unaware of the extent of Medeiros' heart disease because he did not complain and may have minimized the importance of chest pain.

"My suspicion is that His Emminence was probably having angina pain and minimizing it, maybe 'walking through it, Dr. John O. Pastore, the cardinal's cardiologist, said Saturday.

"It wasn't until Sept. 6 that I was sure that he was really having angina," he said.

He added that previous tests had not indicated that Medeiros had suffered a significant "silent" heart attack, probably years earlier, that had damaged his heart.

Soviets search for airliner; warn Japan to stay away

WAKKANAI, Japan (AP) — A Soviet search vessel lowered a small yellow submarine Sunday into international waters where the downed South Korean airliner is believed to have crashed and warned a Japanese patrol boat to stay away from the area, the Japanese navy said.

In Edinburgh, Scotland, the editor-in-chief of the Soviet Communist Party newspaper Pravda criticized his nation's military for the six-day delay in acknowledging that one of its fighter jets shot down the airplane.

However the editor, Victor Afanasyev, interviewed by the British Broadcasting Corp. insisted the attack was justified, and that the Soviet Union would never apologize or compensate the victims."Any apology or compensation would amount to an admission of guilt on our part, and we do not regard ourselves as guilty," he said.

In the Sea of Japan, the 15,000-ton Georgi Kozumin opened a hatch near the bow and lowered the sub into the waters, said Rear Adm. Masayusho Kato of the Japanese Maritime Safety Agency. Three men boarded the underwater craft before it submerged, he said.

The Georgi Kozumin signaled by flag to the Japanese vessel Rebun to "move north" away from the Soviet search zone, 25 miles north of the tiny Soviet island of Moneron, off Sakhalin's southwest coast, Kato said.

He said the submarine was different from one used in two previous Soviet dives.

The zone is dominated by at least 23 Soviet vessels, including the 8,200-ton guided missile cruiser Petropavlovsk.

Harvard students create artificial chromosome

Two youthful Harvard University researchers have created what they contend is the first man—made chromosome, a possible tool in determining why genetic disorders strike humans.

"This artificial chromosome eventually will be important, we hope in finding out what things go wrong, as they do, in genetic disorders such as Downs Syndrome," a researcher, Dr. Jack W. Szostak, 30, of Montreal, said Sunday.

"You can always argue about what you can call a chromosome and what you can't," he added, referring to questions other scientists have raised about what he and his colleague, Andrew M. Murray, have created.

"What we've made does not behave perfectly. Normal chromosomes are inherited with very good fidelity. The one we've made is occassionally lost, in the sense that when a cell divides, one of the two daughter cells does not inherit the artificial chromosome.

Referendum may cut legislators' power

BOSTON AP — The dispute over a referendum that would restructure that would restructure the Legislative to cut the power of the House and Senate leaders goes before the state Supreme Court Monday.

The Coalition for Legislative Reform lost the first round of this long battle when Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti refused to certify their initiative petition. The coalition appealed.

The first issue before Justice Paul J. Liacos on Monday is a request for preliminary injunction that would allow the sponsors to go ahead gathering signatures until the court decides whether Bellotti was right.

Thomas R. Kiley, Bellotti's top assistant, said the attorney general doesn't object to an injunction. However, Bellotti's office will argue to have his ruling upheld. That larger issue may be considered by the full vourt later.

The petition is a lengthy proposed law that would curb the powers of the presiding officers in the HOuse and Senate over committees, the flow of legislation and patronage.

New Hampshire town has pink jail cells

MILFORD, N.H. — So far, the comments about Milford's pink jail cells are coming more from outside the cells than from in them, says Patrolman Jerry Breeyear.

But, although the results aren't in, police eventually hope the color helps them handle rowdy prisoners, says Breeyear.

"Statistics may eventually be gathered," he said, then added tongue—in—cheek, "Maybe our local paint stores had a special..."

Police Chief Steven Sexton ordered the cells painted pink several months ago after he heard about a theory that color affects a person's mood. Pink, he was told, has a claming effect on hostile or agitated inmates.

The cells, which were silver, also needed painting, said Breeyear.

Reviews from the prisoners, who usually remain in the small cells under 24 hours, are mixed. Breeyear added, "Most of the comments we get are from the outside."

Some R.I. teachers end their walkouts

About 1,000 Teachers in Warwick R.I., were expected to report for orientation Monday, but it was unclear whether 640 striking teachers in Pawtucket would obey a judge's order to end their week — long walkout.

The Warwick Teachers Union on Sunday rejected the school department's latest offer of a three-year contract with raises of 6 percent in the first year, 7.6 percent the second and 7 percent in the third.

Clyde D. Bennett, Warwick school superintendent, said the contract also would have afforded "othodonture coverage in the first year and prescription coverage in the third."

Despite the lack of a contract, Bennett said he was optimistic teachers would report for orientation on Monday as they were ordered to do Friday by a Superior Court judge.

Talks failed to produce an agreement on Friday between school officials and the Pawtucket Teacher's Alliance which is letting individual teachers decide whether to heed another judge's order to begin teaching 8,700 students.

Trustees raise pay scales for administrators

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

WALTHAM--The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees authorized Thursday pay-scale increases for senior University administrators and approved a plan designed to improve University relations and guide future development.

The pay scales approved by the Trustees set new minimum and maximum possible salaries for three top campus administrators, but did not change anyone's present salary.

Under the new guidelines, the chancellor's minimum salary would be $75,000 and the maximum $95,000, while the University vice president would make between $55,000 and $75,000, and University deans would make from $52,000 to $72,000.

Andrew Knowles, chairman of the Trustee's Budget and Financial Affairs, presented the new pay scales for approval, but he left the meeting without disclosing previous pay scales. No exact figures were available on campus either. However, former student Trustee Jim Murphy said the new figures represented an increase of approximately $10,000 in the chancellor's pay scale. The other pay scale raises are probably similar, he said.

Trustee and Financial Affairs Committee member Stan Kurzman said the increases were necessary "to keep the quality of administrators at the level we would like it."

"The only way to attract top level educators is with the hard dollars, unfortunately," he said.

The Trustees also confirmed Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey's appointment of Deirdre A. Ling as vice chancellor for University Relations and Development, and approved the University Relations and Development Organizational Plan, which covers all three UMass campuses.

"The development plan may well be the most important thing we do in the next 20 years," said Trustee John Sweeney.

Ling said the plan will "define the goals and objectives for the University in the area of development and public relations as well as alumni relations."

UMass President David C. Knapp said the plan will "expand the funding base of the University" through alumni contributions and research involving business in the University.

The Trustees also allocated $125,000 from the Trustee Reserve to the Remote Sensing Center, which collects data from satellites and processes it for use by private businesses.

Sweeney said the center receives data from sensor-mapping satellites, which can detect "anything from fish in the sea to minerals in the ground."

"Our University has found the better way to utilize that information," Sweeney said. "We need to keep the University ahead, and get companies to buy that service."

The grant provides $75,000 to keep the center going until January, Knowles said, and $50,000 "to study the feasibility of remote sensing as a business venture."

"If we don't have anything to propose by January, we can shut the center down," Knowles said.

Gary Hart returns to UMass

By RICHARD HANCOCK
Collegian Correspondent

Sen. Gary Hart, D, Colorado, will return tomorrow to the University of Massachusetts for the second time since announcing his intentions of seeking the Democratic nominations for president in 1984. Hart last visited UMass in March, speaking out against Reagan administration policies in central America and stating that his administration would instigate a "180 degree (reverse) in policy toward Latin America." Hart also expressed his dissatisfaction with the reagan record on educaiton. Calling it a "NATIONAL SCANDAL."

Hart campaign organizers on campus have said that their candidate will reaffirm his commitment on these issues, and will also be actively recruiting student volunteers for the upcoming New Hampshire presidential primary, the nation's first official primary race.

Hart feels it is his responsibility to contact students directly to address their concerns and to stimulate active participation in the primary process, they said.

David Nelso, a student coordinator for the Hart campaing, considers this visit to UMass a special one, calling it a "Unique opportunity for UMass students to have access to a presidential candidate."

"The senator was impressed with the level of awareness of the UMass student," Nelson said, "He finds organized encounters with students a challenge."

Hart will speak at 4:00 p.m. tomorrow in front of the Student Union Building. He will make a brief statement, followed by a question and answer seeion. After the open open forum, Hart will meet with student leaders.

Part - time students will get degree program in spring

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

A new part-time students' degree program is expected to be ready for spring pre-registration, according to Dean of Students William Field.

The program was proposed to begin this fall, but the Faculty Senate has not yet approved it. The major recommendations have been agreed to by everyone, but financial details must still be worked out, Field said.

The new program is a "redefinition of what a part-time student is," Field said.

According to the final report of the Task Force on Part-Time Students, a part-time student is "any student registered for 11 credits or less." Admission standards and degree requirements will be uniform for all students regardless of full-time or part-time status, the report stated.

"The new program will allow equal access to all areas of the University except the Division of Continuing Education and graduate programs," Field said.

Continuing Education students may apply to the University degree programs as part or full-time students. However, they must complete the last 30 credits in residence as University degree-seeking students, according to the Task Force report.

Like full-time undergraduates, part-time students must complete all degree requirements in 10 semesters.

"For students engaged in part-time study, 12 credits will be considered equivalent of one semester. Students involved in part-time study must complete their last 60 credits in five years," the report stated.

Native Americans pow-wow at Campus Pond

Three Native Americans dance in traditional clothing as part of this weekend's pow-wow on the Campus Pond.

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

Native Americans from all over the eastern United States and Canada came to the University of Massachusetts this weekend for the first inter-tribal pow-wow, performing their music and dances and selling hand-crafted jewelry, art work and food.

According to Thelma Griffith-Johnson, director of the Office of Affirmative Action, the pow-wow went well. The purpose of the pow-wow was to bring together the Native Americans and increase the number of Native American students at UMass, which now stands between 290 and 300, Griffith-Johnson said.

"We wanted to let the Native American community understand that the University of Massachusetts would welcome them," she said. "Also, we want to try to encourage Native Americans to send their children to this campus."

The teepees and tents were set up next to the campus pond in one large circle. While drummers and dancers equipped with head dresses and multi-colored feathers, performed in a roped off area in the center of the circle, other Native Americans sold an assortment of handicrafts. Everything from beaded jewelry to porcupine and quill jewelry to portraits made in sand to paintings of burning tobacco in order to ward off evil spirits was sold at the pow-wow.

One vendor, Richard Page (Running Springs) was pleased with the outcome of the pow-wow.

"Being the first time (at UMass) I can't say that I'm disappointed with the crowd," Page said.

Seneca Indian Don Sundonn from Buffalo, New York disagreed.

"I haven't sold anything here and it was not worth my while to come," he said. "I figured at least a good attendance for the singing and dancing."

Only a small number of people observed the dancing and singing on Saturday. The sunshine brought out more people on Sunday in time for an entertaining dance contest and a final circle dance in which everyone was invited to participate.

"This is my first time being here," seven-year-old Donny Marhefka said about his first encounter with the Native Americans. "I thought they were going to chase me around."

"I think it's just perfect for me," six-year-old Marti Andrews said about the dancing. "I was dancing. I bet you it would be hard work, though."

Hospital holds events to educate

By RISA FREEMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton will hold a series of events to commemorate National Emergency Medicine Week, which is being celebrated this week.

The events are being offered in cooperation with the American College of Emergency Physicians, which is coordinating the third annual national celebration.

"The hospital's emergency department provides an especially important community and regional service," Willis H. Brucker, CDH administrator said.

"Coupled with the responsiveness of our area Emergency Medical Technicians (EMTs) who serve on area ambulance and fire department services, our communities are much safer and healthier places in which to live."

"There are basically two goals for Emergency Medicine Week," Nick Costa, director of Development and Community Relations at the hospital, said. "They are to honor all emergency care professionals and to educate and to make the public aware of the level of skills available in order to rescue and save lives."

Brucker said that the hospital's emergency medical services organization "remains committed to maintaining high standards of care. We're pleased to salute them and provide educational events to the public during National Emergency Medicine Week."

Public events range from a demonstration of the emergency medical transfer helicopter to a free blood pressure screening this Friday from 3 p.m. to 8 p.m. in the Outpatient Department Lobby at CDH. City and hospital officials will take part in a drunk driving demonstration today from 9 a.m. to noon at LaFleur Airport in Northampton. Special training sessions in the Heimlach maneuver, used to save choking victims, are scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday at 9 a.m., noon, 3 p.m. and 5 p.m. in the Outpatient Department of CDH. There will also be a demonstration of the steps used to save a heart attack victim Thursday at 7 p.m. in Conference Room A of the hospital.

Co-sponsoring specific events with the Cooley Dickinson Hospital are Hampshire County REACT, New England Life Flight, Easthampton Savings Bank, and the Hampshire County Emergency Medical Services Association, Inc.

Student groups seek members

By DAVID MUNIZ
Collegian Staff

As part of this week's ongoing "First Week" events, a referral fair was held Thursday on the lawn outside the Student Union Building.

Delphin Quarles of the Student Activities Office called the event a complete success. The event was organized by the First Week planning committee.

"The fair had two main purposes. It gave students an opportunity to talk and meet with representatives of various organizations, and it also gave the departments an opportunity to show who they are and what they do," she said.

With over 45 tables exhibiting an array of activities and organizations, there was something for everyone.

"It was pretty interesting, just seeing all of the different groups, and finding out about them was fun," said Sara Frankel, one of the many students who attended the fair and whose hands were filled with colorful pamphlets and papers.

Representatives from different clubs also voiced contentment.

"It's really great being mixed in with a lot of other organizations," said Dave Kumlin of the University of Massachusetts crew team. "I've gotten a lot of people interested in the sport."

Margaret Reiley, of the Emergency Medical Technician (EMT) program was stationed behind her resuscit-Anne doll. "People stop by asking about courses in CPR (cardiopulmonary resuscitation). It's gotten a good response," she said.

At the hang-gliding exhibit, students could buy raffle tickets for a stereo. Brenton Blake, a member of the club, voiced optimism for this year's club.

"We are psyched for a really good year. There's going to be a lot of new people this year," he said, noting the "overwhelming" response from students interested in joining the club at the fair.

The weather was good, with the skies sunny and clear, and just a hint of autumn in the air.

Women's center needs volunteers

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

In an effort to raise community awareness around issues of rape, battering and social attitudes harmful to women, the Everywoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts is now recruiting volunteers and interns.

The Educator/Advocate Program of the center is seeking "students and non-students who are committed to change" in respect to educating people on the issues of violence against women, said Martha Tapia, education coordinator for the center.

Educator/advocates design and implement educational programs and activities in the five college area and in the local community.

Training is provided and academic credit or letters of reference may be obtained.

Educator/advocates comprise "quite a variety of students" from fashion marketing to English Literature to the social sciences. Most of them are, however, upper level students, she said.

Educator/advocates also research and update pertinent information related to issues of rape, battering and societal attitudes harmful to women.

The center, which is University funded and offers many services to area women, also has a number of other positions open for volunteers.

The counselor/advocate program is seeking people interested in crisis intervention counseling.

The counselor/advocate program began in 1976 to assist victims of rape, battering and other forms of sexual assault.

The basis of the counselor/advocate program is an emergency on-call system providing coverage year round.

Interested individuals in either the Educator/Advocate Program or the Counseling/Advocate Program may obtain detailed information and applications at the Everywoman's Center located in Wilder Hall.

Writing course offered

The Southwest Residential College is offering a course titled "Diggin and Data Gathering," designed to teach students how to research and write term papers. The three credit course meets Tuesdays from 6:30 to 9 p.m. in the fifth floor lounge of Coolidge dormitory. Carol Ozier can be contacted at 549—4600 for more information.

Bible class available

English Professor Lee Beatty announces an added section of her class, "The Bible: Myth, Society and Literature." The course listed as English 203, will meet MWF at 2:30 p.m.

"It's really not a gut," Beatty said, noting the reading is simple but the course covers a lot of "territory."

"It's really of lifelong value——everyone agrees it's useful to know the basics," she said in reference to the course.

Panel discussion focuses on US policy in Central America

By BROOKE STATES
Collegian Staff

Two different views on what is happening in Central America and what the role of the United States is were presented during a panel discussion Thursday night at the University of Massachusetts.

Two of the panelists supported United States aid to El Salvador, and felt that the United States was advancing democratic aims. Two did not.

Peter Sarros, a U.S. State Department foreign service officer, began the discussion.

"United States policy has four broad areas. They are: support for democratic human rights, support for economic rights, support for dialogue and negotiations, and military assistance," he said.

"We have tried to deal with those on the left who would be willing to test the popular will in elections" Sarros said.

Janet Shenk, who has traveled to El Salvador and worked in Ecuador from 1971 to 1975, disputed Sarros.

Opposition to the present government in El Salvador started out as an electoral attempt to change power, she said. When that was thwarted, opposition then moved to civil disobedience, which was met with repression from the government, Shenk said.

It was only in 1980 and 1981, when all other forms of change had been stifled, that large scale armed resistance began, she said.

"I have been to El Salvador three times in the last twelve months with United States delegations. The view is different from inside El Salvador. Fourty thousand non-combatants have been killed in the last three years. The only thing that has changed is that the Salvadoran army has learned to bury the dead," she said. Shenk said that voting was compulsory by law in El Salvador and people had to have proof they voted. "I know guerillas who voted," she said.

Doctor Charles Clements, a Vietnam war veteran who spent a year in a rebel-held zone in El Salvador treating civilian casualties, also differed with Sarros. He compared the recent Salvadoran elections to elections held in Mississippi before the civil rights movement.

Colonel Samuel Dickens, a speaking consultant for the American Security Council, was interrupted by applause in support of Cuba's role in Central America. Dickens said that the core leadership of the Nicaraguan leadership was trained in Cuba.

"There is little discussion about exiled Nicaraguans who are trying to take back the revolution and put it in the hands of democracy," he said.

The United States-supported rebels, who are in El Salvador and Honduras, were attacked by Shenk, for trying to overthrow the Nicaraguan government.

"There is more freedom in Nicaragua than Honduras. In Nicaragua there is an opposition newspaper; they do not have that in Honduras," he said.

Sarros said that the Nicaraguan government was practicing repression and they were exporting "revolution without frontiers". He called on the Nicaraguan government to hold elections.

"We have sent 610 million dollars in economic assistance to the region, 120 development projects, and only $196 million in military assistance," he said.

MORE SWEET DREAMS

Jackson should run for office

Let's get one thing straight right now-Jesse Jackson has about as much chance of becoming president as Charles Manson has of becoming the Pope. I know it, you know it, Jackson himself knows it. So why should he run?

Before I tell you why, let me say that although it shouldn't matter, I am White. Yet I look at this issue from the perspective of an American, concerned about the future of American politics. Also, in all honesty, if Jackson runs, I doubt I'll vote for him.

Reuven Carlisle

The main reason I feel Reverend Jackson should run for the presidency is Black morale. So far, Reverend Jackson has sparked voter registration and political motivation among Blacks (especially in the South) such that this country hasn't seen since the 1960s. To a large number of Blacks, Reverend Jackson represents the rejuvenation of the spirit and drive that was so effective in the 60s, yet which has been rather dormant for a good decade or so.

The second and most tangible reason for a Jackson candidacy is Black voting. Both supporters and critics of Jackson acknowledge that if he announces his candidacy the number of voting Blacks will increase from 8.2 million in 1980 to over 12 million in 1984. After about a decade of relatively little action in the areas of political, social, and economic progress for Blacks, that seems like a good way to get the 1980s moving.

If you, like myself, were one of the 300,000 who marched for jobs, peace, and freedom in the swealtering 96 degree heat of Washington, D.C., last August and heard Reverend Jackson's voice ring across the Lincoln memorial grounds in its fiery, motivating tone, you know what I'm talking about. When his voice thundered with "There's a freedom train a comin', but you've got to register to ride," I knew from the looks on hundreds of faces, both Black and White, young and old, that he truly had a following. They really believe in him on the grass roots level.

It seems the greatest fear people have of a Jackson candidacy is the splitting of votes which would guarantee Ronald Reagan an easy re-election in 1984. Yet it is important to understand that even if every Black in the South and a good number of Whites voted for Jackson, the maximum amount of electoral votes Jackson could ever dream of winning is less than 200 in about six states. That's out of a national total of more than five thousand--not much bargaining power-and he knows it. The only damage Jackson would incure would be the nervous breakdown of a few KKK members.

Now what about Reverend Jesse Jackson on a personal basis? The 41 year old illegitimate child of a teenager was one of the only Blacks in his segregated South Carolina hometown to go to college. This is where he became the quarterback for the football team and President of the Student Body. Later he joined the ministry in which he worked with Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. and was a participant in the civil rights movement.

Jackson soon became head of "Operation Breadbasket" a self help organization in Chicago. This experience laid the groundwork for his extensive understanding of our economic system. Jackson was one of the first civil rights leaders to advocate economic equality. He is directly responsible for contracts between major U.S. corporations and the Black community amounting to over one billion dollars. In addition to the economy, Reverend Jackson stresses a bond between the family, school and God. Yet he does have a conflict with the issue of abortion, because he is morally opposed to it, yet recognizes a woman's right to control her body. Simply, Reverend Jackson beat the odds and believes other people, Black and White can do the same with guidance, support, education, and direction.

Now in all honesty I have a few problems with Reverend Jackson, such as his harsh words directed toward the Democratic party, without which progress for Blacks would have been slowed to a crawl even in the 1960s. Also I don't like his separation from other civil rights leaders because it causes tension between a minority which needs its unity.

In short, I'm not saying Reverend Jackson is the best person for the job of the presidency, yet I do believe that a Jackson campaign would inspire voter registration and political motivation among Blacks that would bring great credit to the American political process. As one prominent Black politician said about a Jackson candidacy, "Some people say may the best man win, I say may the greatest cause endure." The Reverend Jesse Jackson represents that cause.

I believe it is important for children to see both Black and White people running for the most important office in the free world-on equal terms. If they don't see a Black presidential candidate in 1984, when? If they don't see the Reverend Jesse Jackson, then who?

Flight 007 needs answers

The recent tragedy of the downed Korean airliner is begining to read like a James Bond novel. High—security military bases, electronically enhanced intelligence recordings, and secret nuclear missile tests could all be found gracing the pages of a new Bond thriller. Unfortunately, flight 007 did not have the miraculous abilities of escape that agent 007 possesses, which means the world is going to have to cope with the fact that 269 innocent men, women, and children have been killed in an incident over which they had no control.

John Gilman

This Soviet action certainly warrants some sort of response on the part of the world, but the actions to be taken need to be arrived at in a rational and deliberate manner. To arrive at a decision in this manner, the clouds of controversy surrounding the incident must be cleared.

What the world needs are answers to a number of unanswered questions. First and foremost, what was the Korean 747 doing there at all? Why did the airliner fail to respond to Soviet radio transmissions? Why did the Soviet Union fail to contact American or Japanese air traffic controllers before firing on the jet? Why did American intelligence operations fail to react to information confirming the Soviet's stepped up air defense activity? There are too many questions, too many unknowns involved for anyone to make an intelligent decision concerning this henious act, but nonetheless the cries for action ring louder than the calls for information.

This is not the time to be calling for sanctions, for compensation, or for public apologies. The propoganda war that is now going on between the United States and the Soviet Union can only obscure the facts, and perhaps bury them forever. A propaganda victory on our part will do nothing to help ease the pain of the relatives of the 269 victims, nor will itcreate an atmosphere by which tragedies of this sort can be prevented in the future. Our response has been premature, and some might say self8erving. Certainly this administration looks on gleefully whilepeople call for an end to the nuclear freeze movement, more money for the MX missile, and a tougher stance towards Soviet expansion in Central America. This incident does not clearly illustrate that the Soviets are blood—thirsty, uncivilized, lying, barbarian, war—mongers, and those who think that it does are just adding to the hysteria.

Could the plane have picked a worse time to fly over the soviet bases?The Russians had planned a nuclear missile test for that very evening; certainly they were going to be very sensitive to violations of the airspace over the test site. The presence of a U.S. surveillance plane in the area earlier could only have heightened the tensions. It is quite easy to imagine a Soviet military officer overeacting under such circumsatnees, especially when flight 007 did not respond to radio communications. Let us hope our military officers would not be guilty of the same mistake if the situations were reversed.

This does not absolve the Soviets for their behavior, nor does it do anything for the people whose loved ones were on that flight. But the whole world is not in agreement with the United States as far as what actually took place on the night of September 1st. If the United Nations Security Council vote on the resolution condemning the Soviet Union is a good barometer of world opinion, then the fact that the United States was barely able to whip into line the nine votes necessary to pass the resolution indicates that the world is waiting for more information before deciding where the blame lies. Before we start labelling people as dupes of Soviet propaganda, we had better take a long look at our own information amchine. The facts are not in yet and truth is not out. The wise man does not form an opinion until he has his facts straight. the same should hold for any nation.

Letters

To the Editor,

I am writing in response to Mr. Barrett's article, "Russians Are Not To Trusted" (Collegian Sept. 14, 1983).

There There is no debating zhe fact that the Soviet government is one to be deplored and distrusted; but that has nothing to do with arms control and the nuclear freeze.

In his article Mr. Barrett correcIqy assesses from deep research and the use of key sources that "A thermonuclear war would be fatal to capitalism." Well, that can be taken one step further; a thermonuclear war would be fatal to everyone.

According to the U.S. Dept. of Defense, we have 10,000 nuclear warheads as opposed to the Soviets' 8500. It appears that Mr. Barrett has been a victim of President Reagan's rhetoric, lies told by our president to make us believe that the Soviets are militarily superior to us.

The nuclear freeze is one that can be verified by American satelites, so relying on Soviet misinformation would not be a problem. What Mr. Barrett advocates is a massive military arms build—up which would only increase diplomatic tension and open up the possibility of a nuclear war. As Mr. Barrett points out, nuclear superiority did not help us in 1982--nor will it help us in 1983.

In closing, I would just like to add that if being a nuclear freeze advocate associated myself with the Soviet Union, I would as a God—fearing American withdraw my view.

To the Editor,

We wholeheartedly support any effort to enhance the cultural awareness of the students at UMass. This weekend's Pow Wow on the campus lawn was a fine way to enrich the students in the ways of the Native American culture. We are appalled, however, that the organizers of the event did not consider that 15 percent of the students who contribute to the SATF fund which was funding half of this event, were not able to attend. This is due to the fact that Saturday was Yom Kippur, the most holy day of the Jewish year.

We should hope in the future that other RSO groups are not as negligent meeting the varied cultural needs among the sutudent body at UMass.

A rare and unsentimental perception of Greek history

ELENI
By Nicholas Gage
Random House, 470 pages, $15.95

By CHRISTINE MARINI
Collegian Staff

Nicholas Gage's memoir/biography Eleni is subtitled 'A Savage War, A Mother's Love, and a Son's Revenge: "A Personal Story.' This is perhaps the clearest possible explanation for this complex and excruciating recollection and reconstruction of the brutal effects that the Greek Civil War of the 1940's wrought upon a small mountain village.

Gage, a former investigative reporter for the New York Times, was born Nikole Gatzoyiannis. His early childhood (in the'40's) was spent with his mother and sisters in Lia, a village in the Mourgana mountain range near the Greek/Albanian border. His father, Christos, had emigrated to Worcester, Massachusetts, and only rarely visited his family in Greece, leaving the care and upbringing of the children to his wife, Eleni.

To understand Eleni's situation (and thus Gage's book) one must be aware of the traditional, patriarchal structure of Greek society. In Lia, as in much of Greece, a woman goes from her father's roof and rule to her husband's and has no choice in the arrangement. Initiative and the ability to take care of one's self are not cultivated in females; the rigors of farming and child-rearing occupied these women while their husbands were on the road as tinkers and peddlers for most of the year.

Christos showered his family with gifts enough to make them the wealthiest people in Lia. Eleni had to deal with the envy and resentment of poorer women, who saw her good fortune as a kind of betrayal. In the tiny village rage built up slowly, and small slights and inequities were remembered. The ill will of these women would grow to have tragic significance as the village, and the world, went to war.

The outbreak of WWII made communication with Christos in America unreliable. Increasingly, Eleni had to brave her neighbors' displeasure and think for herself in order to feed her family. The independence she developed was to become even more necessary as WWII led into the bloody Civil War between the communist and nationalist forces.

Throughout the long, bitter years of the struggle, Eleni, trapped in an occupied zone, dreamed only of bringing her children to safety in America. Her earlier wealth was played against her in the communist-controlled Lia, making her life very difficult. Through famine, conscription, torture, and even death, Eleni's dream of freedom became an obsession. Ultimately, her children were saved, but she was not.

Gage and his sisters emigrated to the United States in 1948 to live with their father. Gage seemed to assimilate; he received his M.A. and became esteemed in his field. But nagging doubts and a great sorrow would not allow him to forgive or forget his mother's murderers. His own love and rage festered over the years and at last drove Gage back to Greece to pin down the events that led to Eleni's death.

The result is this personal history that is not, as many such books are, marred by undue sentimentality or unfocused historical perceptions. Gage's exacting skill as a reporter prevents his emotions from taking the helm, and it is this emotional reticence that makes Eleni all the more poignant. One can feel the power of time and anguish behind this work, and it is disturbing. Eleni is as valid as it is moving, and stands as a worthy contribution to biographical literature.

The making of a revolutionary

Zoe Tamerlis challenges American stereotypes of the terrorist

By DAVID JONES
Collegian Correspondent

Curfew: USA, a 35mm independent film is now shooting scenes at different locations in the Five College area. The film, portions of which have already been filmed in New York City and Central America, is set for inter-commercial distribution next year and is being made from a script/novel written by it's star Zoe Tamerlis. Tamerlis is a graduate of Mount Holyoke College and a veteran of international films such as the critically acclaimed cult film Ms. 45.

With Curfew: USA, Tamerlis has set out with the help of people around the world to make a film "independent" of the constrictions of Hollywood.

"We consider ourselves a precedent for struggling filmmakers," explains Tamerlis.

"We own all our own equipment, yet we work almost entirely with volunteers. People and organizations have given money in many denominations, also their time and resources. As in the film itself, commitment is total, with all one is, does, and has."

The film itself exists as a study of various levels of commitment both in front of and behind the camera. Although the progression of the film's plot could be compared to a Hitchcock-like political thriller, the action draws from a deeper source than that of the conventional thriller; it's fueled by the increasingly more potent moral choices that each of the characters must make, eventually leading them from mere slogans to direct actions. In the same way, the makers of Curfew have also made moral and political choices that have resulted in the direct action of the making and writing of this film.

The plot of the film serves to make this clear. Una Horn (played by Zoe Tamerlis) is a feminist actress from the U.S. who travels to a Latin American country called San Federal. Although there are definite parallels to El Salvador, the country stands as a universal theoretical proving ground in which two women, Una and Bianca Peralta (who is tentatively set to be played by Bianca Jagger) are by conscious choice pitted against one another. Bianca is the wife of the President of San Federal and her choice is that of evil, destruction, and underhanded methods in dealing with the insurgency in her country. Una chooses to help the guerillas by distributing medical supplies and prophylactics to the "free territories." But she is kidnapped by guerillas and, in a confrontation with Bianca's army which had used Una to find the rebels, she inadvertently kills an American adviser. Una acts in a way that furthered the aims of the guerillas, but hers was an act of fear and chance, not of conscious choice. The rest of the story traces how a naive but concerned woman like Una is changed by the necessity of responding to increasingly strong moral challenges: to take an action based on conscience.

Una is asked to join the guerillas, but she opts to return to the U.S. The State Department wants her not to confess but to become an informer, and so she takes a stand and decides not to talk. This impresses her interrogator Aldous Tate, himself an aging Sixties radical, and he falls in love with Una. Meanwhile, news arrives that Bianca will be arriving as the official envoy of San Federal to sign a pact treaty whereby neutron weapons will be sent to her country to wipe out the people of the insurgency — but not the foreign industrial installations. Together Una and Aldous decide to take the final step — the assassination of Bianca. After this decision is made, Una travels to her old college in search of conspirators.

This part of the script, a strong critique of the American Left, is being filmed locally. The scene, code named "Diogenes," will be shot at Mt. Holyoke College, and concerns a confrontation between Una and a group of radical lesbian feminists whom Una challenges to advance their beliefs into action. The women are eager to help until they find that the potential target is a woman, whereupon they back down, and Una becomes enraged. The filmmakers are looking for volunteers to help in filming this scene. Amateur and professional actors and actresses are urged to contact the casting department immediately at the number given at the end of this article. These and other scenes, some possibly to be filmed at UMass, will be built around the volunteers that are chosen.

Another scene that has already been filmed locally features the former singer/songwriter of Kaspar Hauser David Wildman, and his new band, Rapture of the Deep. Wildman has written music that will appear in various parts of the film. This scene, shot at the Mt. Holyoke College amphitheatre, depicts the band playing with their backs to an empty stadium as Una slowly descends the steps behind them. Through alternate shots of Una and band members singing the words to "Dancing in the Wasteland," a connection is made between Una's revolutionary consciousness and the similar consciousness present in the music.

Although Una eventually kills Bianca, it's important to note that Curfew:USA does not advocate violence. The killing of Bianca is a metaphor for the consequence of total commitment to a belief, be it film, music, or the U.S. involvement in El Salvador. It's a powerful message though, and despite the obstruction of Ms. Tamerlis's speeches and screenings at some neighboring colleges, the film continues to roll, and should be completed in time for the Venice film festival next year.

Once again, Tamerlis would like to encourage all those who feel they can contribute something to the making of Curfew: USA to please come forward. For more information, call Sarah at 467-9247.

Zoe Tamerlis brings things into focus on the set of Curfew:USA. Portions of the film are set to be filmed on location at Mount Holyoke College.

UMass spikers finish second

By ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team was steaming hot this weekend. In the finals of their 16 team tournament, however, UMass was one missing ingredient. They were lacking experience. It's one of those intangibles that no coach can teach, just ask head coach Elaine Sortino.

All weekend, the young UMass team played extraordinarily well. Praise was heard from every corner of Boyden Gym. Following their semi-final match with Eastern Connecticut State College, ECSC coach Floretta Crabtree said, "They beat us. What can I say, they never broke down." This was a popular lament from UMass victims.

These victims included Bryant College, Brown University, Eastern Nazarene in pool play and Eastern Conn. and Boston College in the quarter and semi-final matches. The saga continued until the final match versus Occidental College, from Los Angeles.

The finals could not have been mapped out any better. The match pitted West coast Occidental against East coast UMass, the only undefeated teams left. The older, experienced Occidental (3rd in the nation last year), faced a young growing UMass team.

"Occidental had been there before, this was completely new to us," said Sortino.

In the first game (best 2 of 3), Occidental led from the outset.

Due to their relative inexperience, and nerves, UMass' well oiled machine suddenly had some dry spots. It was a combination of circumstances that led to a 15-9 defeat in game 1.

Game 2 was surely the most important game of the young season, to date. UMass w still a bit nervous until the tallies showed UMass down 9 5. At this point, Leslie Smith had seen enough of Occidental's Wendy Gobar spikes. Leslie cleanly blocked a Gobar ·ike and it turned the tide. UMass fought back to an 11 deadlock. Down 13-12, Debbie Cole came up with a spec ·cular dig. UMass fought hard to win the point, but they ultimately lost the point but not until three UMass players hit the floor. Occidental won the next point, giving them the championship 15-9 and 15-12.

Following a 3rd place finish in this tournament last year, the coaching staff was happy to reach the finals this year. The loss to Occidental gave UMass their first loss of the year to drop them to 6 1.

Australia II romps over Liberty

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Challenger Australia II, enhancing her reputation as a superboat in light winds, sailed back into contention for the America's Cup on Sunday with her first victory in three races against U.S. defender Liberty.

And she did it in a runaway.

With his celebrated winged keel letting him turn faster on the all-important windward legs, skipper John Bertrand beat counterpart Dennis Conner by 3 minutes, 14 seconds, the biggest margin by a foreign boat since 1871.

The victory cut Liberty's lead to 2-1 in the best-of-seven series, with the next race scheduled for Monday, barring an American request for a lay day.

This was one the Australians had to win. If Liberty had won, she would have needed just one victory in five races to keep the Cup; there would have been no margin of error for the challenger.

The victory also halted an incredible run of bad luck in which the Aussies suffered steering and mainsail problems the first two races and were denied a lopsided victory in the third when dying wind Saturday prevented them from beating the 5 hour, 15 minute time limit.

There was no such help for the Americans Sunday, although it appeared at first that shifting winds might keep them from racing at all.

The start was delayed almost two hours, and the race began just 10 minutes before the deadline.

After that, though, the bonewhite Australia II, 3½ tons lighter in displacement than Liberty, led at each of six marks in southwesterly winds of 6-14 knots over a 24.3-mile triangular course on Rhode Island Sound.

Liberty led by 8 seconds at the start but quickly fell behind, and Australia II led by 1:14 after the first of three 4.5-mile windward legs.

The ruby-hulled Liberty, Conner's choice to defend the Cup he held for the United States three years ago in Freedom, was no match for Australia II. Counting Saturday's abandoned race, Alan Bond's 12-meter has shown Liberty her stern at 11 straight marks.

Minutemen battle to 0-0 tie

By TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

After 220 minutes of non-stop action, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team is still without a victory or a defeat. They played to their second straight overtime tie, this time at the hands of Southern Connecticut, as neither team could put the ball in the net through two halves and two overtimes.

The Minutemen traveled to New Haven with the thoughts of a hard-fought, 2-2 tie against a tough Boston University team, and Southern Connecticut used this to their advantage and came out strong. The well-skilled team from the Nutmeg State dominated the first half and had a goal called back as one of their players bore right into goalie Don Donahue.

UMass spread out their offense in the second half and used a tough man-to-man defense but there was still no score as the regulation gun sounded. The Minutemen had their chances in both overtime periods, with breakaways by Kayvan Khatami and Nick Marciano, but they just could not put the ball in the net. As the clock read :00, so did the score.

Wednesday will be the next UMass challenge as they travel to New Hampshire.

Sports Notes

Ninety six yards were lost by the offense, 83 of those yards by Simeone, who was being pressured all over the slippery field by Holy Cross linemen.

"I'm discouraged we can't put points up," said Simeone, who was sacked seven times on the afternoon, "but I'm not discouraged with the offensive line."

Simeone finished the day 10 or 20 for 127 yards and one interception and Pickett says his young quarterback is making progress.

"Jim Simeone played better than a week ago," said Pickett, but as far as the offense is concerned, "They have a way to go."

Muldoon (8 for 14, 92 yards) who scored the first Holy Cross touchdown with a 22 yard run, won the Dr. Eddie Anderson Award for the second straight year. The award is presented annually to the MVP of the Holy Cross-UMass game and the last man to win it two consecutive years was UMass quarterback Dean Pecevich, who won the award in 1980 and 1981.

Why alumni love UMass football openers - win or lose

By JIM FLOYD
Special to the Collegian

Football games, I love football games.

Truthfully, there was a time when I wasn't in love with football games. I mean, there was a certain degree of lust which compelled me to attend every home game but, to speak from a completely honest frame of mind, there were other things I could have done (like trout fishing in the Campus Pond) that I might just as easily have done that would have been as gratifying to me.

But, that was before I became an alumnus. That was before I needed to have a reason to be at UMass. It was before I made the mistake of passing Food Science and Nutrition (and with only three visits) and earning a diploma.

That's why I love football games.

People came up to me all day Saturday and said:

"Didn't you graduate?"

And, to be sure, they were right. Okay, I graduated. Don't hold it against me. I should be home working or something. At the very least, I shouldn't be here at UMass.

But, there was a home football game this weekend. Not only was there a battle between two schools, there was also an excuse for someone like me (a homesick-schoolsick individual) to come back and have a good time without feeling TOO out of place.

And thus (notice the change of tone-thus, how continental), I strove to become a typical alumni football booster at Saturday's monumental clash.

I arrived at the game at 12:30 p.m. which afforded me with enough time to get inside the stadium by the midpoint of the second quarter (with socializing being what it is these days). UMass was losing though I don't really recall what the score was.

Score? I don't even cognitively remember what the final outcome of the game was. I'm pretty sure they lost because the wicked pretty cheerleader with the blonde hair (have you ever noticed that it's always the blondes) looked sort of depressed when I spotted her sometime early Saturday evening.

But, there are times when a score does not indicate the true value of a game and this, my friends, was one of those occasions.

I marvelled at the size of the crowd and the way they went bonkers every time the home team did something good but, to be quite honest, UMass has always been a very supportive place.

I felt a bit o shiver go down my spine as I proudly watched the Minuteman Marching Band perform at halftime (ha and you can tell who the freshmen are at football games because they are the ones who don't know well enough to watch the halftime show).

I wished that the team would win but felt a very bad premonition when the Crusaders went for it on fourth and a foot from their own 14 and made it.

But, I guess the bottom line was that I felt as if I had a reason to come back to this strange wonderful place that undergraduates take for granted and graduates look upon as an escape from the real world and all because there was a football game at home.

The game gave me a reason to be back at the place where I spent a major portion of my life, where I fell in love (52 times to date if my figures are correct) and where I had a chance to babble at people through a literary channel.

So, I figured that if I was doing all the other things that I did when I was a student at UMass, I might as well babble again. So I did.

I love football games.

AUTHOR'S NOTE: Jim Floyd thanks the UMass football team for allowing him to make a visit to Amherst and hopes to come back and babble again.

Crusaders sack Minutemen for a loss

Steve Raquet of Holy Cross lowers the boom on Jim Simeone in the second quarter of Saturday's 17-0 loss. Simeone fumbled on the play and three plays later HC led 14-0.

Errors, Muldoon plague UMass home opener

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

Holy Cross won the game 17-0, but that wasn't the disturbing part and UMass coach Bob Pickett knew it. "Have them stop you is one thing," said the sixth year coach, "but to stop yourself is another."

The Crusaders didn't come charging into Alumni Stadium and embarass the Minutemen with a 40-0 romp, which would have been painful enough.

They came to Alumni Stadium, played solid football, executed and watched the Minutemen hand them an easy 17-0 win Saturday before 13,500 fans, including a few disgruntled UMass fans.

The boo birds came out of the nest, justifiably so, in the third quarter when the Minutemen put together two costly mistakes, mistakes which may have put a game that was still within reach, emotionally out of reach.

Trailing 14-0 at the time, the Minutemen put together their best drive of the day and were closing in for six points when as was the case in the 45-13 loss to Toledo mental mistakes proved to be the Minuteman downfall.

On a third and goal play from the Holy Cross one yard line, the left side of the UMass line was called for illegal motion (moving before the ball was snapped) and the Minutemen were pushed back to the six for a third and six play.

UMass quarterback Jim Simeone carried to the three yard line on the next play and Pickett decided to try a field goal. But Don Day's snap was high and Bob Simeone picked up the ball and managed to hit Jim Rice with a pass at the five yard line, but UMass was forced to turn the ball over to Holy Cross.

So instead of scoring a touchdown, which they really should have done, or even salvaging a field, which they could have used, the Minutemen were at the Holy Cross one yard line and came away with nothing.

To add insult to injury, Holy Cross coach Rick Carter gave the Minutemen another chance to get back in the game when, on the ensuing drive, decided to go on a fourth and one play on his own 15 yard line. But quarterback Pete Muldoon used the sneak play to gain the first down.

"We had another bunch of errors that hurt us," said Pickett, who also saw another field goal attempt aborted when holder Bob Simeone couldn't handle Day's snap. "As an offensive unit we didn't do a very good job."

The offense was playing Giant Step most of the afternoon. Two steps forward, one step back. UMass finished with 186 yards rushing, but finished the game with only 86 yards net rushing.

Minutewomen open with 1-0 shutout win

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team began a successful 1983 campaign, Saturday, with a 1-0 victory over visiting Plymouth State.

The Minutewomen dominated the play throughout the game as they displayed fine ball control and set up several good scoring opportunities, but couldn't put the ball in the net.

"We should have beaten them by a higher score. I didn't think we played that well defensively because we let them in the game for too long," said head coach Kalekeni Banda.

UMass put the pressure on Plymouth State early. Tri-captain Deanna Denault made a few fancy moves outside the box and then found Nadia Komarowski inside the box to the left of goalie Kim Hewitt, who got into position in time to save Komarowski's sailing shot. Debbie Harackiewicz also missed on a good chance a few minutes later when she lost the ball in front of Hewitt.

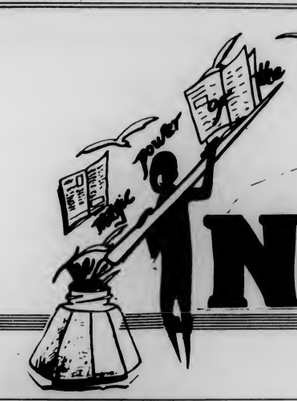
The women booters finally got on the scoreboard at the 22:25 mark of the first half. Jamie Watson made a nice run up the left wing and crossed a beautiful pass to Komarowski who was on the right wing all alone and then slid a soft shot past a diving Hewitt.

UMass outshot Plymouth State by 8-2 in the first half and dominated play. In the second half, they had more good scoring opportunities but once again could not capitalize on them. A small flareup occurred in the early going of the second half as Deborah Lach of Plymouth State received a yellow card for unnecessarily tackling tri-captain Stacey Flionis.

The Plymouth State defense supported their goalie by clearing the ball after initial shots, and not permitting second shots or rebounds from the UMass Minutewomen. Goalie Kim Hewitt registered 15 saves out of 16 shots fired on her. Umass goalie Lisa Ellis was relatively untested making two saves, both of those coming in the first half.

Coach Banda likes to concentrate on defense, because he feels that the team is defensively easy to coach.

"We were mentally rusty and shying off the ball. We need more concentration and our fitness should be better. But this is a good team and i think we will come back and do well when we play together as a team," said Banda.



The Minutewomen will take the week off to try and correct their minor problems and rustiness and then bring their 1-0 record to SUNY-Cortland for a tournament beginning this weekend.

Young, Gifted, and Black: John Wright Jr.

This summer many of us lost a very close companion. John Colemnn Wright, Jr. departed this life on August 1, 1983. This issue of NUMMO NEWS is dedicated in memory of this beautiful brother.

At the time of passing John was a Senior here at the University, Department of Political Science. During his time at UMASS his accomplishments were many. Perhaps most remembered for his athletic achievements, John was awarded the Most Valuable Player Award for Track and Field for two consecutive years, and he held a number of school and state records in the hurdles. He also made the 1983 UMASS Football team.

There was much more to John Wright than just his amazing athletic abilities. John was indeed a leader and a doer in his community. Along with being involved with social activities on campus he was a Resident Assistant in the Kennedy dormitory and Photo Editor of NUMMO NEWS. John's committment to the growth of our community and his willingness to help whenever possible are qualities that we all admire and respect very much.

Even more important, John was academically successful. Even with running track, being involved in social and political activities, and always being there when somebody needed to talk, John always found time to study and to stay on top of his academics. John set an excellent example of strength and determination for his peers. In his short life he was a very successful man.

What we most admired about John is that he made time, a commitment to [illegible] touched by the life of all who [illegible] him. As soon as you shook his hand you were his friend and he would go to bat for you. He had a kind heart and a friendly, humble disposition. John was a great asset to his community and his friends here at UMASS.

To you, John, we say this:

As Photo Editor of NUMMO, your artistic creativity was soothing to our eyes and souls. As an athlete, the way you glided over the hurdle and passed the finish line make us all feel like the winner you were. And as a human being, you showed us the true meaning of friendship.

To your beautiful family, parents Carol and John, Sr., brothers Gregory and Marlon, and all of your aunts, uncles, and cousins, we send our respect and sympathy, and wish them all of the joy and happiness the world has to offer.

John, although you are no longer with us in a physical sense, you will always live in our hearts and minds. We will meet you again in a better place. We love you and we miss you.

WELCOME

NUMMO NEWS is an independent Third World newspaper distributed on Mondays with the COLLEGIAN. With the beginning of the new school year, NUMMO asks interested Third World reporters, photographers and artists, as well as graphics and layout technicians, to help to continue to spread "the magic power of the spoken and written word." NUMMO began in 1975 in response to the area media's inadequate coverage of issues and concerns to people of color. As the largest Third World newspaper in the Five College area, NUMMO creates a supportive informational network by focussing on campus, local, national and international news.

With this goal in mind, NUMMO extends an invitation to students to join us in the collective effort of production. All staff members attend meetings twice weekly (Mondays and Wednesdays, 4pm) and attend scheduled weekend production in the Campus Center Graphics Room. Through these activities students contribute their talents, develop their interests and become involved in all aspects of the paper.

Take an active stance toward your education, and in the community, by participating in and communicating cultural, political and social affairs. All options are open, so come to our next staff meeting, Monday, September 19, 4 pm, at the NUMMO NEWS office, 103 New Africa House.

20th Anniversary of MLK's March on Washington

March on Washington: A Warning to Reagan

by Tracey Bryant

A sea of faces engulfed the Washington Monument at the end of the historic August 27 Twentieth Anniversary March on Washington, D.C. for Jobs, Peace and Freedom. Over 250,000 people from virtually every state, union, college and church marched on the Capitol with one purpose: to demand in 1983 the dream articulated by Martin Luther King Jr. in 1963.

"We're not asking for anything more than the average white man gets," said Johnny McLean, a native of Washington, D.C.. "And we know why we want a day for Martin Luther King," he concluded. John Luchie, an elderly man, also from Washington, said, "We're here today to try to git these jobs to loosen up here."

Whereas ministers and politicians were the main speakers at the 1963 march, it was the entertainers, most of whom were political artists and activists, like Dick Gregory and Sweet Honey In The Rock, who articulated the feelings of the crowd. "We Shall Overcome" was sung twenty years ago and Julian Bond said in a World News Tonight interview that each person felt as though s/he were a part of something enormous. It was the feeling of a promise, the expression of a dream.

Today,in 1983 Gil-Scott Heron sang out, "What's the word" and the crowd shouted back "Johannesburg." People chanted "We're fired up, we can't take no more", and Bill Cosby taunted the absent President Reagan with insinuations and accusations as to his whereabouts. The audience laughed, clapped, and cheered. No one seemed to feel it was coincidental that Mr.Reagan was out of town on the day of the March. Liz Reid, a Washington citizen said, "He above and before everybody else had to know about it."

President Reagan was denounced by speakers and marchers alike. Several times from the podium Reagan and his government officials were called fools, and labeled incompetent and insensitive to the people's needs. Each time such statements were made they were received with confident affirmations. The only statements eliciting greater crowd response were those warning the President and his cabinet against ignoring the people's interests.

Ms. Reid felt that the March was "very effective" because "the turnout showed him (President Reagan) that people were concerned." People didn't seem to believe the President would become more concerned, but like Johnny McLean, they felt that the March would put pressure on President Reagan "to perform better and get something done."

Most participants said that the March was "beautiful" and agreed with Regina Brown of Chicago who said, "it should tell Reagan something." Robert Flanagan, also from Chicago, said, "If we were to hold an election today..." He laughingly stopped the sentence assuming everyone knew how the sentence, and election would end.

The day's comedians, lecturers, ministers and musicians all echoed the people's dissatisfaction with the Reagan administration. People did not need the dream of jobs, peace and freedom reiterated. What they came for in 1983 was action. They did not come with hopes, but with demands. The people at this historic march firmly believed, as Martin Luther King might say, 'the promissory note is due.'

March in Chile: A Warning for Pinochet

In Santiago, Chile, President Pinochet celebrated the tenth anniversary of his military regime. In Vina del Mar, just 100 miles north of the capitol, over 1500 Chileans came to pay homage to the Socialist President Salvador Allende Gossens, who was killed the day Pinochet took power.

While Chilean masses carrying flowers and banners streamed into the Santa Inez cemetery to honor Allende, in Santiago two persons were shot to death and 11 wounded in clashes between gunmen and anti-Pinochet demonstrators.

chilehe Santiago slum of Pudahuel where the two anti-Pinochet demonstrators were killed, buses had been sent for 5000 employees of a government works project in Santiago slums, so they could participate in a parade honoring President Pinochet. According to a New York Times article, only 10 buses arrived and many of the people left behind started chanting of Pinochet: "He's going to fall! He's going to fall!"

Later in the Pudahuel district, 500 people barricaded a street and raised a banner bearing Allende's image.Police pursued demonstrators using tear gas and shooting weapons in the air. Tear gas was also used by police in Concepcion to break up a 500-person march en route to an anti-Pinochet demonstration, which they also dispersed.

In Vina del Mar, federal police herded marchers through traffic on their four-mile march to the cemetary. The week before in Santiago, federal police used tear gas and water cannons to disperse similar groups during a week wrought with protests. Many of the marchers in Vina del Mar wore scarves and handkerchiefs covering their faces.

During the two-hour ceremony at the grave site, eulogies were drowned out by political chants, many of them anti-Pinochet slogans. The Times reported that one chant consisted of "Comrade Salvador Allende?" being called out, with the "thundering" reply of "Present." The Times also reported one speaker as saying "We live under a government of criminals in uniform, but on the day of your assassination, a seed was sewn."

After the ceremony the crowd marched through the town and then eight miles south to Valparaiso. Workers, churchgoers and families came out to cheer. Many joined the march. An elderly woman was quoted by the the New York Times as saying of a black yarn rose pinned to her lapel, "You see this. I have worn it every day for ten years. And I will continue to wear it every day until the memory of Allende brings back democracy to Chile."

BCP/CCEBMS Summer Program

by Segun Eubanks

Administrators of the new BCP/CCEBMS Summer Program believe that the eighty freshpersons who participated in the six week academic program in August will be better equipped to handle the many social, academic and cultural pressures of the university environment. The Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP) and the Committee for Collegiate Education of Black and Minority Students (CCEBMS) organized and coordinated the program to give students an opportunity to develop basic skills that would help them in their very difficult first year.

According to Paul Barrows, Director of CCEBMS, the BCP/CCEBMS Summer Program stemmed from a need to end a developing pattern of poor academic performance by CCEBMS and BCP freshpersons, who historically have been hardest hit by atriculation. Although poor high school preparation is part of the problem, Barrows said that even Third World students who have been academically prepared have difficulty. "Many urban areas suffer from culture shock and peer pressure", said Barrows.

The students who participated in the program received six college credits for first-year math and English classes and took part in a number of workshops and activities. Ms. Teresa Mascarenhas, an Academic Advisor for BCP said that the program brought a diversity of students much closer together and was an important step in ending the separation of Black and Hispanic communities in the area. The BCP and CCEBMS programs had parted a few years back but have come together this year and are working in a "collective spirit", said Ms. Manuela Pacheco, also a BCP Academic Advisor.

Ben Rodriguez, Director of BCP and Paul Barrows designed the program last winter in conjunction with the Student Affairs Minority Task Force who played a major role in the political work for the program's funding. Dr. Gloria deGuevara, Director of Educational Access and Outreach, Chancellor Joseph Duffy, and Vice-Chancellor Dennis Madson also played vital roles in the support and approval of the program.

Students reacted very positively to the benefits of the program. Ms. Helene "Frenchie" Goncalves, who joined the program because she wanted to "check out the University" and "get a head start" said that her academic performance in the summer gave her the confidence to deal with her education. Helene said the program "gave me a chance to meet people from different cultural backgrounds and learn from them."

BCP and CCEBMS are already working on plans for next summer's program which they hope will have increased enrollment, more funding, and an optional elective course for students. The program is funded on a yearly basis and Ms. Mascarenhas said that they are working on obtaining more secure forms of funding to ensure the program's continuation.

All administrators interviewed felt that the program was very successful. Barrows also added that Mr. Charles Bookman, Director of the Summer Program, did an excellent job coordinating and making sure things ran smoothly.

Mr. Barrows said that BCP and CCEBMS will closely observe the progress of the freshpersons who participated in the historic first year of the program. "The results are already showing", added Barrows. "These freshpersons stand out. Their confidence, energy and motivation show that they are the closest and perhaps strongest group of Blacks and Hispanics ever to attend the University."

The Expansion of OTWA

by Brenda Ling

Around the corner from the hub-bub of the Student Union Building's main lobby sits a man who calmly contemplates how to expand student resources at UMASS. As the new director of the Office of Third World Affairs, Sherwood Thompson brings with him a long-term vision.

Thompson arrives with an optimism for establishing "good connections" between all Third World student organizations and for "bringing well-rounded education and enrichment" to campus activities. In three short weeks he has already begun to lay the groundwork for a broader advising, counseling and coordinating center for the Third World student body.

Thompson returns this month to a familiar place. He attended UMASS for four years, beginning in the fall of 1970 with the third entering CCEBMS class. His experiences include news reporting for BMCP and developing its public affairs program; he edited the COLLEGIAN's Black Affairs page, and, in fact, cofounded NUMMO NEWS in 1975.

His knowledge of the campus Third World community, its existing resources, and its needs for the future give him a goal: "I hope to establish a relationship with CCEBMS and other academic components such as BCP and CASIAC in which we can conduct a series of informal discussions" to broaden students' advising base. Thompson also hopes that the OTWA will develop as a referral agency with information on national exchange and international study programs.

A serious obstacle, says Thompson, is "inadequate operational space." "I'm just too cramped in this office,"Thompson indicates about the space shared with AHORA. With more room, Thompson would like to expand services by offering a reading room with a library of resource materials, a conference area for small seminars and symposia and a comfortable atmosphere for advising, counseling, and conversation.

Planning for the future, Thompson has begun to research computer terminals to connect UMASS with other Five-College organizations. Such communication will streamline area events by helping to avoid time and subject conflicts in groups' scheduling.

"I realize it's gonna take a lot of work," he openly admits, but with energy and dedication, Thompson encourages all organizations that address Third World student interests to stop by the OTWA, SUB 305, to add names to his continually growing resource file and to help him make those much needed campus connections.

CONGRATULATIONS

Seta Rampersad Scholarship Winners

Congratulations to:
Pauline Lee, a marketing and fashion marketing student, class of 1985,
Louisa Vargas, a political science major, class of 1986, and Marie St. Fleur, a political science major, class 1984.

These women have demonstrated both good academic records and sincere devotions to social progress, as had Seta Rampersad herself.
Seta was a Third World woman whose ambitions to work with Third World youth were cut short when she was found dead at the Motel 6 in South Deerfield on September 13, 1979.
The Seta Rampersad Scholarship Fund was founded in 1982 as a memorial to Seta and to honor other Third World women who show the same level of integrity in their studies and lives.

Congratulations to Pauline, Louisa and Mariel

WMUA will broadcast from Campus Center

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Construction of new studios for WMUA-FM, held up because of financial difficulties, should begin within a month and be completed by December, according to officials from the Student Activities Office and WMUA.
Although slightly less than half the project's total cost of $122,268 remains unfunded, the new studios will be built on the first floor of the campus Center next to the Collegian, and WMUA should be moved in and operating by intersession, chief engineer Bill Stepchew said.
The new studio will be "less than half of what we had, but it will be adequate," Stepchew said. "We think the move is going to benefit us in the long run."
Leslie C. Bridges, business manager of the SAO, sent a memo Friday to Ed Ryan, chief of design/construction engineering at the Physical Plant, which "constitutes the acceptance of the WMUA construction bid of $88,653 by WMUA personnel, the SGA, Director of Student Activities, and the Campus Center Director," and asks Ryan to "make appropriate notices and arrangements to get the project underway."

The new studio will be less than half of what we had, but it will be adequate. We think the move is going to benefit us in the long run.
— Bill Stepchew

Once the contractor accepts, construction must begin within 30 days, and be completed 45 days after work begins, Bridges said.
The memo to the Physical Plant marks the end of a long period of uncertainty over the fate of WMUA. From the time the radio station was ordered to move from its original studio in Marston Hall (to make room for engineering classrooms) in 1979, until this fall, there were those who wondered if the station should continue at all, and if so, where it would relocate and who would pay for it.
All of those questions have been resolved now, though the last is still being worked on. Contributions from the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) and several administration sources will pay $66,900 of the total cost, leaving a project deficit of $55,368.
Student Government Association (SGA) Treasurer Eric Nitzsche said the SATF would assume the unpaid moving costs, and "WMUA will go on a deficit liquidation program until other funding sources are found."
The SGA "is committed to WMUA," Nitzsche said. But, he added, "for us to come up with that much money would be a severe drain on the trust fund."
The total SGA contribution, from the SATF, interest credits and other sources, was $26,397. The University of Massachusetts administration contributed $40,500 altogether.

Money makes spouses guilty

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

A better understanding of how money is distributed within the family can help couples better understand their own relationships, according to a sociology professor from the University of Kent at Canterbury, England, who spoke at Smith College Monday.
"The major causes of divorce generally have to do with sex or money." Understanding how the latter is dispersed within the family can help married people better understand themselves and their marriages, said Jan Pahl, who is touring various colleges in the United States.
Money is like a "black box of marriage...it comes in the hands of an individual and goes out of the hands of an individual, but a different individual," she said.
In 1980, Pahl wrote a paper, Patterns of Money Management Within Marriage, in which she interviewed 102 married British couples asking them how money was allocated in their households. The responses showed that, for the most part, income was dispersed in only a few ways.
The most common way income was allocated within the family was what Pahl called the shared management or pooling system. The system, which 56 percent of the couples said was in use in their households, occurs when all of the family income is pooled into one account and is accessible to both partners when they need it.
Pahl hypothesized the pooling system was brought about in many marriages because there was "a lot of guilt going on in men."
A guilt which was brought about if the man was the provider in the family. It is a guilt, he said, which is slowing leaving.
"We are seeing the end of the financial dependency of women on their husbands." It is a change which is benefitting most marriages, she said.

Death affects many students

BY MARY ANNE BEEN
Collegian Staff

The death on Saturday of Humberto Cardinal Medeiros, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Boston, has brought great sadness to members of the University Catholic community, which comprises half the student population.

The Rev. Joseph Quigley, director of the Newman Center at the University of Massachusetts, said Medeiros' death has had an effect on many students.

"Forty percent of the Catholic population of this school is from the Boston area," he said, adding, "Cardinal Medeiros was an influential man. His death has changed things for the archdiocese of Boston, and shaken up a lot of people."

Medeiros was a guest at the Newman Center three years ago.

"The Cardinal was an affectionate man. He enjoys people," Quigley said. "He made himself available. We presented him with a silver loving cup to remind him of his visit."

Bishop Thomas Daily, one of six auxillary bishops to Medeiros, is presently administering the archdiocese of Boston. It is not expected that Pope John Paul II will name Medeiros' successor soon as the Vatican usually observes a mourning period of at least two months, Quigley said.

Medeiros' funeral will be held this Friday, at the Cathedral of the Holy Cross in Boston at 8 a.m.

"We prayed for the cardinal at all our masses on Sunday," Quigley said. "We will give special mention to him at our 8 o'clock mass Friday morning."

State Solomon Amendment edges near

BOSTON (AP) — The sponsor of a bill that would deny state scholarship aid to college students who haven't registered for the draft said Monday that he's surprised anyone would oppose such a measure.
"It all boils down to obeying the law," state Rep. Walter A. DeFilippi, R-West Springfield, said. "I keep going back to the same argument: Rich or poor, no one has a right to break the law. If they don't like it, they should go get the selective service law changed."
DeFilippi said he hadn't expected any opposition, and he believes the one-sentence bill will clear the House, have a "fairly decent shot" in the state Senate, and be signed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.
The extent of the oppostion is unclear. A protest rally scheduled for noon Monday outside the Statehouse drew only six people, and the bill won a test vote in the House last week 99-47.
Before Monday's rally, opponents of the measure held a news conference to criticize the legislation and to challenge the state Board of Regents' policy of requiring students to certify compliance with the draft law in order to qualify for state scholarships or loans.
John Robers, director of the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts, told reporters that his group was contemplating filing suit to challenge the Regents' policy on the grounds that the U.S. Supreme Court has not ruled on the issue. He also maintained that the Regents have no authority to require proof of compliance.
The state civil liberties affiliate also opposes DeFilippi's bill. Roberts said it discriminates on the basis of sex, age, race and economic class, because it is aimed only at men aged 18-20 who are in college and seeking financial aid.

EPA blasts oil companies for contamination

BOSTON (AP) — The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency ordered Exxon and Mobil on Monday to supply bottled water or water filters to residents of Richmond, R.I., because gasoline from filling stations have contaminated wells.

"Hazardous wastes from Exxon and Mobil service stations on Route 138 Richmond have presented a substantial hazard to human health and the environment," said Michael R. Deland, EPA regional administrator.

Deland said the EPA issued administrative orders after Exxon and Mobil refused to enter into enforceable consent agreements with the EPA.

"EPA's studies in the fall of 1982 concluded that the service stations had contaminated several private drinking water wells," said Deland.

"We are ordering the companies to test private wells to ascertain which are contaminated by gasoline, to supply bottled water or filter systems to those residences, and to design, install and operate a groundwater interceptor system to restore this aquifer. The residents may choose either bottled water or filter systems."

Michael Quinn, Northeast region public affairs manager for Exxon Co. USA in Linden, N.J., and John Flint, a Mobil Oil Corp. spokesman in New York City, said the firms had no immediate comment on the order.

The EPA said the order was sent to the companies Sept. 16 and they have 10 days after receiving it to request a meeting with EPA to discuss an alternative.

The EPA suggested in its statement that an alternative was providing a permanent water supply for Canob Park, the section of town affected. Richmond, a Providence suburb, had a 1980 population of 3,992.

Nuclear claims false

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reactors in North Carolina, Arkansas and Alabama top a list of the worst managed operating atomic power plants in the country in 1982, according to govertnment documents obtained by a Ralph Nader anti-nuclear organization.

In a report Tuesday, the Critical Mass Energy Project said the 4,500 mishaps or "events" reported a U.S. nuclear plants last year — including 253 that had a "particularly safety significance" — were 10 percent above the number of mishaps reported to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in 1981.

Echoes of Vietnam ?

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — They labor today in the cool green shadows of Central American volcanoes. But for those hardened American soldiers, struggling against yet another guerrilla uprising, the memories linger of rice paddies, jungle trails and debacle half a world away.

"We're going to do it right this time," says a senior U.S. military adviser here.

El Salvador and Vietnam.

Linking the two wars draws quick rebuttal from the Reagan administration.

"There is no comparison with Vietnam," President Reagan said at a July news conference, "and there's not going to be anything of that kind in this."

In a key respect, the situations differ greatly: At the war's height, 525,000 American combat troops were in Vietnam. Here, the American military presence is limited to several dozen advisers, some shuttling in from U.S. bases in nearby Panama.

But the advisers themselves, the men closest to the action, repeatedly invoke Vietnam and its lessons as they plot strategy and appeal for a stronger U.S. commitment to El Salvador. And they frequently sound bitter.

"Don't talk to me about why we didn't succeed in Vietnam," Col. Nicholas A. Andreacchio, holder of the Vietnamese Cross of Gallantry, snapped to a reporter. "I did the best I could."

Like many of his fellow officers, this tough, crew-cut 30-year veteran, who is training hundreds of Salvadorans as commandant of a U.S. Army school in Panama, is more confident about the chances for success this time — if U.S. support remains firm.

Man smokes pot 'religiously'

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. AP — A monson farmer told a Hampden Superior Court jury Monday that he "smoked marijuana every waking hour" so he could lead a spiritual life.

"I would be doing it now if smoking was permitted in the courtroom," said David Nissenbaum, describing the use of marijuana as part of the worship in his faith — the Ethiopian Zion Coptic Church,

"It helps to plant the seed of unfailing righteousness in me and allows me to take part in the Holy Spirit," he said. Nissenbaum, who described himself as a priest in the church, and his wife, Christine, both 35, are on trail on a total of 10 counts of trafficking, possession of marijuana with intent to ditribute, cultivation of marijuana, and possession of hashish.

Petition passes initial round

BOSTON (AP) — Proponents of legislative reform, while winning an important first round, battled Monday against letting Senate President William M. Bulger intervene in state Supreme Court proceedings because he might "swamp" the process.

Pending before the court is an appeal of a decision by Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti that the proposed restructuring of the Legislature is inappropriate for submission to voters.

Justice Paul J. Liacos granted the Coalition for Legislative Reform an injunction allowing them to secure signatures by a Dec. 7 deadline. He said the court will schedule a hearing later, and will act promptly on the main issue, the propriety of the initiative petition.

The petition, which could be a referendum question at the 1984 election, curbs the powers of the presiding officers, cuts the salaries of members in leadership roles and restructures the way the House and Senate operate.

Bulger and House Speaker Thomas W. McGee have vigorously opposed the measure and arguments over Bulger's prospective role in the court's deliberations dominated the arguments before Liacos.

Complaint Panel awaits gripe

By DIANE LANE
Collegian Correspondent

Although it has yet to hear a formal complaint, the sexual Harassment Grievance Panel is alive and ready at the University of Massachusetts.

The panel, formed last November in response to growing complaints of sexual harassment on campus, has not yet been called upon to decide a case because the University Ombuds office tries to handle complaints by an informal mediation approach whenever possible, said Howard Gadlin of the office.

The goals of the Ombuds office are first to create an atmosphere of awareness on campus that sexual harassment is an issue, and second to educate and make people aware that their behavior does have an impact, he said.

"What seems harmless to the offender may not be perceived that way by others," Gadlin said.

"The informal mediation approach can only work if people believe that confidentiality can be assured. We want to hear both sides and work out a satisfactory solution for both parties," he said.

If the informal mediation process doesn't yield a satisfactory solution, then the case is filed with the 13-member grievance panel, where it becomes formal.

Sexual harassment can take almost any form, from actual physical assault including rape, to the public display of photographs, pin-ups, calendars, and other literature which portray sexually explicit, offensive or demeaning images.

The policy in effect on the UMass campus defines sexual harassment as "Unwelcomed sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature."

To be considered harassment, the conduct must be "used as a term or condition of an individual's employment or academic work, affect decisions in the work or academic place, or unreasonably interfere with an individual's work performance or create an intimidating, hostile, or offensive working or academic environment," according to the policy.

Sexual harassment most frequently occurs when a student or employee is perceived as vulnerable by a person in a position of power, said Thelma Griffith-Johnson, director of the Affirmative Action Office. Because men are most often in power positions, women bring most complaints of sexual harassment. However, men are harassed too, she said.

When a student or employee comes to the Ombuds office with a sexual harassment complaint, they are often asked if anyone else is aware of the behavior or if there has been a record kept of dates and situations, Gadlin said.

"It's very important to tell someone, or to write down when and where the harassment occured," he said.

The complainant is also entitled to file under State and Federal harassment statutes for up to 180 or 360 days following the harassment, depending on the agency, said Griffith-Johnson. "We want to be proud of our formal panel should it ever come down to that."

Alleged thieves were 'cops'

Thomas D. Burke of New York and Michael J. Curry of Braintree, both 20 years of age, were arrested Saturday night on the UMass campus and charged with breaking and entering. The men were also charged with two counts of larcency.

According to the University of Massachusetts Police, Burke and Curry broke into the police locker room and stole two officers' hats. Impersonating police officers, the men gained access to a student's room in John Quincy Adams dormitory and stole the contents of the student's wallet. Burke was arrested in the basement, and Curry was apprehended on University Drive after having been chased, police said.

In other police action:

•A car was reported stolen from the Southwest horseshoe area at 1:49 p.m. on Friday, September 16. The car, a beige two-door hatchback Hornet, was recovered at 3:30 the same afternoon. The automobile, apparently unharmed, was found on Fearing Street.

•Robert C. Lopes, a nineteen-year-old UMass student, was arrested on Friday and charged with possession of false identification with intent to procure alcohol.

•The police arrested Henry P. Rhinehart, 18, in the Sylvan area also on September 16. Rinehart was charged with possession of alcohol as a minor.

•A pot of beans left on an unattended hot plate caused extensive smoke damage in a student's room in Johnson dormitory. Police received a call at 6:19 on Friday evening. Although the fire department had to break the door down, no one was injured.

•David Toth, an eighteen-year-old from North Attleboro, was arrested on September 16 with driving while under the influence and without a license.

•There are no suspects in a case of malicious destruction to a motor vehicle that occurred Saturday during the UMass-Holy Cross football game. The passenger window of the motor vehicle was broken in lot 22.

•An accident was reported at 3:54 on September 18. A vehicle attempting to park in lot 44 in the Sylvan area struck a parked vehicle, causing $25 worth of damage to the first vehicle and $300 to the parked vehicle.

•Another report of vandalism to a motor vehicle was reported at 3:32 Sunday afternoon. The passenger window of a car parked in lot 22 was broken, causing $80 worth of damage.

•The police made an arrest on a warrant on September 18. Heidi E. Yanakakis of Puffton Village was placed under arrest and charged with failure to stop at a red light and driving without a license.

•At 1:14 a.m. Monday, UMass Police arrested James F. Slattery, Jr., from Charleston, on a default warrant. Slattery failed to stop at an intersection and failed to produce a license and registration.

Cops discuss voyeurs

Residents of a neighborhood near the center of Amherst will meet tonight to discuss the problems of voyeurism and exhibitionism at a neighborhood Crime Watch meeting.

The Amherst Police Department has invited all residents of the area between Sunset Avenue and North Pleasant Street and from Amity Street to the University of Massachusetts campus to the meeting at 6:30 p.m. in Town Hall.

The neighborhood has had problems in the past with people looking in windows and sometimes exposing themselves, a Collegian article reported early last week. Over the last 20 months, police have responded to 23 incidents of indecent exposure and another ten incidents of voyeurism.

Police said the last reported incident on June 12, 1983 involved a masked man who entered a home and confronted a women.

Police said although there has not been a reported incident in three months, this meeting is necessary to discuss the history of the problem, the responses to the incidents and crime prevention techniques that can make a neighborhood a safer place to live.

"Community and police cooperation are essential to effective law enforcement and I urge all interested persons to participate," Amherst Police Chief Donald N. Maia said.

In other business Monday, police reported eight arrests, two of which were for driving while intoxicated, six accidents, and 21 disturbances.

"There are going to be busier weekends," said Lt. Dave Jankowski.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

All is not well in the SGA

T. William Rudolph

For the past year, despite the efforts of a courageous few to turn the tide of events, the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association Undergraduate Student Senate (a.k.a, THE SGA senate) has proven to be a less than democratic institution, with less than the interest of the student body as a whole at heart. Instead, the student senate is guided in most of its endeavors by THE student senate leadership — whatever that means. These endeavors include the prevention of appointment of duly elected students to the senate. Support of issues which have little or nothing to do with students on this campus or attending this university. Squandering student money on student fee subsidized parties for certain SGA people...excuse me, I mean retreats. Squandering more money on student-fee subsidized vacations...excuse me, I mean conferences. Forget spending money here on campus responsibly. Neglect of constituencies. Toss in endorsements of partisan candidates, and you get the general picture.

Not quite the whole picture. Item of interest — Budget Act '84. (and you thought that WW II was the big one). What the budget act for the current fiscal year represents is nothing but a long list of appeasements for special interest groups. Barely a few items don't fall into this category. There's a lot of money for the senate, too. You betcha. And this is nothing more than the embodiment of all the special interest groups combined. What happened to the average student? You guessed it. The old backburner. Perhaps most disturbing of all is that not once, not even for a shining moment, was it ever thought that the budget could be cut. Maybe reduce the fee a little bit. What a novel idea. No sir. We all know that everyone comes to UMass because they are rich and can easily afford to pay the student tax, and thats what it is, a tax. Look it up on your bill, and then look at the figure sitting next to it. Don't forget there are two semesters for this tax. Aren't we lucky. Not only was there no thought of reducing this tax, but the only reason that the budget was finally "balanced" was by juggling a few accounts the senate was advised not to juggle. And so it goes at the senate.

Well, if the senate is a lost cause, and it seems to be, then why not try to work with the other branches of the university wide student government. Well, it seems the presidents of these are members of the student senate. To say they are all in cahoots, to use a dated term, would be an understatement. Here's another term — interlocking directorate. Try that one on for size.

Reform is obviously needed. One form of reform could come from the establishment of a new constitution, it seems that the old one has never been acknowledged by the Board of Trustees. I wonder why? The new constitution will come under a great deal of scrutiny, and a number of alternate constitutions and suggestions will be proposed. What is needed is to get the constitutional process out of the hands of the decided few and bring it to the students for help and comments. Whether the vehicle is a constitutional convention or a referendum on the matters, the students as a whole should in the end decide. (The premise of one of the alternate constitutions is to let the students decide all major issues. So many novel ideas in one day). It means fair and equitable elections. (Something the Commuter Collective has lacked for some time now). Simply, it means a democratization of all the institutions of student government. (I think we're getting somewhere now).

What can be done aside from involvement in development of the new constitution? Elections for the senate are coming up. Run or support someone you think will represent their constituency.

Responsible. Reliable. Responsive. The current senate has failed in all these attributes. It is not responsive to the average student or the student body as a whole. It is not reliable in its decision making or its policy formation, which both lack democratic process. The result is an irresponsible and genuinely dangerous senate. Only you can turn this around and return student government to normalcy.

One final note: The "Resistance" has already begun.

The saga of Ed King, again

Miriam Zoll

Those of you who didn't go to graduation last spring missed seeing what could have been a battle between ex-governor Edward King and a lot of UMass students.

It all started in early May, when the administration announced that the former governor was going to receive an honorary degree at the graduation ceremonies. According to the administration, "it was a UMass tradition" to honor outgoing governors of Massachusetts.

When some of the graduating seniors and other students learned that the administration wanted to honor Ed King, they couldn't believe it.

During King's term as governor from 1978 to 1982, tuition at UMass increased by 22 percent because of state budget cuts, and King never once visited the UMass, Amherst campus. This is most likely because he knew he was seen as a villain to many students, professors and administrators. As governor, King has a poor standing towards women's issues and, as we all know, he managed to raise the legal drinking age from 18 to 20.

Considering Ed King's politics toward public education and young people in Massachusetts, it was obvious there would be some sort of student opposition to him receiving an honorary degree on graduation day. Several students wrote "anti-King" articles and Letters to the Editor that appeared in the Collegian, and other students helped plan and publicize for a silent student demonstration that would have been staged at the graduation. The protest was based on the theme that "since Ed King had turned his back on UMass and public education for four years, the students would turn their backs on him when he received his award."

On graduation day however, these plans folded when Chancellor Joseph Duffey announced that two death threats had been made against the ex-governor and that he had been escorted to safety by police.

The state and local media were quick, and correct, to criticize the death threats and the anonymous caller who made them. But the media also distorted and discredited the real reasons why the students opposed Ed King in the first place.

Most of the newspaper accounts of the incident said that students were protesting mainly because King raised the drinking age, not because he raised tuition. One particular editorial in a Boston newspaper sermonized about the "worsening climate" on college campuses, and it went on to say that student behavior at UMass was "a demonstration of how dangerously campus protests had been allowed to develop."

It seems like our generation of college students are always getting criticized, regardless of what we do. we're supposedly "apathetic and self-centered" because we don't collectively demonstrate to the extent students in the 60's generation did, but then, when we do rally for our rights, we're told that we are juvenile, ungrateful and unpatriotic.

After four months I'm still trying to decide if the press and Ed King beat the students or if the students beat them.

In one respect the students won because King has yet to receive his honorary degree at the graduation. But, in another respect King and the press won for two reasons; the graduates who wanted to, never got their chance to publicly embarrass King by turning their backs on him, and UMass ended up with a lot of negative publicity.

But the battle isn't over yet. The administration is planning to give Ed King his honorary degree this semester, after all at a dedication of the Graduate Research Center on October 5th.

Don't they ever learn?

A letter to a wallet thief

To the Editor,

To the person who lifted my wallet from my Goessman office Wednesday.

I know I wasn't the only victim because we found one wallet in the men's room trash and another in an isolated classroom. At least you spared their I.D.'s and licenses. But did you happen to notice that I had a Rhode Island drivers license, an AAA card, and a UMass I.D.? (which is inconvenient to replace this time of year). The seven dollars you now have is worthless compared to these replacements. You've convinced me to lock my door at all times and I will convince others to do the same, because anyone who has no respect for the personal valuable belongings of others deserves to be locked out of society.

P.S. you forgot to take the calculator.

Rude people don't belong

To the Editor,

I would like to discuss the Central American Teach-In of Thursday September 15 in the Student Union Ballroom. The purpose of this event was to present diverse viewpoints on the situation in El Salvador. Two speakers advocated the present foreign policy being implemented, while the other two argued vehmenently against further US invovement.

We, the Commuter Area Govenment, created this event as part of Diversity Week. We represent the approximately 7000 undergraduates living off campus. Therefore, we represent differing political views as well. This is one reason we chose speakers who represent conservative, liberal and radical viewpoints.

We also chose to present a non-biased event so that the audience would have the opportunity to develop their personal opinion with PRIMARY sources of information and without pressures to adopt a particualr stance. If we were going to try to give people our views about the issue, we could easily have invited only one speaker.

I speak to those of you (a minority) who felt the need to boo, laugh loudly, and yell out comments. It was disappointing and frustrating that you felt the need to express your feelings in such an immature and fruitless manner. If you had been more aware of those around you, you might have noticed the irritation in their faces when your heckling forced them agianst their will to miss parts of the speeches.

It is understandable that an issue of this magnitude would create tension. However--democracy includes the right to free speech. In addition, we have a right to hear what is being said no matter how outrageous. The Question-Answer session was designed to allow the individuals to address speakers on questions they might have. It was not a format in which to state personal viewpoints. It is alienating to try to force your ideas on others and by doing so you imply that they are not intelligent enough to decide on their own. By trying to shoot down the invited speakers when they were invited is to alienate potential allies and undermine the whole purpose of the program. This was not an event to demonstrate, organize a rally.

I too felt angry at the speakers who support the inhumane situation in El Salvador. Let me make it clear that I am not in support of the position of the US government. I AM advocating the right of each individual to hear all sides so that she/he can make a mature, rational, and well-educated decision. After all, isn't it a totalitarian action to tell people what they should think?

If there's one thing business students have always needed, this is it: an affordable, business-oriented calculator.
The Texas Instruments BA-35, the Student Business Analyst.
Its built-in business formulas let you perform complicated finance, accounting and statistical functions – the ones that usually require a lot of time and a stack of reference books, like present and future value calculations, amortizations and balloon payments.
The BA-35 means you spend less time calculating, and more time learning. One keystroke takes the place of many.
The calculator is just part of the package. You also get a book that follows most business courses: the Business Analyst Guidebook. Business professors helped us write it, to help you get the most out of calculator and classroom.

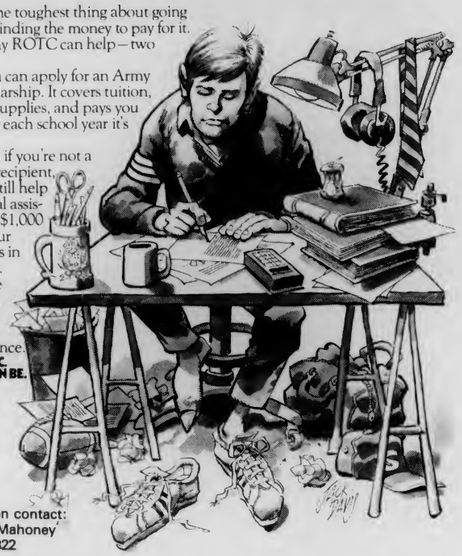
EVEN STRAIGHT A'S CAN'T HELP IF YOU FLUNK TUITION.

Today, the toughest thing about going to college is finding the money to pay for it.



But Army ROTC can help—two ways!

First, you can apply for an Army ROTC scholarship. It covers tuition, books, and supplies, and pays you up to $1,000 each school year it's in effect.

But even if you're not a scholarship recipient, ROTC can still help with financial assistance—up to $1,000 a year for your last two years in the program.

UMass harriers score upset with win over BC

By MARTIN E. MURRAY
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's cross-country team began their season on a high-note Friday afternoon with an upset win over Boston College 26-29 at NOPE. (The lowest score wins in cross-country.)

Minuteman captain Rick Doiron won the race with a time of 25:35 holding off BC's Chris Blanchet (25:39) in the latter stages of the five-mile course.

"They already had one race under their belts," said Doiron. "Coach O'Brien told us to let them lead and see what happened. It was slow at the beginning and I began to press the pace at about three-and-a-half (miles). BC dropped off and Rod (LaFlamme) and John (Panaccione) stuck in there to help out."

UMass also received strong support from Tom Carleo and Jack Marinelli who looked strong on the hills and finished eighth and tenth, respectively.

The Minutemen, (1-0) have a week off before travelling to the University of New Hampshire (Sept. 30) for a meet that will include runners from URI, UConn, and Providence College.

The University of Massachusetts Women's cross country team were discouraged but hopeful about the future after a 15-48 loss to Boston College also last Friday afternoon.

The Eagles, who had already been running together for a month, overwhelmed the less experienced Minutewomen, who never seriously threatened them.

"We have a lot of potential on the team," said UMass coach Julie LaFreniere. "We got our feet wet now and we are hoping to put it together in October."

The women will next compete at the University of Rhode Island Invitational (Sept. 24th) where runners from all over the northeast will compete.

Minutewomen look for offensive intensity vs. BC

By JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

Practice was almost over, yet the players were still moving quickly, and the coaches voice still rung out from the side line.

There was a feeling of intensity, of urgency in coach Pam Hixon's voice as she gave instructions and encouragement to her players at a recent practice.

"I think it is about time that we start to play with some offensive intensity," Hixon said. "We must prove to ourselves that we are an explosive team, and that we have the ability to score more than one goal per game. We need to do this."

Tomorrow, when the University of Massachusetts field hockey team takes on Boston College, Hixon will be looking for her team to be on top...by more than a one goal margin.

"We come out like we're on fire," Hixon said. "We score one goal, and we lose our enthusiasm. As the season goes on, this won't be good enough. We need to be mentally intense from the start."

The Minutewomen have always been successful against teams from New England, according to Hixon. But, she added, "We play every game to win. We have to play our best game against each opponent."

To a nationally ranked team like UMass, every game is important. "We must do well at the beginning of the season, if we are to do well at the end of the season," Hixon said. Each game counts toward a final ranking at the end of the season, and that ranking may or may not lead to a place in the NCAA championships.

Hixon said her team will be playing a strong passing game, and looking for a high scoring match, as well.

"We are practicing everything, so we can execute it all better," Hixon said. "I am looking forward to developing more poise around the goal area, and a serious offensive corner play that will work again and again."

Hixon said she is not disappointed with her team's style. So far, it has won them two games.

"If all we have to work on is poise and corner plays," Hixon said, "then we should be fine."

UMass tennis teams have rocky start

Top four from fall gone; UM drops season opener to URI, 7-2

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

Coaching is one of the most insecure professions in existence in modern America. Especially at the Division I Intercollegiate level where many coaches, knowing a pink slip could come with only a few unproductive performances by their respective teams, easily slip into a state of paranoia. Take away their top four or five players and many coaches would prefer the gas chamber to playing out the schedule.

But not University of Massachusetts men's tennis team coach Bob Szlosek. For varying reasons, Szlosek saw Steve Jordan (collapsed roof), Stuart Goodman (virus), Rich Lindgren (academic ineligibility), and Dave Salem (schedule conflicts), all top players for the Minutemen last year, deemed unfit to perform at the start of the fall tennis schedule.

But with young, outstanding talent waiting in the wings, the netmen have gotten off to a respectable start in the current campaign, holding a 4-3 lead over Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in a suspended match, and dropping a 7-2 decision to Rhode Island.

"Considering we're using six guys that had little or no experience in collegiate tennis, the first two matches have been good for us," said Szlosek. "They saw it as an opportunity. They realize they have to carry the fall season. Because all these guys played our top players in practice last season, it's helped tremendously."

In the RPI match last Wednesday, UMass won four of the six singles matches. Wayne Peterson, at number one, drubbed Lajof Horvath, 6-3, 6-2. Other Minutemen victories came at number three, where Earl Small defeated Andy Hoffman 6-4, 6-1, Marc Weinstein (4) snuck past Rich Waters 6-2, 4-6, 7-5, and Jim Gelinis (5) nipped Jeff Resin 5-7, 6-3, 7-6. In the final set, Gelinis was down 2-5 and had triple match point against him before hitting three straight passing shots for winners in the eighth game. He eventually took the match, winning the last five games.

In the only doubles match completed, Peterson-Jordan (making his first appearance of the campaign; the chances are good he will play singles Wednesday when the Netman travel to UNH) lost in three sets. The other two doubles were suspended in the third set due to darkness.

Against URI, Peterson and Gelinas registered the only UMass wins. Peterson, down 4-1 in the third, stormed back to win six of the last seven games and sneak past Dave Wright, 6-2, 0-6, 7-5. Gelinas rebounded to best Bob Rinaldi 2-6, 6-3, 7-5. URI won the other singles, all in straight sets, and swept the singles.

Minutewomen drop opener to Tufts; host Vermont tomorrow

By RICHARD BRUNELLI
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Women's tennis began with tentative steps last Thursday losing to Tufts University by a 6½-2½ count. Despite strong performances by several key players, the Minutewomen could only manage two victorious matches and a split set draw ended by darkness.

Coach Pat Stewart had reserved optimism for her team after their first match. Despite the loss, she has high expectations for returning senior Elizabeth Sullivan, who plays in the number one singles slot. Sullivan's twin sister, Patricia, managed one of the victories over Tufts (4-6, 6-3, 6-0) and is returning this fall at the number four singles.

"Last year Patricia played number five now she's playing at four and winning," Stewart said.

The Sullivans will be aided by returning team members Karen Orlowski, Ann Marie MacKertich, Maureen Hanlon, Jillian Negros, and Joyce Girasella. Newcomers Laura Morgan and Anne Tauger, who plays number two singles, will add punch to the line-up.

In doubles, Stewart may have more problems where all of the duos are unaccustomed to each other. Because of these new combinations Stewart said that the next three matches (against Rhode Island, Vermont, and Springfield) "will be a good chance to warm up for the season ahead."

After a 12-7, overall, mark last spring, Stewart cites some problems the team will face this fall which include a difficult schedule, injury problems, and new combinations in doubles.

"It's too early to tell," Stewart said, "but there's a lot of potential on the team."

The first home match for the team will be on Wednesday at 3:30 against Vermont.

America's Cup resumes today

With the 12 meter yacht Liberty holding a 2 to 1 edge in the best of seven America's Cup over Challenger Australia II, the series will resume today on Rhode Island Sound in Newport.

Liberty's skipper Dennis Conner asked for a lay day (day off) yesterday because the weather forcast of light air favored Australia II.

The challenger romped in Sunday's third race winning by the largest margin ever for a twelve meter race.

Police search for alleged rapist

UMass Police composite sketch of suspected rapist.

By MARY ANNE BEEN
and RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts police are searching for a man in his late 20's or early 30's, who allegedly raped a female outside of Butterfield Dormitory in the Central area of campus, Sunday night.

The alleged rape took place around 7:30 p.m. in the area surrounding the dormitory, according to UMass police.

The police would give no information concerning the victim except to say "following medical treatment and statutory rape protocol, the victim was placed in the care of her parents."

Police declined to say whether or not the victim is a UMass student, or what her age is.

The man the police are looking for is white, overweight, with a dark beard. At the time of the alleged rape, the suspect was wearing boots, a dark shirt with a tee shirt. He was driving an old brown car in poor condition, with a light colored vinyl roof and a beige interior, according to police.

Under Massachusetts state law, statutory rape can fall into four categories: rape of a child (under the age of 16); rape and abuse of a child (under the age of 16); drugging persons for sexual intercourse (no age given); or inducing a person under the age of 18 to have sexual intercourse.

Sergeant Donald Zidik, of the UMass police, said he "assumed" more police cars would patrol the area around where the rape allegedly took place.

Zidik cautioned University students, women in particular, to be careful when walking around the campus, especially at night.

"Women coming back late should walk in pairs, and try to stay on well-traveled...thoroughfares and stay away from dark buildings," he said.

Butterfield is apart from other dormitories on campus and there are several wooded paths leading to it. Police would not say where exactly the alleged rape took place.

Zidik recommended that students not take short cuts around the campus.

Mary Dumas, staff assistant to the Department of Public Safety, said women should be aware of where they are walking and of their surroundings.

"People used to believe the only way you could be raped was in a dark alley and some creature leaps out at you," Dumas said. Statistics show, however, many rapes are done by aquaintances, she said.

Rape: A crime of violence with many victims

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

While University of Massachusetts police search the area for a man who allegedly raped a female outside of Butterfield dormitory Sunday night, the issue of rape inevitably becomes the main topic of conversation.

Rape is not as uncommon an occurrence on this campus or even in the United States as many people may think.

Statistics on rape are hard to come by because a large number of rape victims do not report the rape. What statistics are available, however, show rape to be much more than an "occasional crime".

According to UMass police, there were no reported rapes on the UMass campus in the academic year 1982-1983. However, according to Cathy Alexander, coordinator of Against Violence Against Women at the Everywoman's Center, there were 59 victims of rape who were in some fashion affiliated with the University, and who sought help from the center last year.

Not all these victims reported the rape to police, and not all of the rapes actually took place on campus, she said.

For the rapist, the crime can be over within a matter of minutes. For the rape victim the memory of the violation of one's physical self lingers on and is difficult if not impossible to forget.

"One does not forget when one is raped. It is always there even if you've dealt with it. The loss of control, the sense of being violated, the intrusion on the innermost part of life...a woman can become a survivor, she can work through the pain. She can learn to cope again," Alexander said.

The victim of rape is a victim "of a crime of violence" and not a victim of "a crime of sexual passion," she said.

Men, like women, are subject to rape. They themselves can be the victim, or can be the brother, son, father, husband, or just a friend of the victim. But women are the most common rape victim.

There is no sure way to prevent a rape. In many cases, no matter how many precautions are taken a rape can occur. And when it does, there is, usually more than one victim.

"Everytime we are confronted with a crime, we too are victimized," said Mary Dumas, staff assistant to the Department of Public Safety.

Hart cancels UMass speech to vote in Washington DC

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Democratic presidential candidate Gary Hart cancelled a scheduled campaign speech at the University of Massachusetts Tuesday in order to stay in Washington and vote to oppose a Reagan administration environmental policy.

Hart, a senator from Colorado with a record in support of environmental protection issues, voted in favor of a bill outlawing the coal leasing on federal lands conducted by Interior Secretary James Watt.

"I'm really sorry to have missed (the speaking engagement)," Hart said in a telephone interview last night. "I didn't have any choice but to be on record against a very destructive policy."

The speech Tuesday would have been Hart's second visit to UMass since announcing his candidacy. He spoke here last March 4, two weeks after beginning his campaign.

Hart said students and "young people in general will play a key role" in his presidential campaign. He said the speech he was to give at UMass Tuesday was part of his regular campaign tour, and he said he will come to UMass "sometime this fall."

The focus of Hart's presidential campaign right now is to "stress the need for what I feel are the qualities of leadership in the 1980's," he said.

Hart said his education policy recognizes "the transition from manufacturing to human services" in the U.S. economy and "the central role that education would play in the country's future."

Hart noted two education-related bills he has helped sponsor: the American Defense Education Act of 1978, which gives "direct federal financial assistance to local education systems at the primary and secondary level," and a high-tech education act, co-sponsored by Massachusetts Senator Paul Tsongas, which "creates a partnership between government and business, and generally broadens opportunities for students in the area of science and math."

Hart said he also fought all cuts in federal financial aid for students proposed by the Reagan administration.

In foreign policy, Hart said Democrats "need to lay out an alternative to Reagan's, not just oppose him."

"I refer particularly to the challenge of restructuring foreign policy on principles vastly different from the Reagan administration," he said. Hart said he would stress human rights, economic development, and military non-intervention in dealing with Third World nations.

Hart said he would also like to "shift the defense debate away from the number of weapons to quality of defense," concentrating on conventional forces and officer training, along with "a deep commitment to nuclear arms reduction."

Confrontations in Beirut continue

Lebanese army deters Druse and Palestinians

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The Lebanese army repulsed two more attacks by Druse and Palestinian militiamen on Souk el-Gharb Tuesday, and U.S. military observers came under fire in the strategic Christian town overlooking Beirut.

There was no resumption of the heavy U.S. Navy shelling that on Monday hit Druse positions around the hilltop town where President Amin Gemayel's government and its army face their biggest test.

Monday's Navy action marked the first time that U.S. forces had directly supported the Lebanese army in its battle for Beirut against Syrian-backed Druse and Palestinian militiamen.

The Reagan administration has emphasized that it is determined to protect Souk el-Gharb and one key administration official said army control of the town was "vital."

U.S. planes flew frequent reconnaissance flights over the area Tuesday. Pentagon sources in Washington said Syrian troops may have fired an anti-aircraft missile at a Navy F-14, which was not hit.

Despite the continuing fighting, an informed government source who refused to be identified by name said the Lebanese government was hopeful that Saudi Prince Bandar bin Sultan's mediation efforts would produce a cease-fire within the next 24 hours.

But former Prime Minister Saeb Salam, who is involved in the mediation effort, said he doubted the negotiations would succeed soon because the Syrians "are playing for time."

A Lebanese army communique said "insurgents" tried to infiltrate Souk el-Gharb before dawn but were driven back.

A second infiltration attempt came in the afternoon, about an hour after a party of six or seven U.S. Army and Marine observers headed by an Army colonel arrived in the town.

The Americans apparently were conferring with the local Lebanese command at their headquarters in the hotel when the fighting broke out about a mile away. An hour-long battle followed in which hundreds of shells and rockets were exchanged, but there was no report that any Americans were wounded.

Marine spokesman Maj. Robert Jordan of Shenandoah, Ga., said the team had been sent to collect information on the situation at Souk el-Gharb. Another Marine spokesman, Warrant Officer Charles Rowe of San Francisco, Calif., denied the observers were sent to direct the fire of the Navy ships offshore.

In Washington, President Reagan and congressional leaders resolved their dispute over the application of the War Powers Act to the U.S. forces caught in the renewed civil war in Lebanon.

Ambassador's home comes under fire

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The U.S. ambassador's residence in a Beirut suburb came under shellfire Tuesday night and American warships responded with a 10-minute barrage against the gunners in the hills overlooking the capital.

Embassy spokesman John Stewart said the naval bombardment "was in response to the shelling at or very near to the U.S. residence. To the best of my knowledge, the residence was not hit. I know, however, that no one has been hurt. As far as I know, the ambassador was home tonight."

In Columbia, S.C., White House spokesman Larry Speakes said President Reagan was told that the ambassador's residence came under "heavy shelling."

"We don't have any reports of injuries," Speakes said. Reagan is in Columbia for a political fund-raising dinner.

Speakes said Ambassador Robert S. Dillon and a deputy special envoy, Richard Fairbanks, were in the residence compound at the time of the shelling. He said some artillery rounds landed inside the compound but he had no report of the extent of damage.

Beirut Radio reported a fire was burning inside the compound.

The shelling began shortly before midnight, and Beirut was shaken by blasts from the warships just offshore as they opened fire.

U.S. Marine spokesman Maj. Robert Jordan said the destroyer John Rodgers and the guided missile cruiser Virginia "Responded" to firing near Dillon's residence in a suburb east of Beirut. He said the residence was not hit and the 1,200 Marines in the peacekeeping force went on "Condition One" alert at their positions near the Beirut airport.

People along Beirut's beachfront said they saw flashes lighting up the sky from the warships and they believed at least 20 shells were fired. The ships continued shooting for about 10 minutes, they said.

Soviets will turn over 'items' to Japanese

WAKKANAI, Japan (AP) — The Kremlin said Tuesday it will give the Japanese "items and documents" from the downed South Korean jetliner Sept. 26. U.S. officials said no remains would be turned over, and that the Soviets have been harassing the U.S. Navy which located then lost pings from the "black box."

The Soviets informed the U.S. and Japanese Embassies in Moscow of the turnover date. State Department spokesman John Hughes said in Washington there was no elaboration on the nature of the items except that they would not include remains of any of the victims.

Hughes also denied a Soviet charge that the plane delayed its departure from Anchorage, Alaska, to synchronize its approach to the Kamchatka Peninsula with the flight of a U.S. spy satellite.

A Japanese Foreign Ministry official, who declined to be identified, told reporters in Wakkanai that the "items and documents" will be turned over at Nevelisk, on Sakhalin near the area where the Korean Air Lines jet was shot down by a Soviet interceptor Sept. 1.

Administration coerced elderly

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Court of Appeals ruled Tuesday that the Reagan administration used illegal coercion last year when it tried to persuade four million aged, blind and disabled welfare recipients to disclose how much they are worth.

The administration hinted that Supplemental Security Income benefits might be denied if recipients refused to authorize government access to their confidential tax returns.

The appeals court said federal law might permit the Internal Revenue Service to disclose the contents of an individual's tax return to another government agency if the individual freely gives his consent.

But the court, in an opinion by Judge Abner Mikva, said a form mailed to the four million recipients of SSI seeking access to the information "makes a mockery of the consent requirement."

"The form itself contained poorly veiled threats the recipients' benefits would be terminated if they failed to sign the forms," Mikva wrote. "The language of the form was thus likely to coerce individuals, who depend on Social Security for their subsistence, into giving up their right to confidentiality."

TVA recommends more sulfur reductions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The evidence is so strong that sulfur emissions from coal-fired power plants contribute to lake-killing acid rain that utilities should start now to reduce them, an environmental expert for the Tennessee Valley Authority said Tuesday.

Dr. Mohamed T. El-Ashry, director of the TVA's environmental quality division, told a House subcommittee hearing that the utility could do its part toward a nationwide eight million-ton reduction in sulfur emissions at no additional costs to consumers.

In an interview after the hearing by the energy and natural resources subcommittees of the House Science and Technology Committee, El-Ashry said nationwide the sulfur reduction would raise electric bills by 3 percent to 16 percent.

A reduction of 12 million tons a year, as proposed by some environmental groups, would require higher costs for electric utilities and their customers, he said.

Southwest pipe job delayed by lack of $5M

By MITCHEL ZEMEL
Collegian Staff

A plan devised last year to evacuate students from the Southwest Residential area in the event of a steam line failure is not likely to be used.

Physical Plant utility design head Hans Vanderleeden said that for the evacuation to be necessary, large leaks in the steamline would have to occur. Because the leaks would probably be found before they reached problematic proportions, Vanderleeden said he is not worried an evacuation will be necessary.

"Steel is strong," Vanderleeden said in reference to the pipes. "They (the pipes) don't usually collapse like a flat tire."

"As far as we know there are no leaks at present;" he said, noting that "if a leak were to appear before the cold weather comes, repairing it would not be a problem. The problem would be when the amount of heat being lost is greater than the amount the dorms receive," Vanderleeden said. derleeden said.

The line to Southwest is beyond the service life of 20 years and is in need of replacement, Vanderleeden said. His department makes a list of priority repairs each spring, and this line has been at the top of the list for a few years, he said. But, the lack of money needed to repair or replace the line has prevented anything from being done.

Vanderleeden said a request for $5 million for repairs now before the state legislature should be approved this fall. Four hundred thousand dollars would be allotted for emergency repairs of the line, $300,000 for a plan to repair or replace the line, and the balance is to pay the labor, Vanderleeden said. A plan is being considered to replace the steam line with medium temperature hot water, he said.

"We may want to change the whole campus. It's more economical and easier to maintain," he said.

But, even though the money may be approved this fall, Vanderleeden said the project will probably not be completed until 1986.

"I think we'll probably see the start of construction in the spring of 1985 and it will take about 10 months to complete," he said. If the medium temperature hot water system is used, the steam line would be abandoned in the ground, Vanderleeden said.

If the steam line were to fail this winter, repairs would be difficult and costly. Not only would the line have to be repaired, but frozen pipes in the dorms would have to be flushed out and there is the possibility of flooding, Vanderleeden said.

Six hundred feet of emergency piping is already at the Tillson Power Plant and could be used to bypass any major failure, Vanderleeden said.

Area residents express fears over flasher to Select Board

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

The roughly 40 incidents of indecent exposure, exhibitionism and voyeurism reported near the center of Amherst in the last year and a half has left residents of that area concerned for their safety and in some cases critical about local police response to the incidents.

Barbara McGlynn, chairman of a small neighborhood committee formed by residents of the area last June to more effectively deal with the problem read a statement to the Amherst Select Board Monday night describing the committee's feelings on police negligence towards women in the community and in properly investigating the incidents that have taken place.

After hearing the prepared statement, Edith Wilkinson, chairperson of the Select Board told McGlynn that an investigation would be conducted and reports from it would be made public.

The incidents occurring in the neighborhood have included men looking in windows, masturbating on rooftops, and in one case an exhibitionist who broke into a house and was observed masturbating.

This latter incident and the fact that the police have failed to catch a suspect for the crimes has created fear in the area that the man or men will continue to harass women and could even commit more serious crimes such as rape or assault.

"I still feel uncomfortable at home alone. There is a whole new fear that people have to deal with," said Janet Raphaelson, a University of Massachusetts student and a resident of Phillips Street.

"The police treated all of these situations in the same way...which is to say they did nothing," said McGlynn.

"At no time did they investigate the scene by even asking which window he had been at; at no time did they take fingerprints, footprints, call in the state police board dog, or even act interested in what happened," she said.

Last night, the Amherst Police Department reassured residents they are covering the issue effectively when they invited all members of the neighborhood in question to a crime watch meeting on the problem.

"The way we apprehend these crimes is through the community, by people calling in the incidents and then we respond to them," said Chief of Police Donald Maia at the meeting attended by over 50 people.

Handicapped Student Affairs: trying to improve UMass

By GREG FEIST
and JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Average students take walking up a few flights of stairs, hearing the voice of a professor, or seeing the food they are eating for granted. But for some students at the University of Massachusetts, such common events can become frustrating or even dangerous, because they are handicapped.

What is the situation at UMass like for a student who is restricted in mobility, blind or deaf? As Paul Appleby, coordinator of the Handicapped Students Affairs Office, says: "UMass is the most accessible campus in New England."

This was not always true. The Federal Rehabilitation Act, passed in 1973, prohibits discrimination in the admission of handicapped students at any school receiving federal funding, Appleby said. Before that time, handicapped students were treated as second-class citizens not capable of doing college work.

The law mainstreamed the handicapped into the college and university system, Appleby said. Currently, there are about 60 severely handicapped students at UMass, but over 400 who can be classified as physically or emotionally disabled, he said.

The need for a Handicapped Student Affairs Office (HSA) established in 1973, originated with the increase of handicapped students on campus, but the office did not begin receiving significant funding until 1976.

Providing van rides for students in wheelchairs or blind students is one of the office's most necessary services, Appleby said. Priority is given to rides directly related to class work, but rides to and from the center of Amherst and within a five to eight mile radius of the campus are also provided. Rides to and from classes become a necessity when students have two classes scheduled back to back on different parts of campus. The van service operates from 7:30 a.m. to 10:30 p.m. weekdays and until 12 a.m. or 1 a.m. on Fridays and Saturdays.

HSA also provides career counseling for handicapped students, as well as interpreters, note takers, captioned films and a list of volunteer readers. These services are primarily for the blind and the deaf. A braille map is also available at the HSA office.

Dorm life for handicapped students has also seen improvement over the past few years. In addition to at least one accessible building in each residential area of campus, there is a sign language corridor in Thoreau dormitory, as well as weekly showings of captioned films.

Handicapped students are also playing increasingly important roles in student affairs. Pat McChesney, a junior education major, is a physically disabled student who is a resident assistant in Brooks dormitory, and a member of the Campus Center information desk and in the Dean of Students office.

McChesney is now involved in forming a handicapped student task force in conjunction with Student Government Association co-president Tom Ahern and BOG member Greg Frick.

"We're in the process of updating the services available (for handicapped students)," McChesney said. "There aren't any real (specific) problems...it's an attempt to increase an awareness of students on campus."

Frick said the idea to form the task force, which is still in the planning stage, arose to involve handicapped students in student government to a greater extent.

"Disabled students are the best people on campus to assess the day-to-day problems they face on campus," he said. "Our focus is not really to solve any problems for anyone, but to facilitate a process where they can empower themselves."

The University has also established the Architectural Barrier Board to help make improvements on campus by reviewing priorities for funding. But the board, consisting of architectural planners and handicapped students, has not met recently.

"They have not met in a few months, and have not been very effective," Appleby noted. "But attempts are being made to revitalize the committee," he said.

Deciding priorities, which now include greater access to the Fine Arts Center and an elevator in E-lab, can be a difficult task.

We get some money, and what do we do with it? Do we spend $25,000 per floor for a new elevator, or do we spend it on ramps?

"There is no easy access to the Campus Center," Appleby continued, but they made improvements and changes in bathrooms and stores.

"We're constantly trying to improve."

Elderly mobster held without bail, brothers also arrested and held

BOSTON — Gennaro Angiulo, a diminutive man with the looks of a grandfather, is in jail today, denied bail after federal prosecutors described him as head of a murderous crime family with tendrils in gambling and loansharking throughout Massachusetts.

The 64-year-old Nahant man was ordered back to jail Tuesday by U.S. Magistrate Lawrence Cohen, following a lengthy bail hearing that was closed to reporters while prosecutors cited evidence from three months of telephone wiretaps to prove their contention that Angiulo should not go free.

Angiulo was arrested Monday night as he ate at Francesco's Restaurant in Boston's North End. Arrested with him were brothers Francesco J. Angiulo, 62, of Boston, and Michele A. Angiulo, 56, of Medford. Another brother, Donato F. Angiulo, 60, of Medford, was arrested elsewhere.

The brothers were identified as crime lieutenants, soldiers and associates of the crime family.

A fifth Angiulo brother, 67-year-old Vittore, described as consigliere, or adviser, was being sought.

Samuel S. Granito, 76, was arrested at his Revere home. Another defendant, 63-year-old Ilario M.A. Zannino of Swampscott, was arrested at Lynn Hospital, where he was under treatment for a heart condition.

Synthetic interferon provides new hope in fight against some cancers

CAMBRIDGE — Doctors have begun human experiments with a kind of interferon made by genetically rearranged bacteria that scientists believe is far more powerful against cancer than other forms of the germ killer yet tested.

Biogen Inc. said Tuesday that doctors at a hospital in the Netherlands gave injections of the substance, called gamma interferon, to a lung cancer patient last week.

"The evidence going into the trials is as encouraging as evidence could be," said Dr. Walter Gilbert, a Nobel Prize winner who is Biogen's chairman.

Gamma interferon is made in extremely small amounts by the body's immune system. Another form called alpha interferon is produced by white blood cells, while beta interferon is made by connective tissue.

During the 1970's, interferon was widely touted as a potential cancer cure, but it was too hard to extract the substance from human blood to test it widely. However, with genetic engineering, researchers have been able to insert human interferon genes into bacteria, which then makes the protein in limitless quantities.

Alpha interferon produced this way has been extensively tested in humans over the past two years. Although it has not turned out to be a magic cure, scientists believe it will be helpful against some forms of cancer.

Religious toker convicted and jailed on marijuana trafficking charges

SPRINGFIELD — Saying "Love, brothers," a Monson farmer, who insisted he smoked marijuana to "be closer to God," was led off to jail in handcuffs following his conviction on drug charges.

David Nissenbaum and his wife, Christine, both 35, who claimed they smoked marijuana "every waking hour" as part of their worship in the Ethiopian Zion Coptic Church, were found guilty Tuesday afternoon of trafficking and possession of more than 100 pounds of marijuana with intent to distribute.

A Hampden Superior Court Jury of seven women and five men deliberated just three hours before returning the verdicts. The jury also found Nissenbaum, who testified he raised the family's crop and distilled the marijuana, guilty of cultivation of marijuana and possession of hashish.

State Police testified they seized 103 pounds of marijuana and marijuana plants at the couple's 50-acre farm on March 20, 1981.

"I could never change," Mrs. Nissenbaum said after her husbnd was led off to jail in lieu of $100,000 bond. "I will continue to smoke ganja marijuana daily."

Results of AT&T breakup: local rates up, long distance down

BOSTON — Telephone customers face higher rates for local service, lower rates for long distance, and more choices under new federal mandates, officials said Tuesday.

Local service will go up $2 a month beginning in January, and long distance service may go down an estimated 10 percent, according to state and business officials.

"There'll be options," Public Utility Commissioner Paul Levy told a crowd of 200 consumers. "We will do our part to protect consumers ... But to a great extent, you'll be on your own."

Levy's remarks came at a consumer seminar on the effects of court-ordered divestiture of the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. on Massachusetts residents.

"There are more choices for consumers in every aspect of your phone service, from buying your own phone to making a long distance call," Consumer Affairs Secretary Paula Gold said.

"We don't know for sure yet what all the choices for consumers will be or exactly how much those choices will cost," she said.

New breed of farmers brings NH small scientific agricultural boom

CONCORD, N.H. — New Hampshire is experiencing an agricultural renaissance with a new breed of farmers bringing science, marketing techniques and capital to their enterprise.

Agricultural Commissioner Stephen Taylor says the number of small farms has increased by about 25 percent in the last 10 years.

The reason, he says, is the new farmers, "well-educated, reasonably prosperous people who have capital, want to live in a rural area and want to get involved in soms form of land-oriented or land-based economic endeavor."

"They came up with $50,000 or $100,000 a few years ago to buy a house while working at Digital or Sanders, and got something with six or eight acres. Then they decided,

Hartford police have suspects in Anti-Semitic arson attacks

WEST HARTFORD, Conn. — Police said Tuesday they have a "couple" of suspects in the arsons against the city's Jewish community, while at least two other suspects have been cleared in the case.

The home of State Rep. Joan R. Kemler was damaged on Saturday morning in the latest attack, while in August two synagogues and a rabbi's home were damaged in arson attacks. All the targets are located in the same area of the city.

Awards for outstanding students, staff

By SHARON HOFFMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Five $1,000 awards will be given to students and staff this fall in the division of student affairs at the University of Massachusetts.

The Distinguished Service Award, now in its third year, is given to students and staff whose work performance and service to students has been outstanding and distinguished.

Qualification for the award includes one or more of the following criteria: ongoing achievement for at least two years; "beyond the call of duty" service; original contribution to office which has led to better service; recognition from or cooperative effort with other components on campus; distinguished service to students or outstanding professional contribution, such as research or publication recognized outside the University.

"It's a good, positive program," said Sharon Weilgus, committee member and staff member at the office of the vice chancellor for student affairs, noting that this is the only program on campus which recognizes student service.

Last year there were six award recipients, two of whom were students. Every year a minimum of two students receive the award, but any full time classified or professional staff member in the division is eligible. This includes approximately 850 staff and 2,000 students, Weilgus said.

Last year approximately 100 nominations were made. The committee is hoping for more nominations this year since they have advertised much more than in the past, Weilgus said. The committee meets once a week to review nominations.

Staff members were sent nomination forms in the second week of August, and student nomination forms are now available in dormitories, at the information desk in the Campus Center, in the Student Affairs office and in other places around campus. The deadline for submitting nominations is September 30.

The awards will be given on Thursday, Oct. 20th at the Student Affairs convocation.

Larceny reported at School of Management

University of Massachusetts police Monday reported a complaint of larceny from a woman in the School of Management who had her wallet stolen. Police said the complainant had left her office for five minutes, and upon return, discovered her wallet was missing. The contents of the wallet were valued at $50. Other women in the office, also absent at the time of the theft, saw no suspicious persons in the area.

In other police action:

Police reported a complaint of larceny at 10:26 a.m. Monday from the father of a UMass student. The student, moving into Field dormitory, reported $255 in tools and assorted hardware stolen.

In another case of larceny, a student living on the fourth floor of Cance dormitory, who had left her door closed but unlocked found a $10 bill and a roll of quarters missing, police said. The complainant also had a $5 bill and a purse stolen from the room. There are no suspects.

Police said persons at the Textbook Annex have filed a complaint of larceny under $100, in reference to a book valued at $24.70. Two suspects have been named and it is expected that criminal action will be taken toward both.

UMass police reported a complaint of motor vehicle vandalism Monday, at 10:57 p.m. Anti-Semitic slurs were allegedly gouged into the car's exterior, causing $100 worth of damage.

PGA holds evening workshop for frosh last night

Editor's note: Because of the possible repercussions of this article several of the quoted sources requested anonymity and it was granted.

By TRICIA A. YACAVONE
Collegian Staff

For the first time, the People's Gay Alliance held a New Students Workshop for lesbian, gay and bisexual freshman to make them more aware of the accessible facilities for socializing, legal action, housing problems and counselling Tuesday night in the Campus Center.

Bruce Murphy, the main organizer for the program said he came up with the unprecedented idea over the summer.

"I felt tense going to the (PGA) dances and going into the PGA office, etc. (when I was a freshman). I know if there had been a workshop I'd have felt better," he said.

He said the main purpose of the workshop was to allow new students to feel better about their sexuality, but other orientation topics were discussed. The program included discussions of on-and-off-campus housing and what to do when harassed and the film Halies Pink Triangles.

The dorms most tolerant of homosexuality, according to Murphy, were those in the Northeast area. Kathy Offenhartz, a Peer Counselor at the Lesbian/Gay Men's Counselling Collective, said, "There are corridors that are wonderful where people are openly gay and nonhomophobic. But there are some that are not that way, regardless of the area."

Offenhartz solves this problem by living off-campus. She addressed the problems that homosexuals sometimes face with their landlords or their housemates, and pointed out that it is illegal in Amherst to be evicted for being homosexual.

"Amherst has a clause that people cannot be kicked out (of their rental property) because of their sexual orientation," she said.

Murphy added there is a similar clause in the UMass Housing Policy.

"If you feel the least bit harassed, report it to your R.A., he said. Know the time, place, what exactly happened and how you feel." This is important for any legal action taken, he said.

Murphy and Offenhartz passed out a list of organizations which were either openly homosexual or nonhomophobic. The organizations included the Pioneer Valley People's Gay Alliance (PVPGA), the Gay and Lesbian Activists (GALA), the Everywoman's Center, the UMass Lesbian Union and the Lesbian/Gay Men Counselling Collective, which offers counsellingfrom 4 p.m. to 8 p.m., Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday.

Offenhartz said an important part of showing the film Halies Pink Triangles was to show that "it's important to feel proud of being gay, that we need to come out as whoever we are, whatever that may be."

Ombuds office: representative of the people

By Laura Yudow
Collegian Staff

Amid all the confusion that goes hand in hand with the beginning of a new semester at the University of Massachusetts, many students find themselves lost in a maze of bureacratic red-tape.

There is help.

The Ombuds Office, derived from the Scandanavian term "representative of the people," was established 11 years ago to hear grievances from any member of the University.

"Almost any type of grievance can be brought to the office, whether it be administrative, such as housing or financial aid problems, or personal, such as sexual harassment and student teacher conflicts," Howard Gatlin, UMass Ombudsperson, said.

With administrative complaints, the office can usually cut through all the red-tape and have a valid problem resolved in a short period of time, he said.

The office of the Ombuds will investigate all valid grievances and try to resolve them through mediation when possible. If a student feels that a grade received is unfair and the professor will not change it, the Ombudsperson will investigate. If a grievance is valid, mediation between student and teacher will be set up. If the problem is not resolved in this way, the Ombudsperson can become the students advocate in formal proceedings.

Gatlin said that while more than half of the 350 cases they investigated last year addressed student problems, most of his time was spent resolving staff and faculty disputes.

Any employee of the University with a grievance about employee/employer relations can also use the office The office is closely associated with Affirmative Action and wages are referred between offices.

Gatlin calls the Ombuds service "unique."

"We have more autonomy than the offices at other schools. The administration has respected our independence and has never tried to interfere," he said.

The Ombuds Office, located in room 823 in the Campus Center, is open from 9 to 5 Monday through Friday, and appointments are helpful but not necessary.

No more machine back talk

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Correspondent

With a parched, dry throat, the perspiring University of Massachusetts student hastily deposits a quarter and two dimes into the slot of a Coca-Cola machine in the lobby of the Student Union.

To much of the student's surprise, the Coke machine gives no salutations, no demands to insert more coins, no thank you and, worse, no "have a nice day."

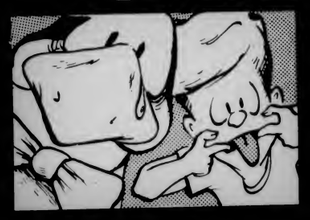
There were some who depended on the talking Coke machine for that certain optimism to get through a hectic day, and there were those who abhorred the annoying machine. No matter what the feelings were, the talking Coke machine has been replaced by a mute.

"It was not reliable," University Store Manager Winthrop Cummings said, "because the machine was mechanically giving us trouble."

"We had a problem with keeping the volume down because people were trying to study in the Cape Cod Lounge. It also became annoying to my people in the Mini Store who had to listen to the same thing all day, every day," Cummings said.

According to the distributors of Coca-Cola and Canada Dry, the talking Coke machine was being abused by the students.

"People were kicking it when the machine would ask for more money. They would put a nickel in just to have the machine repeatedly say 'Please deposit more change' so after awhile, it kept breaking down and became really annoying," a spokesperson for the company said.



The talking Coke machine served as a promotional advertisement for the Coca-Cola Company, Cummings said.

"That type of promo is something that has to be moved from location to location or the novelty wears off," Cummings said.

Sue Goldschmidt, a junior HRTA major puts a quarter in a silent Coke machine in the Student Union Ballroom.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Show-biz in Latin America

Is there any sense of justice being weighed over the crisis in Latin America? The Reagan Administration and the American media tend to portray the conflicts south of our border as if they were less-than-spaghetti Westerns.

Ronnie, always the well-seasoned ham, has upped the tension in the audience and of those "good neighbors" involved with a repertoire of theatrics and a few bully props like the U.S. Navy and the C.I.A. The supporting cast of Caspar, Casey, Clark and Kirkpatrick play the Directors, filming and editing events in Latin America in their own select chronology for the benefit of big Business, the Distributors.

The Pentagon is a hanging judge of the Clint Eastwood genre, scoffing at human rights violations in Latin America as if they were significant knots in the noose. With a myopic intolerance of a Marxist-Leninist in the "sphere of influence", the Reagan Administration has lost sight of the psychology of the Latin American condition. For most people and their parties, excluding perhaps Mexico and Costa Rica, dissent has always fomented through one of three outlets: exile, imprisonment, and martyrdom. Revolution has always been the climax of focus of such alternatives.

We watch the sheriff gun down each outlaw at high noon and smile in our safe quarters because this is our town and we're damn proud of it. In Latin America the distinction between bad guy and good guy is not so distinct, although Reagan reduces struggles in Nicaragua and El Salvador to ideological yes or no; democracy or totalitarianism.

Instability is a common thread in the fabric of Latin American politics. Peru hasn't had a decade without a military coup since the first of 1900. Chile, once synonymous with peace and democracy, currently buckles under the military dictatorship of General Pinochet, whom Reagan supports with economic aid despite a policy of imprisonment, assassination, and torture aimed at striking laborers and protesting students, as a remedy for the scarred economy.

The Reagan team applies emotional cold-war paranoia to the conflicts in Latin America. We dismiss, without apology, our government's past "Big-Stick" involvement. We lack the understanding of revolution as the only avenue of dissent open to the disgruntled masses. Our administration chooses to impose its will rather than become aware that the U.S., Cuba, Russia, and each native political system hold a multiplicity of images for the Latin American.

As the U.S. government asserts a vigilant perspective with a vigilante policy, the media helps the dupe along with persuasive and partisan over-stimuli. Either tabloids preach the Protestant Work Ethic through gossip or the "serious press" puts on the air of objectivity as they toe party lines. Without a middle ground, we lose the power of discretion and action, unable to distinguish the violence in the network news from that in Western duels.

In Latin America and elsewhere, the end has and will never serve the means, even if it's better Dead than Red." That's Ronnie's song and Hollywood's line, and it's been catching up to the point of death.

Andy Gould is a UMass student.

Andy Gould

A movie playing the silver screen recently, "TheStar Chamber", presents a tribunal of judges who pursue and punish hard criminals, seemingly always of minority status, who've been set free despite their crimes by petty bureaucratic loopholes, namely invasion of privacy. Reagan and his cohorts have set up a "chamber" of their own sort in deciding Latin American policy.

Charles Bronson violently exploited vigilantism in Death Wish I and II. The viewer leaves these movies feeling numb, confused to whether taking the law into one's own hands is being condoned or condemned. The same numbness exists as the government and media go poking their guns and cameras into the "pig-pens" of Latin Americans. U.S. concern for the freedoms of its southern neighbors (i.e. their so-called progress towards the Democratic dream) becomes widely publicized and takes priority only when the back-yard smells like an open cesspool.

The term "latin america", as narrow in scope as "Caucasian" or "Third World", is a black-and-white definition of an area consisting of over twenty-five nations with class structure divided by whites of European descent, Negroes, Indians, Mulattoes, Mestizosa and other grades of skin color mixed in miscegenation. This melting pot speaks in Spanish, French, Dutch, Creole, and surviving Indian tongues. We take pride that America was settled as a colony, with law and order enacted for all creeds; where Life, Liberty and Happiness were sought and protected. Latin America, on the other hand, was conquested for profit, raped of its natural and native beauty, and left for vultures drooling greed, suspicion, and cynicism.

U.S. exploitation of the Caribbean, Central and South America is a bit time-consuming for an efficient capitalist system to stop and research. The Reagan Administration, as Directors citing rising production costs, push for more military aid and fail to perceive the situation in living color and sense its fine nuances.

Don't make fun of Josh

To the Editor:

I am writing to inform the University community about several incidences of ignorant and malicious persecution which have been directed toward Campus Crusade for Christ, a Recognized Student Organization here on campus, which has suffered in the past week or more.

Last semester, we in Campus Crusade began an advertizing campaign to promote JOSH. No doubt you have seen our advertisements on blackboards, posters, table tents, banners, buttons and the like.

Curiously, many rumors have been founded regarding who Josh is, and why he is coming to UMass. We in Campus Crusade have worked hard in publicizing for Josh because we feel that his intellectual perspective toward Christianity is not stereotypical and is very suitable for college audiences. Unfortunately our efforts have been met with vandalism of our posters and banners. Members of our group have even been verbally assaulted and abused by very zealous anti-Christians.

The University community must not allow this type of religious persecution to continue. It is not the goal of Campus Crusade for Christ to recruit members or raise money. Rather, our group is a fellowship of like-minded men and women who simply believe that Jesus is who He has said He is. Our desire is to use speakers like Josh to share with the community the information which led us to that conclusion and allow the community to make its own conclusions.

Nirvana it isn't so easy

"How much of this gooey stuff do I have to eat before I find inner peace?" I asked Darla, spooning the last bit of blueberry yogurt from the container into my mouth. It was my fourth 250-calorie serving that day, and my patience was beginning to wear thin. I squelched a burp and tossed the container and plastic spoon into Darla's wastepaper basket.

"Huh?" she looked up from her Microeconomics book to regard me quizzically. She's a slightly eccentric friend of mine who is usually far more articulate. Furthermore, she recently appointed herself my personal advisor in my search for tranquility. You see, considering the many academic and social pressures at UMass, I figured that tranquility would be a handy thing to have around.

Elizabeth Luciano

"How much yogurt do I need to consume before finding inner harmony? You said that yogurt would bring me spiritual peace," I reminded her.

Darla sighed, shut her book, and pressed her temples as though she were getting a headache. I guess I can be pretty annoying at times; like a gadfly.

"I said yoga would bring you tranquility. Yoga, not yogurt," she said.

"Oh," I answered simply. It was an uncharacteristically monosyllabic reply, but frankly, I was embarrassed at having made such a stupid mistake. "It probably won't even give me a Dannon body." I muttered.

"Have you been meditating and chanting every night for ten minutes?" Darla asked, checking up on me. She's a very efficient taskmaster.

"Well, there have been some problems with that," I hedged. "I keep forgetting the words."

"Not good enough. Try again," she systematically rejected my excuse.

"It's impossible to sit still that long!" I pleaded. "I still fidget in church! If you don't believe me, just ask my Mother..."

"If you're restless, why don't you take up running? Lots of people acquire serenity that way." She was obviously determined not to let me off the hook.

"But I'd have to buy an expensive pair of running shoes," I said. "Right now, there's so little money in the bank, I'm using each teabag four times."

"Who do you think you are, Bill Rodgers?" Darla smirked. She's not one of those 'let's give-you-a-pat-on-the-back' people. "Your tennis sneakers will do fine."

"I'll get all sweaty, though." I sounded like a Valley Girl. Or Valley Woman, as the case may be.

"So? Ever hear of a shower?" Darla said shortly. She definitely had me there, no doubt about it.

"The truth is, I'm too self-conscious to run," I confessed. "Everybody's going to stare out their windows and say, "Good thing Elizabeth's running. She's disgustingly out of shape."

"Then why don't you buy some time in a sensory deprivation tank?" Darla suggested. "Nobody can see you in one of those."

"I'm a claustrophobic who's afraid of the dark," I lied. The honest-to-God truth is, I'm very modest and shun the idea of shucking my clothes in a strange place. Not to mention the fact that I don't want deprived senses, anyway.

"What about going to the hot tubs?" Darla proposed. "With a bunch of friends and a bottle of white wine, it might be very relaxing."

"I'd probably fall asleep and drown." I told her. "Besides, wouldn't a lot of bacteria grow in such warm water?" The thought of floating around in someone else's diseases hardly struck me as appealing, let alone healthy.

"Maybe we should change the subject." Darla said, clenching her teeth. We were becoming annoyed with one another.

"Good idea." I agreed, since neither of us is particularly fond of bloodshed.

"I bumped into James today," she commented lightly.

"That's nice." I snapped. Mr. not-So-Wonderful dumped me several months ago in order to date Linda-Lou, a Munchkin with a Jimmy Carter smile who uses Sears Weatherbeater Paint for make-up, and is just as nauseatingly cute as her name suggests. "Is he still involved with that little tramp - I mean, that nice young lady?" When Shakespeare said, 'Hell hath no wrath like a woman scorned', he wasn't kidding.

"Nope. She broke up with him and followed some drummer to Berkeley, California." Darla tole me.

Suddenly, the clouds parted and I was enveloped in golden sunshine. The everyday problems of finding my lost I.D. and signing into Early American Literature were banished from my mind. My face was a study of joyousness.

"What is this fabulous feeling?" I murmured, trance-like.

"I'd hate to jump the gun," said Darla hesitantly, "but it sure looks like serenity to me."

College bikeway: rocky roads

Ups and downs of ride work out writer

By DEBBIE JANES
Collegian Correspondent

The route looked easy enough. My cycle was tuned up. I even had on my biking shoes. It was only my mind that had to prepare for the 28-mile, Five-College Bikeway route, out lined in my pseudo-official Pioneer Valley Planning Commission map, which I crumpled in my back pocket as I started to pedal down North Pleasant Street on my way to Amherst Center and Amherst College.

I considered this a sort of experiment. The bikeway, it seemed, was only real on paper and I wanted to check out its possibilities as both a commuting and recreational bike route. The commission sets up no specific purpose for it; only that we cyclists, as drivers, would probably like to find the easiest way possible to visit the five schools.

That seemed simple enough, especially as I headed downtown, on North Pleasant and reached Amherst College within five minutes.

That was easy enough. It even tempted me to sit around for a while on the Amherst Common, which I passed, but I headed straight down the street, past all those brick buildings (you know, the kind that look like something out of a college brochure? — that's my secret of finding Amherst College) and down the hill.

The map pointed me to Route 116, which is known to most students as the connecting point between UMass, Amherst, Hampshire, and Mount Holyoke colleges.

This was not as smooth sailing as my directory would have me believe. Although there was a bike lane and then a path the first couple miles out of town, it soon emptied back onto the car infested road.

Without even a shoulder to ride on, I felt extremely vulnerable on the road as cars whizzed past me less than a foot from my bike. A car swerved to miss me, and nearly hit another one. God, why didn't I wear my helmet!

I finally saw the Hampshire College exit, and heading down the ramp on a long, grassy road dotted with small houses and finally, near the campus, what looked to be a barn and a greenhouse.

I was on campus. I almost didn't realize it at the time, but I was indeed on the Hampshire College campus, which is easy to miss if you're staring at the immense meadow adjacent to the main building, which you should use as a landmark.

Just to make sure, I asked a student where the school actually was, and she laughed and pointed to a mass of contemporary-styled buildings beyond the small hill.

After viewing the modern, "hip" campus, I headed back to 116 with its unrelenting traffic. I left the campus, and began to feel the effect of the ride. My legs became shaky as the mammoth mountain ahead loomed over me. Maybe I should hail a taxi and see the rest of this trip in comfort. Why dear editor did you give me this story, screamed my leg muscles as I traversed up the hill.

I continued on 116 and within a short 10 minutes pulled into South Hadley where the traffic became very congested as I searched for the Mt. Holyoke College entrance.

I had no trouble finding Mt. Holyoke — the trouble was, I seemed to be more concerned with the action — or sometimes inaction — of my body as I pedaled up to the campus, which is pretty easy to find — all you need to look for are ivy-covered buildings and hills. Lots of hills.

I seemed to be about halfway done with my excursion, according to the map. The first four schools seemed clumped together, with Smith college quite a ride away. The whole thing seemed to go in a triangle shape — UMass and Amherst at the top, Hampshire at the bottom left and Mt. Holyoke at the bottom right — it seemed as if the road to Smith was the reflected triangle.

Finally, I could relax when I turned on to Route 47, where I could look around without worrying about being flattened by a Mack truck. This time I was in front of cornfields and meadows, which made me, however, want to check around for any motorists slowing down to look at the fields and not at me.

I have to admit the road was a bit disconcerting, being so full of meadows and cornfields and then an Almy's department store.

I pedaled on to Route 9, Northampton bound. It was quite a jolt to go from moo cows and fragrant flowers to honking horns and exhaust fumes.

I crossed the Calvin Coolidge bridge, praying that the wind would not throw me into the traffic below.

The bridge deposited me onto Bridge Street, then Main Street and finally Elm Street. These were all the same street I discovered probably just given three different names.

This was all too baffling; it called for an ice cream break at Bart's.

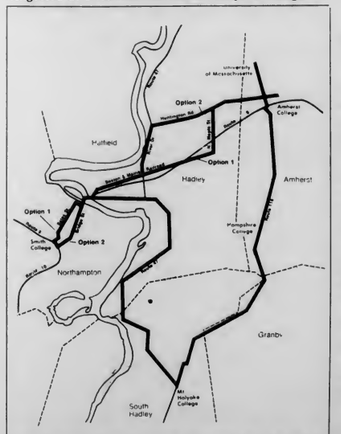
I jumped back on my bike, took a tour of Smith College, wondering what going to an all-female school would be like.

Back on Route 9, I stopped to ask a police officer where the Boston and Maine railroad bikepath was that was illustrated on my map.

"It was never paved; the whole thing is really a mess," he responded. "The city keeps rejecting the idea. I sure would like to see it paved so you kids could get off 9."

I couldn't have agreed with him more.

But now I could see the UMass towers. I quickened my pace to the familiar campus. Once there, I plopped down on the grass and drained my water bottle.



It was a nice pleasure ride, for the most part. But if I need to get to Smith or Mount Holyoke, I'll leave my bike parked in the garage.

Hand me some bus tokens, please!

CONSTRUCTION FACES HOLDUP

By Alice R. Klingener
Collegian Staff

By widening road shoulders and utilizing a section of the abandoned B & M railroad bed which runs between Northampton and Amherst, the commission proposes to create a route which will allow cyclists to travel on a route which is free of motorized vehicles.

The town of Hadley, through which 10 miles of a proposed 28 mile Five College Bikeway is planned to run, is holding up construction on the project.

"It's not even a project yet," said Steve Weitz, principal planner of the Pioneer Valley Planning commission's transportation department. "The state won't even look at it until Hadley approves it."

A share of $2 million in a transportation plan being considered by the state Legislature in July was earmarked for Massachusetts bike routes, of which the Five-College bikeway is one.

The construction budget for the bikeway, estimated at $1 million, would be financed by the Massachusetts Department of Public Works, using funds from the Federal Highway Administration.

Hadley is faced with responsibility for the largest single stretch of the bikeway and the high maintenance costs. Each town the bikeway runs through would be responsible for maintaining the bikeway after it is built, including sweeping the paths and patching potholes.

The bikeway would run between the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Hampshire, Mt. Holyoke and Smith colleges. By widening road shoulders, paving separate off-road bikepaths and utilizing a section of the abandoned B & M railroad bed which runs between Northampton and Amherst, the Planning Commission proposes to create a route which will allow cyclists to travel on a route which is free of motorized vewhicles.

"Its main purpose is for students to be able to get from one place to another as safely as possible," Weitz said.

The state is in negotiations to buy right-of-way through the railbed property. The railroad, or an alternative route between Smith and UMass through some of Hadley's lesser traveled roads, is the most important segment of the route because most of the bike traffic is expected to pass between Northampton and the Amherst campuses.

The proposed route is divided into three legs, the first leading from Amherst to Northampton via back roads and a section of rehabilitated railbed. The second leg follows Route 116 from UMass over the Notch to South Hadley, through the town of Granby. The third section runs from South Hadley to Hadley along Route 47.

Between two and six miles of the remaining 18 miles run through South Hadley, Northampton, Amherst and Granby. All of the towns except Hadley have agreed to pay for maintenance of the route.

Artist Jim Roche to lecture at Herter Hall

Artist Jim Roche will present a lecture on his work at 7 p.m. on September 21 in Rm. 227, Herter Hall. An exhibition of Roche's work, including a series of drawings entitled The End Result of Constructivist Theory and a new body of assemblage sculpture entitled What's Right is Right: What's Left is Wrong will be on display at the University Gallery (located on the pond side of the FAC) from September 24 — October 28.

The End Result of Constructivist Theory is a series of thirteen drawings produced by Roche in 1978. The drawings depict a step-by-step visual transition that begins with a swastika and ends with a grid. According to the artist, the imagery traces the "evolution of single world governments into a one world socialist state."

What's Right is Right: What's Left is Wrong was created specifically for the University Gallery. The exhibition is comprised of thirteen wooden sculptures and reliefs in the form of Christian roadside crosses that are brightly painted with fundamentalist religious slogans (see above). In each work, a large central cross is flanked by two smaller crosses. The configuration recalls the crucifixion of Christ and the two thieves.

Roche's work has been exhibited extensively, including one-person exhibitions at the Whitney Museum of American Art, New York; the Contemporary Arts Museum, Houston, as well as the Kansas City Art Institute. Roche has lectured on his work at universities across the country and Wednesday's lecture will consist of a slide show followed by a question and answer period.

Jim Roche's lecture is part of the Visiting Artists' Lecture Series and is sponsored by the University Gallery, the Graduate Art Students Association, and the University Arts Council.

Minority women win awards

By MICHELLE HYDE
YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Three Third World women were honored Sunday at a scholarship award dinner in memory of Seta T. Rampersad, a 20-year-old University of Massachusetts student from Trinidad found ded in Motel 6 in South Deerfield in 1978.

Luisa Vargas, '86, a political science major from Lawrence, Mass., and a Bilingual Collegiate Program Student, Pauline Lee, '85, a fashion marketing student from Boston and Marie St. Fleur, '84, a political science student also from Boston and both CCEBMS students each received a scholarship award of $300.00.

Fundings for the scholarships were derived from annual rallies, speeches and donations collected by the Third World Women's Task Force in protest of the decision to close Rampersad's case due to a lack of evidence.

Last year, the Task Force decided to establish the money collected for Rampersad investigation as a scholarship award "to remember Seta in a positive way."

"Even though her death was symbolic we wanted something constructive to come out of her tragedy," Malika Jones, Third World Women Task Force Director said.

The scholarship was open to all undergraduate Third World women with at least a 2.5 cumulative average, and who are "devoted to social change" said Jones.

Rampersad's parents also received a plaque.

Because the testimony of the suspects were conflicting, Jones said the judge at the inquest concluded there was no evidence to bring criminal charges against them and closed the case.

Members of the Task Force claimed that because Rampersad was a minority and because suspects had been prominent members of the community, the Franklin and Hampshire County's District Attorney's office hadn't fully investigated the case.

"Her death wasn't an isolated incidence. It was a part of a pattern of violence that occurred up here in the valley," Panna Putman, a member of the Task Force said. "We live in a system that doesn't work, especially if you are a woman, a person of color or a working class person, which Seta was," Putman said.

Though there was not a major breakthrough in the Rampersad investigation, the Task Force approached the University to release Rampersad's diploma to her family. The Task Force also asked the University to investigate violence towards Third World women in general.

Seta T. Rampersad remembered in an awards dinner ceremony on Sunday. World Women Task Force.

Open letter to students

Welcome or welcome back to the University of Massachusetts. 311 minority students were admitted to the University this year, a 7.5 percent increase. Along with those who entered and those who are returning, there will be a great demand for the coverage of news, information, issues and events pertaining to the Third World community on campus.

The Black Affairs page is a section of the Collegian devoted to reporting local, national and international news affecting the Third World community. Black Affairs also reports University and community information as well as social and entertaining events occurring in the Pioneer Valley.

Black Affairs formed 11 years ago when a group of 59 students fought against the newspaper medium on campus to rightfully depict members of the Third World community of the University. Since then, Black Affairs has remained a strong force in the coverage of news and information vital to the Third World community and a strong opponent of the distorted news coverage of Third World members in the United States.

Through the years, Black Affairs has confronted both strengths and weaknesses due to student's interest and effort to maintain the section a potent source of news coverage for Third World people.

The previous staff solemnly devoted its time to do so, but like many of us students, the time came for them to move on to the "real world".

Now you are needed to continue the tradition and become an active voice in the Third World community.

Many Third World people are aware that many rights denied to them were not easy to achieve. Therefore, in order to show our appreciation for the effort made by men and women who fought to obtain better community and social services for Blacks and other minorities, we must see to it that these agencies are preserved by volunteering our time and talents.

Otherwise, what we have fought for will be gone for the next generation.

The NFL should pay attention to that 'other' league - USFL

RUSS WHINNEM

All the talk has been made about the difference. There were such obvious differences. Oh sure, that new league with the longer name might be good for a little Spring diversion, maybe a couple of decent games, probably a few laughs. The only real game in town, though, would still be the Fall one.

Well now the real game, the N.F.L., is three weeks old and it has been its usual entertaining self. But some funny things have happened with the U.S.F.L., that "other" league. Funny things that have closed the gap faster than any fan could have dreamed or any N.F.L. executive could have feared.

"What's that you say? Cincinnati Bengal star receiver Cris Collinsworth is jumping to the U.S.F.L. next season?"

It seemed to have started with the transformation of Herscel (no last name need be added), from a Dawg in Georgia to a General in Jersey. The situation escalated with North Carolina's Kelvin Bryant's decision to join that "other" league. When half of SMU's vaunted "Pony Express" Craig James galloped into the U.S.F.L., the topping was added. Some pretty big names had a lot of heads turning.

"How's that? Another Bengal? You say clutch tight end Dan Ross is also U.S.F.L. bound?"

With a new batch of some surprising name players and a whole lot of enthusiasm that "other" league took its best shot. Thing is, they came up looking more than just a bit entertaining. In fact, they were a darn good show. To prove that you need not look past Massachusetts. The Patriots, and the Breakers. Who's a lot more fun to watch on a given afternoon? It sure isn't the team that begins with P. as in Problems. The Breakers were genuinely innovative and exciting to watch. Remember the last time the Pats threw in something exciting like a half-back option pass. It was around the days of guys like Andy Johnson. Where's A.J. now? Seems to be in a Breaker's uniform.

"More news? Joe Cribbs, star running back of the Buffalo Bills is jumping too?"

Now the mind is starting to wonder. Maybe there really is something to this U.S.F.L. Maybe they will stick around a lot longer. Maybe the N.F.L. people better stop their badmouthing and start worrying about keeping their own home.

"What's the latest word? Tampa Bay starting quarterback Doug Williams has already begun his defection? He's not even playing out his final N.F.L. season, huh."

It became one of the main topics of the summer. Ask anyone who watched. People all over were talking about how much the league surprised them, how much they enjoyed it.

The fans weren't the only ones who noticed. Walker, Bryant, James, Collinsworth, Ross, Cribbs, Williams. The players are stretching their eyes too.

So much for the diversion, so much for a couple of good games, so much for a few good laughs. Yep, the meaning has become crystal clear. The "other" guys have been working hard at dropping the "other" off their shoulders.

You know what? It's working.

Men's soccer (0-0-2) travels to UNH

BY TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

"We're certainly not unhappy."

That was the University of Massachusetts men's soccer coach Jeff Gettler cautiously optimistic reaction to the team's first two games. Both matches were hard-fought, double-overtime ties on the road, but coach Gettler had other thoughts on the subject.

"We were unlucky not to win against Boston University," he said. "We also played real tough against Southern (Connecticut), but we deserved to win the B.U. game."

Gettler went on to say that anything other than a loss against a New England school is all right, especially on the road, which is why he is showing this slightly optimistic view.

Once again, the Minutemen will have to do battle on someone else's turf as they take on the University of New Hampshire today at 3 p.m. This match will carry the scars of the first two as key players may be out with injuries. Senior captain Kevin Flynn has a bad ankle, midfielder Mike Bellino has tendonitis in the knee (he has only seen a couple of minutes of action), and forward Kayvan Khatami has a charlie horse in his thigh. All are on a day to day basis.

But others, according to Gettler, are picking up the slack. "Lenn Margolis at sweeper, Frank Neffinger on defense, Tom Oschok and Simon Ostrov at mid-fielders, and freshman Paul Serafinp up front are all playing very well. The whole team is."

Against the Wildcats, Gettler looks for an "honest, hard-working team. They just kick the ball down and go after it. They are very direct."

However, the cautious optimism that Gettler felt after the first two games has ballooned somewhat to a more positive outlook. "Good teams should win the game that they are supposed to win. We should win tomorrow's game."

So, by the time the soccer team comes home (after a tournament this weekend in Cornell) on October 1st, we may see a couple of check-marks under the "W" column. And maybe coach Gettler can go from "not unhappy" to "happy".

UMass wins third straight over BC

Defense hasn't given up any goals this year

By Jill Lang
Collegian Staff

Before the start of each game, University of Massachusetts field hockey coach Pam Hixon sets some objectives for her team.

Yesterday, before UMass took the field against the Lady Eagles of Boston College, Hixon's objective was for her team to make sure that the BC goalkeeper touched the ball at least twelve times. After 70 minutes of play, the Minutewomen reached that goal...almost.

Official statistics for the game show that BC goalie Cathy O'Brien had eleven saves.

The final score of this contest was UMass 2, BC 0.

"We played much better than last game," hixon said. "We moved the ball well, and used one another very much to our advantage."

UMass outshot the Lady Eagles, 18-0, and outnumbered BC in corners, 8-0.

"We got shots off on 50 percent of our corners, and I am pleased about that," Hixon said.

Hixon said she was hoping for more than one goal in this game, and she got it...one in each half.

The first tally came with 2:58 left in the first half.

On a corner play, forward Sue Packard fed the ball to defender Carol Progulske, who fired the ball past two BC defenders and goalie O'Brien.

The second goal was tallied at 10:43 in the second half.

Forward Judy Morgan passed the ball to junior forward Pam Moryl, who flicked the ball past O'Brien.

"We played a very steady defensive game," Hixon said. "And we got some valuable help from the bench. Maura Coughlin came in off the bench and played very well," Hixon said.

The Minutewomen are now 3-0, and have yet to be scored upon.

Friday, UMass will be playing the University of North Carolina on the turf at Springfield College. Game time is 7:30 p.m.

Spikers take long, hot match from Lowell

By ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian correspondent

The head coach of the University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team, Elaine Sortino won her 100th game last night, but it wasn't easy.

After 2 hours and 25 minutes of hot action, UMass came away victorious from a surprisingly tough match against a very well coached University of Lowell team 15-13, 11-15, 15-9, 15-11. Sporting a new coach and new all around look, Lowell was strong from the first serve to the final handshake.

Long rallies, super digs and hustle set the tempo for the first game as UMass squeeked by.

UMass lost the second game (best 3 of 5 series) by four points, but there were some bright spots. Freshman Michele Barys came in to replace Ann Ringrose and played exceptionally well, coming off the bench.

Game three was won by what would prove to be the biggest margin of victory on this night. The six point difference, luckily showed UMass under the "W" column. It was just one of the games which led Sortino to claim, "We were lucky to get out of there!"

Ellen Deady, a freshman from Quincy Mass. was one of the key figures in the fourth contest. Deady came off the bench to supply UMass with some super offensive and defensive help. Sortino viewed the freshman coming off the bench as one of ths key reasons UMass came home from Lowell with a victory at all; but the story does not end there.

Although the team is young, some of the upperclassmen were instrumental in long fought battle. If standouts had to be picked on this night, all eyes would turn to Kirsten Smith and Patty Grant.

Last night, Smith wasn't flashy or overbearing, she was as usual--very steady

Setter Grant, may have been the exceptional one on this time. She was literally everywhere. The setter on any team is the key to a teams offense. Last night, Patty was the main reason for a win, rather than a loss.

A tired coach Sortino had this to add about this long night, "We've played better. This match may show the team that there is still a lot of room for improvement."

UMass takes their show to the Central Connecticut tournament on this Saturday. At 7-1, it is nice to think that they can still improve.

Liberty takes charge of America's Cup; leads series 3-1

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Skipper Dennis Conner, sailing conservatively after bolting into an early lead, steered Liberty to within one victory of the America's Cup by beating Australia II in Tuesday's fourth race, the closest of the series.

The American boat leads 3-1 for the best of seven series contest for the Cup the United States has held since the competition began 132 years ago. The fifth race is scheduled for Wednesday.

Liberty led by six seconds at the start and never trailed.

Conner, who had called for a lay day (day off) for fear of the light winds predicted for Rhode Island Sound, found himself in similar unfavorable conditions for most of today's race.

However, Liberty prevailed over the Australian challenger to win the closest race by far, with a winning margin of only 0:43 seconds.

Liberty opened the series last week by capitalizing on a series of Australian tactical errors and mechanical errors to win the first two races by margins of 1:10 and 1:33.

However, Australia II rode the lighter breezes this weekend and almost won two races. Australia II led by a whopping six minutes when last Saturday's race was called because of time.

The Aussies didn't run short of time on Sunday and moved to within one race of the Americans with a smashing 3:14 victory. It was the largest margin of victory ever by a challenger.

Now with Liberty up two races, the US 12 meter yacht only needs one more race to sew up the trophy. The Aussies need two of three races and that doesn't leave much room for error.

Josh is here at UMass ; expresses views at FAC

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Since last semester when posters reading simply "Josh is coming" started appearing around the University of Massachusetts, people have asked, "Who is Josh?"

The questions were answered last night at the Fine Arts Center as an attentive crowd of 500 heard Josh McDowell give his views on the emergence of Jesus into his life.

"The way I see it, the resurrection of Jesus Christ is either the biggest hoax put over the people of the world or the most fantastic fact in all of history," said McDowell who is one of the most visible members of the Campus Crusade for Christ.

His lecture, "The Resurrection-Hoax?" was the first step in the culmination of a massive media campaign by members of the Campus Crusade for Christ. The second step in McDowell's program will be tonight with a lecture on "Maximum Sex" at the FAC at 7:30.

McDowell said he discovered Christ while attending college in Michigan in 1959 and since then his life has been changed. "I intellectually believe in the resurrection of Jesus," said the sandy-haired 44 year-old California resident.

McDowell claims to have documented 24,633 manuscripts of the original New Testament that back up his beliefs. "I don't have a blind faith, I have physically researched this through, despite my original intentions to refute it," said McDowell who boasts of having received 60-75 letters requesting that he visit UMass.

"I see Jesus not as a religion but as a relationship," McDowell said. "I feel it is my duty to share that with others."

McDowell, who broke up his talk with frequent jokes, is the author of 18 books, has done 11 movies and is a graduate of three colleges, including a seminary. He has, in his estimate, spoken to over seven million students in the past 15 years, last visiting UMass in 1971."I go to colleges because I am disturbed with what I see happening. A high percent of students have a low self esteem and can't express their feelings. I want to show them that they can do something about that existence and change their lives," said McDowell, who walked across the stage to make his point to various sections of the audience.

After the lecture, several students were not willing to comment on McDowell unless they remained anonymous.

"I came here by myself," said one woman. "I don't want anybody to know I was here."

"People at universities are continually seeking the truth and I think I can convince people that the truth is in Jesus Christ," said McDowell. "I want to help them." Some of that "help" was available in the form of books and tapes for sale in the lobby of the FAC, and he also takes contributions.

New union will now service graduate teachers at UMass

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

Several attempts to unionize graduate student employees in the past three years have finally led to the creation of the Graduate Teachers Organization (GTO).

The infant organization, is working with the Massachusetts' Teachers Association (MTA), the statewide organization which faculty union, Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), is affiliated with.

"We interviewed several unions over the summer and finally decided to affiliate ourselves with the MTA," said David Wazeter, new vice president of the University's Graduate Student Senate as well as a steering committee member.

Two reasons why the union was formed are the lack of set procedures for students to deal with grievances, and the issue of salaries, states a letter currently being mailed to T.A.'s and T.O.'s by GTO.

Because of a 120 percent inflation rate, and insufficient pay raises in the past 10 years, the T.A.'s have lost 41 percent in real income, the organization claims.

The GTO will have only teaching assistants and teaching associates as its members. Past unionization attempts have included research assistants whom the Massachusetts legislature refuses to consider employees, Wazeter said.

According to Wazeter, in addition to organizing the T.A.'s and T.O.'s, the organization will file a bill in the Massachusetts state legislature through Rep. James Collins (D-Amherst) which will try to change section 150E of the Mass. Public Sector Bargaining laws to define the students as employees.

"As it is now, the law doesn't address T.A.'s and T.O.'s at all," said Wazeter. "We hope to reverse it to say that they are employees," he added.

"We are also going to put forth a real effort in lobbying state representatives to support the bill, unlike the perfunctory lobbying efforts of our past unionization attempts," Wazeter said.

Wazeter said he anticipates no difficulty in getting the required 30 percent of the graduate students to sign a union authorization card, considering the overwhelming majority that supported a referendum calling for unionization in the Graduate Student Senate's elections last May (82 percent voted to support the measure.)

When the required percentage of students sign authorization cards, the GTO will petition the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission to hold an election to determine if a majority of all T.A.'s and T.O.'s want to join the union.

Although three of the graduate senate's officers are members of the GTO's steering committee, the GTO is an entirely separate body from the senate, said Sanjiv Dugal, Senate president.

Painful struggle for freedom

In the United States, convicted rapists go to jail. They are locked behind bars.

But the victims of rape also live behind bars, in their own prisons. Prisons which for many victims, allow them few visitors and little chance for parole.

When a woman is raped there is very little which can be said to her. There are very few comforting words.

A rape victim, however, does not have to live behind bars forever. With time, with patience, and with pain, there can be, and more often than not is, a tomorrow.

One of the important things a woman should remember if she is raped is what happened to her was in no way her fault. She was the victim of a crime, and nothing less than that, said Mary Dumas, staff

Army copter highlights drive

A military helicopter and a rope walk across the Campus Pond highlighted a combined Easter Seals fundraiser and military recruitment program Wednesday at the University of Massachusetts.

Officers and students from the UMass Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC) spent the afternoon challenging passersby to grope across a rope ladder strung five feet over the pond. A Massachusetts Army National Guard UH-1 medical evacuation helicopter hulked nearby, its three officers answering the questions of curious students and assuring them that no, the University was not under attack.

The purpose of the event was to show students that "ROTC is not all a military thing," said Bob Ross, a junior psychology

NUEVA PALESTINA, Honduras, Sept. 20 — JUNGLE SEARCH — A government military patrol searches for leftist guerillas in the jungle in the Eastern part of Honduras on Tuesday. Sunday guerilla leader Jose Ryes Mates was killed and a priest, Father James Carney is reported dead from exhaustion after fleeing from government troops.

Bloody upheaval follows demonstration in Manila

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The bloodiest anti-government rioting in President Ferdinand E. Marcos' 18-year rule rocked Manila Wednesday, leaving at least seven people dead and 150 injured by official count.

The violence exploded after a peaceful demonstration by about 500,000 Filipinos in front of Manila's central post office exactly one month after the assassination of Marcos' chief political rival, Benigno Aquino.

Street fires and rallies continued late into the night in both poor and wealthy Manila neighborhoods, but the worst violence was on Mendiola Bridge leading to Marcos' palatial residence.

Nearly 1,000 youths shouting "Ninoy, Ninoy," Aquino's nickname, threw stones and charged police lines, set afire two buses and a dredging crane and threw homemade bombs into police ranks.

Police at first retreated but then fought back with clubs and gunfire, clearing the rioters and thousands of other students off streets in the university district, about a half-mile from the palace.

The dead included two firemen, a marine corporal and four civilians, the government said. It said at least 50 riot troops were injured, including a brigadier general hit by shrapnel from a bomb.

Injured civilians, including five reporters covering the riots, suffered cuts and bruises and wounds from shrapnel or bullets.

Rioters in a neighboring district looted and burned a government food store where goods are sold at discounted prices.

Marcos went on national television during the rally to say he was more saddened than angered by opposition criticism. His palace later issued an appeal for calm and promised continued dialogue and "maximum tolerance" in dealing with demonstrators.

Mendiola Bridge was the site of a 1970 student riot in which four youths were killed.

Gov. Dukakis signs bill protecting sexual assault victims' privacy

BOSTON (AP) — Victims of sexual assaults in Massachusetts now have the right not to be questioned during a trial about their sexual history — a right first extended to rape victims six years ago.

"In these cases, the primary witness is the victim," Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said Wednesday at a bill-signing ceremony in the McCormack state office building.

"One of the reasons women have been reluctant to come forward is that in the past they have had to risk the possibility of a trial that turns into a fishing expedition into their own sexual history," he said.

The state's "Rape Shield Law," passed in 1977, states that victims in rape cases may not be questioned by defense attorneys about their sexual history. Supporters of the law argued that it was needed to prevent intimidation of the victims who are often the only witness to rapes.

The new law, sponsored by the Caucus of Women Legislators, extends the same protection to victims of sexual assault, which is defined as an attack of violent nature that stops short of actual rape.

Priest feared dead in Honduras

TEGUCIGALPA. Honduras (AP) - An American priest who had joined leftist guerrillas, died of exhaustion while trying to flee Honduran troops, a military spokesman said. But the Jesuit superior of Honduras said he doubted the official version and that it was full of "loopholes."

The body of the 58-year-old priest has not been recovered.

Elsewhere in Central America, the Nicaraguan government said Tuesday it has renewed its invitation to a U.S. diplomat who canceled a September trip after an apparent snub, and in Guatemala the army reported it killed 25 guerrillas in attacks on three rebel camps.

Honduran Col. Cesar Elvir Sierra said James Francis Carney, a Roman Catholic priest from St. Louis, died of exhaustion caused by a lack of food while trying to escape with a rebel force in the jungles of Olancho province during a government sweep of a mountainous area near the Nicaraguan border. Sierra did not exlain the reason he gave for Carney's death.

Sierra said the body of Carney - a priest popular for his work among peasants and also known as Father Guadalupe - has not been recovered. He provided no other details on Carney's death, but said guerrilla leader Jose Maria Reyes Mata was killed Sunday during the drive. First reports said Carney too had been killed. Father Jose Maria Tojeira, the Jesuit superior for Honduras, said he doubted the official statement attributing Carney's death to exhaustion and that his order would do everything possible to help the family recover the body.

"Reaching out" much less costly

WASHINGTON AP - The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. announced Wednesday it would ask federal regulators to approve long-distance rate reductions of $1.75 billion a year, the largest cut in telecommunications history.

The company did not spell out a precise schedule for trimming its interstate rates. But in a filing with the Federal Communications Commission on July 29, AT&T estimated they could be slashed from 10 percent to 15 percent.

AT&T said details of the cutback would be unveiled Oct. 3 when a formal tariff, or rate schedule, is filed with the agency.

Spokesman Pie Wagner said, however, that a reduction in revenues of $1.75 billion "will work out to a reduction in actual rates within that range of 10 percent to 15 percent for the average customer."

State pension fund nearing debt; officials say plan needs reworking

BOSTON — State and local officials say they like a new plan to restructure the financing of the state employee pension system, but warn the proposal would fail unless there were wide-ranging reform of how disability pensions are awarded.

The testimony Wednesday came when two state Senate committees — Ways and Means and Public Service — held a joint hearing to discuss ways of preventing the public pension system's $10 billion debt from getting even bigger.

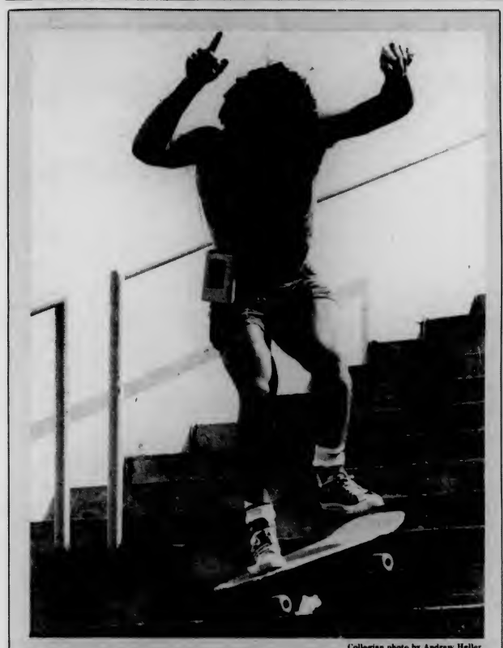
"It is clear that the major issue around this piece of legislation is not the legislation itself but the disability system," said Sen. Chester G. Atkins, chairman of ways and means.

"If we don't deal with disability this year it will be a $30 million loss," said Rep. David Cohen, D-Newton. "And if we don't do it this year I don't know when we will do it. This is the single question on pension reform."

Vote okays "hands off Central America" rally on Boston Common in early October

BOSTON — The Democratic State Committee, by a 25-15 vote, has endorsed a rally on Boston Common against intervention by the United States in Central America, scheduled for Oct. 2.

Committee staffer Linda Hartke said Wednesday the support came at a committee meeting Tuesday at the University of Massachusetts-Boston. She said that, including congressmen and statewide officeholders, there are 131 members of the Democratic State Committee.



Citizens For Participation in Political Action requested the endorsement, she said, in a communication that speakers are expected to include U.S. Reps Gerry Studds of Cohasset and Barney Frank of Newton.

CPPAX is part of the coalition backing an initiative petition restructuring the Legislature that is bitterly opposed by Democratic House and Senate leaders.

assistant to the Department of Public Safety.

The rapist is looking to "humiliate and degrade (the victim), the fastest way possible," she said.

If a woman is raped, the choice of whether or not to proceed on the legal route is hers and hers alone.

Kathy Alexander, coordinator of Against Violence Against Women at Everywoman's Center, said in counselling rape victims, it is important to let a woman know she is still an individual capable of making up her own mind.

"We don't take power away from women, the rapist has already done that," Alexander said.

Whether a woman seeks medical attention is also her choice, but there are many reasons why she should go to the hospital or at least see a doctor.

One important reason a woman should seek medical attention is to check for possible internal injuries, a type of injury which in some cases she may not even be aware she has, Alexander said.

"Every rape is violent. In many cases an instrument is used," Hospital attention therefore is very important, she said.

The hospital can also check for possible pregnancy or look for any kind of disease the rapist may have which could be transmitted through sexual contact, specifically herpes or any other social disease, she said.

If a victim does decide to prosecute, the medical examination can be used as evidence in a trial. The hospital can check for sperm and hair follicles, which can be used in possible identification of the rapist.

"Every woman is an individual, we have to let her know her alternatives," she said.

There is no typical rapist, and there is no typical rape victim.

"Not all are victimized in the same way and not all respond in the same way," Dumas said.

All victims handle the rape differently, all victims are effected by the rape differently.

major and ROTC lieutenant. "We want to show that there's a positive side to the military too, and raise money for Easter Seals," he said.

There were 150 attempts to conquer the rope walk, for which a 25-cent donation was requested. Some $54.54 was raised in total, cadet major Bob Barrett, a senior political science major, said. The winner of the contest had a time of 54 seconds and was awarded Polly the Parrot, a large red and yellow stuffed animal, by this year's Easter Seals poster child, David Cologowski, 8, of Florence, Mass. who is afflicted with an open spine.

The helicopter has visited four college campuses in the past year and a half in an effort to promote ROTC's 100 percent tuition program, Sergeant first class Wayne Thibault said.

"(The helicopter visit) is our way of passing on information to high schools and colleges. We can talk to students on a one on one basis in an informative way. There's no peer pressure, no atmosphere," Thibault said.

"This has been our best," Thibault said of the day's work, noting the officers also visit every high school in the state for recruitment. There are a lot of interested people here looking for the tuition plan. We want to keep people incollege, not take them out."

Thibault said a Social Security act cutting student benefits several years ago forced many students to leave college.

"We want to put those people back in school," he said. "We want quality people in the Guard."

ROTC members also promoted their programs on campus, particularly one-credit colloquia.

Jobs tight for Continuing Education students at UM

By RISA FREEMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Many students taking courses through the Continuing Education Program at the University of Massachusetts will find it very difficult to find a paying job on campus.

"Most on-campus jobs, whether temporary or part-time, are reserved for full-time students during the academic year," Janise Fitzpatrick, coordinator of the Student Employment office, said.

Fitzpatrick and the staff of the Student Employment Office, located in room 239A Whitmore, report directly to the Financial Aid Office.

"There have been many cuts in financial aid and therefore more students are looking to loans and work," said Fitzpatrick. "Employment on campus is basically a financial resource for students attending the University full-time.

"Continuing Education has traditionally been an open door to the community for those people who are not full-time students," Fitzpatrick said. "It is difficult to keep track of non-full-time students and mark their progress," she added

There are, however, four exeptions to this rule, and students who fall into any of these categories may speak personally with Mrs. Fitzpatrick:

Students who are accepted and active in a degree program carrying at least six credits per semester.

Students active in the teacher preparation course.

Non-degree graduate students who are taking certain preparatory classes in order to be accepted into a program.

Seniors who are completing their undergraduate degree through Continuing Ed and who are in good standing at the University.

There are some students who do not fall into any category and who wish to be employed by the University. These students should also consult Janise Fitzpatrick in the Student Employment Office.

"The main problem stems from approximately 18,000 students looking for on-campus jobs each year and only approximately 5,000 available," said Fitzpatrick.

The Continuing Education Office, the Office of Student Affairs and the Personnel Office referred inquiries to the Student Employment Office.

Undergraduate Student Senate to start search for new Attorney General

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night approved a motion supporting the Legislative rules reform petition, chose members of a committee to begin the selection process for a permanent student attorney general, and allocated funds to help sponsor a conference on activism and social change to be held at the University of Massachusetts.

The Senate unanimously passed the motion supporting the Legislative Rules Reform petition, which, if put on the state ballot in November and supported by voters, "will really change the system" whereby bills are heard in the legislature, said Paul Gosselin, chair of the Public Policy Committee.

The Public Policy Committee files and lobbies for student-interest bills in the legislature, and Gosselin said his committee "has had a lot of problems just getting bills on the floor the way the rules are set up."

Gosselin said power in the legislature is concentrated in the offices of Senate President William M. Bulger and House Speaker Thomas McGee, who are not sympathetic to student concerns. He said the petition, if enacted, will make the legislature more open to proposals such as a bill that would place students on the Board of Regents of Higher Education and the UMass Building Authority.

Public Policy Committee members will be circulating the petitions for signatures on campus and around Amherst, Gosselin said.

The senate also took a step toward resolving a long-standing controversy last night by appointing six members to a committee to begin the attorney general selection process.

Last week the Senate voted to recommend that Student Government Association President Tom Ahern appoint acting Attorney General Dakin Ferris to the position permanently, and one senator said last night that it would be "inconsistent" of the Senate to appoint members to a search committee for a new attorney after that vote.

Ahern pointed out that the previous vote "doesn't hold -- it's only a suggestion from the Senate," and the SGA co-President makes the final decision.

"I have considered (the senate recommendation) very strongly but I feel it's important to go through the search process," Ahern said, adding that Ferris has "as good a chance, and probably a better chance than anyone," to be appointed permanent Attorney General.

In other business last night the Senate voted to grant $500 to help sponsor "The Sixties Speak to the Eighties -- A Conference on Activism and Social Change," to be held here October 22. Speakers will include long-time members of civil rights, womens and student union movements.

Hampshire College expert says New Right is divided

By REBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

A Hampshire College professor said last night that the right wing attacks public education because they believe it is a threat to their ideal of American society.

In the first institute for the Advanced Study of the Humanities event, Sociology professor Allen Hunter presented a lecture entitled, "Why the Right Wing Attacks Higher Education" to a small crowd at Herter Hall.

Hunter said the right wing tries to unite many non-political coalitions, but is fundamentally divided against itself.

"The New Right properly sees that they have enemies out there; what they don't know is that the enemy is within," he said.

The New Right's problem is that it is too intent on promoting capitalism and retaining the current social order, but does not realize the nature of capitalism is an incessant change in the social order, he said.

"Everyday life in a capitalist society substantively eliminates the material conditions to which capitalism was a response," he said.

The right wing has trouble with schools "because of the role that schooling plays in promoting the emergent culture instead of the residual culture," he said.

ANTI-NEW RIGHT — Alan Hunter, a Hampshire College professor, last night warned listeners at Herter Hall that the New Right is a threat to the quality of Higher Education.

He said the difficulty lies in the conflicting hopes parents have for their children, "...they know that for their kid to make it in society he has to move away from them...

"At some deep level the schools have become a Dr. Frankenstein, they have made the monster out of their own kids," he said.

Speaking in general on the right wing, Hunter said, "It's policies are largely a backlog against the movements of the left. They seek to gain control by putting Blacks, women and students back in their place."

He said they tend to be for "flag, faith, and family; that is, they are for patriarchism, patriotism and profits."

Hunter said the right wing has a particular prescription for the reform of schools; "they claim that textbooks undermine patriotism, free enterprise, religion and parental authority.

"They believe that women should be portrayed in the traditional sense instead of saying they have been marginalized and oppressed."

Hunter said you will continually find the New Right arguing that capitalism should be seen as deeply entrenched in Christian principles.

"The New Right says it is okay to have a separation between church and state but that doesn't mean there has to be a separation between God and government. I don't know where they see the difference between the two phrases, " he said.

Hunter said that education is seen as an outpost of the state, "There has been increasing federal intervention in education... In the 1950's the fear of communism was foregrounded."

Then in the 1960's there was the great society compensatory program in response to the civil rights movement, he said.

SGA President Charlene Allen enjoys challenge of office

By SHERYL JEAN
Collegian Correspondent

For Charlene Allen, the job of representing the University of Massachusetts student body is not an easy one, but it is a challenge she enjoys, especially because she is a woman.

Allen, co-president of the Student Government Association, shares her position with Tom Ahern. Allen acts as the students' representative to the Board of Trustees while Ahern acts as the Campus president.

From her first Trustee meeting, Allen knew she was facing tough opposition.

"Right off the back (the Trustees) made some very sexist comments."

Allen said that from what she has seen, the majority of the board members are sexist but, she feels that this show of sexism only makes women face up to who they are and their own feminism.

Allen said the women in the office are very supportive of her, but "it's frustrating that I'm the only woman officer."

Although Allen would never trade-in Ahern because they get along so well, she said it would be nice to see two women co-presidents because, "it nurtures feminism and shows other females what can be done."

Prior to their co-presidency, Allen and Ahern didn't know each other very well. But now, as a team, they rarely come across an issue that they are at odds about.

"Personally she's great, and very strong. I think she's dynamite." said Ahern.

She began her political career during her first year at UMass joining the Third World Caucus. Now, three years later, Allen puts in no less than 40 hours a week, but she is paid for 20 hours.

She wanted to run for president because she "liked the idea of a black woman on the Board of Trustees."

Allen is not certain of her future, but she said she does not want to continue her political career. She said she will continue to be an activist and a feminist.

Women On Campus

As one of only two women on the UMass Board of Trustees, Allen said she must contend with more than just what's on the agenda of the board. The people on the board are generally older, male, traditionalist businessmen , she said.

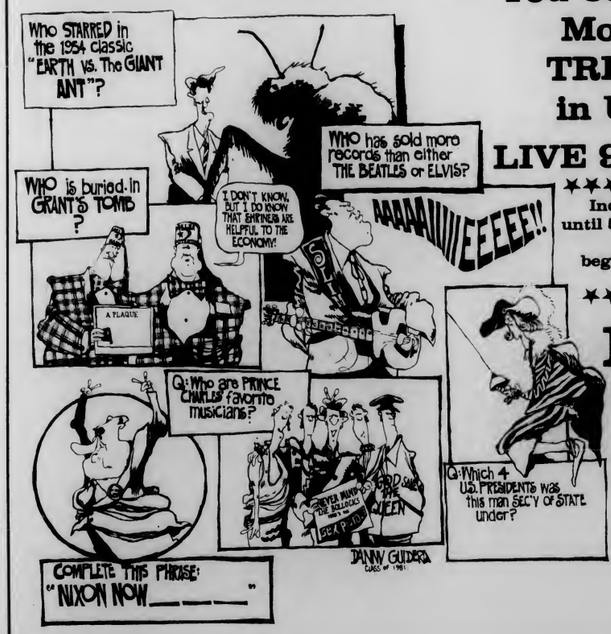
They tend to expect less of her she said because she is a woman, but "it gives her more incentive because it gives her something to prove. So she can show them what she is made of and glow for a while."

PAUMA meeting today; DeNyse to speak

The Professional Association of the University of Massachusetts is scheduled to hold its first meeting of the year at 12:15 p.m. today in Campus Center room 904.

John L. DeNyse, vice chancellor for administration and finance, is scheduled speak on a study involving the classification of campus professional staff, and cost of living and merit raises.

PAUMA represents approximately 850 workers at UMass, and is recognized by the University as a representative body for professional staff.



Memorial Mass will be held for professor

A memorial Mass will be held at 4:30 on Saturday at the Newman Center for William W. Boyer, a civil engineering professor in the School of Engineering who died June 30 at the age of 60. Boyer taught at the University for 29 years, and was a 1968 recipient of the Distinguished Teaching Award.

UMass administrators meet to trade ideas

By JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

Administrative representatives from the Worcester, Amherst, and Boston campuses of the University of Massachusetts met early this week for an administrative conference, at which they exchanged ideas and information.j

Chancellors, vice chancellors, deans, and selected members of the senior administrative staff for the University met Monday and Tuesday at the conference, hosted by UMass President David C. Knapp at the Stouffer's Bedford Glen Hotel in Bedford, Massachusetts.

"We wanted to give people the time to think about things they would not ordinarily think about, and time to talk to people they would not usually get a chance to talk to," Byrne said. "I think we achieved that goal."

According to Dr. Deirdre Ling, vice chancellor of University Affairs and Development at Amherst, this was the first time in several years that such a conference was held.

"It was a good opportunity to get to know senior administration from all three campuses," Ling said. "Some of these people had never seen each other before."

The conference opened Monday night with a dinner and comments by members of the University Board of Trustees and UMass President Knapp.

"The board members got to speak with deans and other administrative people," Byrne said. "This kind of contact does not occur very often."

Tuesday, the only full day of the conference, involved workshops about both enrollment management and development on the three University campuses.

Larry Benedict, associate vice chancellor for Student Affairs at Amherst, Don Babock, associate chancellor at Boston, and Lynn Eckerd, an administrator at the Medical School at Worcester, presided over the Enrollment Management workshop. Jan Napora, director of Institutional Research and Planning for the president's office, moderated the workshop.

The second workshop on development, involved a guest speaker, Richard Ramin, vice president of Development at Cornell University.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Paying their debt to society

Every year it seems the court systems in Massachusetts are going broke. Uncertainty abounds. In 1981, probation officers received no paychecks for several weeks. Public defenders didn't see their paychecks for a long time as well. All this happened in a supposedly civilized and "progressive" northeastern state.

Massachusetts is blessed to have so many legal experts and top notch law schools within its midst. Yet it also has one of the most pathetically maintained state judiciary systems in the nation. Why? Well, for one reason — our blessings may also be our burdens.

It's quite possible that we have too many lawyers and legal experts — particularly in the political arena. It's also quite possible this overload has also caused an overly legalistic society which is gradually being fossilized into inertia by an overbloated industry.

No one should be surprised to find a natural hidebound conservative (not the ideological kind) reluctance by the legal and governmental sectors against new and innovative experiments in the South, particularly Florida. "Why, if the ideas weren't conceived here in the shadow of the Ivy League, there must be something deficient in them." Oh really.

Steven P. Barrett

Let's consider two workable ideas and programs which have been used with success in Florida: Cost of Supervision (COS) payments for probationers and parolees; and public defender liens.

What is wrong with making those who are primarily responsible for the rising cost of our criminal justice system pay back into the system and people who are responsible for their rehabilitation and legal representation?

In Florida, probationers and parolees pay a sliding fee of $10 to $50 each month, depending on the offender's financial ability to pay. This money goes directly back into the state's Department of Correction. Contrast this practice with this state where the money would go into the general fund.

In other words — instead of relying upon the good graces of its legislature — Florida's system at least attempts to pay its own way and maintain fiscal autonomy. Imagine — a probation system totally independent of the purse strings and patronage ropes which have long been the bane of probation services here in Massachusetts. You don't have to be a former state legislator or related to someone "in the system" to become a probation officer in Florida.

Who collects the money? The officers and clerical staffs collect it — and this can be done in addition to providing the other necessary supervisory services — notwithstanding the cries and howls of public employees unions. COS also allows the officers a greater opportunity to monitor their "clients" in a more efficient manner.

Civil rights advocates might find COS another assault on the poor, and downtrodden masses — but many of our civil rights advocates have never dealt with many of society's "victims". So — let them complain. Let them complain to the overwhelming majority of law-abiding taxpayers who are sick and tired of paying their state income taxes to shoulder up the courts' financial burden caused by criminals who, outside of fines, aren't required to pay for the upkeep of their supervision programs.

Oh — there are also safeguards and exceptions. No one in jail or prison is required to pay, and those with medical or educational burdens are granted waivers in Florida. See, it's not that harsh. Stereotypes aside, Floridians are not all that "regressive", or "red-necky" when it comes to the provision and maintainance of their criminal justice system.

As for the public defenders' liens, they are paid by those on probation or parole. This money is also collected either by the probation/parole officer, or mailed directly to the county public defender's office. Sometimes, the public defender's lien is also waived like COS depending on the offender's financial situation.

Our correctional and legal systems are somewhat different, but not so vastly different to prevent these programs from enjoying success here. Politics should not prevent these programs from starting — but given the nature of Massachusetts politics — it most likely will.

Gov. Dukakis deserves credit for recently signing a law designed to make the offenders compensate their victims. Our adoption of Florida's COS and Public Defenders' Liens would also give law-abiding taxpayers more confidence in their justice system.

Surely, I don't expect these programs to allow the Bay State to join Florida and other states which don't have personal income taxes, (it'd be nice though) but we should give these ideas a serious look since they would help reduce our deficits and the need for higher and additional taxes.

I hope the in-bred conservatism which I referred to earlier can be set aside by those in the political and legal sectors so that COS and Public Defender Liens will be put into law, and given a fair chance to succeed.

The Attorney General shuffle

To the Editor,

Step right up, folks. The curtain has risen and it's time once again for the Attorney General shuffle. I say enough time and money has been wasted "searching" for an attorney general. In the past five years, nine persons have drifted in and out of the office.

The SGA, believe it or not, is there to serve the needs of its constituency, the student body. Its leadership should workout any differences in private and should present a united front. Instead, it has become the laughingstock of faculty, administration and students.

Dakin Ferris, the latest appointee to the position of Acting Attorney General, brings to his office a refreshing combination of competency, hard work, knowledge of the legal system, and in addition, he is a proponent of student rights, women's rights, and affirmative action. These are qualities that any search committee would grab in a minute. After years of stagnating under the dictates of attorney generals who in my opinion could or would not do their job, the office has been transformed by Dakin into a real resource for the students.

I strongly urge the student leadership on both sides of the issue to swallow their pride, work out this mess, and do their jobs, which is to serve the students.

How to ruin a good thing

To the Editor,

On Thursday September 15 I attended a lecture concerning Central America, and I have never been so ashamed of being considered part of an audience that behaved so rudely to Colonel Dickens. The many interruptions that occurred were uncalled for. The callousness of the few made it impossible to hear and understand both sides of the issue. This is why many negotations are considered futile on any level.

Commuter Collective woes

To the Editor,

With the deadline for undergraduate student senate nominations due this Friday afternoon, I feel it is important to write this letter. I address it to all UMass undergraduate students living in off-campus housing.

If you have ever considered participating in student government, I urge you to take out nomination papers for the position of senator. Each year the commuters are allotted 35 senate positions, yet each year little more than half of these slots are filled through the elective process. The remainder are filled through "interim" appointments by the Commuter Collective. I make this plea for senate nominations because I feel the Commuter Collective does a grave injustice to its constituency.

Students who want to become senators after the election must go through a screening process by the Collective. If the student does not adhere to the political outlook of the Commuter Collective, (Left-wing Radical) the student is not appointed. Instead we get senators appointed who are more concerned with spending our SATF money on radical special interest events, organizations, conferences, etc. than attending to university issues that are important to the average student. In the end it's the average student who gets the shaft.

The whole issue of Commuter Collective appointments must eventually be addressed, but we have to start somewhere. Please go to the fourth floor of the Student Union Building today and take out nomination papers. And who knows - maybe someday we'll have a student government that really represents the students of this campus.

To the Editor,

Daniel Webster said in 1814 that a proposal by the Secretary of War to Congress for military conscription to invade Canada foully libeled the constitution. He further equated giving congress the power to draft men with allowing them to "create a dictator."

If you don't agree with a draft you have to sign with the selective service if you want your aid. What about the person who doesn't agree with the draft and has enough money in his family so that he doesn't have to sign? Is this fair? Does it tell you something about how this country is being run?

It sounds to me like Reagan's trickle down theory. The sentiments of the plutocracy have slowly worked their way down to you. They want their war. All of these troop movements with America's nose in everyone's business. The trend toward militaristic T.V. shows, and advertisements. All of the sword rattling over Russia and the sham of Ronald Reagan and his twisted peace philosophy. These are the signs. They want their war and they need piles of young dead bodies so they can turn a healthy profit.

Profit from arms sales to foreign countries must be dwindling. No market is infinite. Profit from war. That is what peace through strength is all about.

Save the last dance for us

To the Editor,

I have just been informed of the possibility of a budget cut that will involve the elimination of Joi Gresham's Afro-American Dance classes from the curriculum at UMass. As an undergraduate major in the Theatre Department at Smith College, I am writing you to express my support for the continuation of this particular program at UMass as well as other programs in the arts and minority studies.

As a student of the arts, I am well aware of the need for a cross-cultural background in performance techniques and philosophies. I have studied privately with Joi Gresham and have found her technique of dance to be one that integrates several aspects of movement; a traditional African approach, modern dance practice and anatomical awareness. Her courses epitomize the kind of educational options a state university should make available to its students.

Should you set a precedent by cutting the funds for classes of this kind, you would be committing a great injustice against students of dance and theatre as well as all Third World and liberal arts students in the Five College system. I implore you to set a positive example for other state universities in this country by keeping alive the rich heritage of expressive forms which are rooted in African and other Third World cultures. By cancelling courses such as those taught by Joi Gresham, you will only continue a dangerous trend which threatens the meaning of the words, "liberal arts".

The Rage over the Cage

It is our belief that the University did not adequately investigate other sources of funding...A student based fee is being chosen not because it is the best method, but because it is the most expedient.

Once again, the University administration is about to ignore student priorities in the determination of student fees. The most recent example of this lack of concern for our needs and interests is a proposed fee to renovate the Curry Hicks Cage, the 50 year old home court of the Minutemen and Minutewomen. Good basketball teams are an important part of UMass, but our administration is carrying the notion of their importance to a ridiculous extreme. They contend that if we don't have first class teams and a first class home court, our image as a reputable institution will suffer. UMass students have a different view.

In a survey conducted by the Rents and Fees Committee/Team of the Student Government Association, 1982, 69 percent of the undergraduates who participated in the survey disagreed or strongly disagreed with the statement "The status of the basketball team reflects the status of our University." 60 percent of the respondents also opposed the proposed $20 yearly fee which the administration intends to charge us for the renovations. What these students didn't know last November is that UMass undergraduates will pay this fee every year for 20 to 25 years. The actual renovations will take a mere 11 months and will cost approximately 2.3 million dollars.

Why, then, are students here expected to pay so much money for such a long period of time? The answer is this: In order to charge us a fee for the renovations, the Cage must be turned over to the UMass Building Authority. (That's right — the same people who are responsible for construction of the leaky Campus Center and the Parking Garage with the cracked beams). Once the building has been turned over to UMBA, bonds will be issued to pay for the project. The lifespan of these bonds is about 25 years, and the bonds are what we'll be paying for. Another interesting point to consider is that the Cage is presently over 50 years old. It is not surprising for a 50 year old building to need structural repairs. Once the Cage is turned over to the Building Authority, the Building Authority becomes responsible for any structural repairs. Guess where the money for that will come from? That's right — UMass undergrads.

As members of the SGA Rents and Fees Committee, we, along with other students, have to be very concerned with any increases in student fees. In a time of draconian cutbacks in student financial aid and when other fees may be substantially increased we are very suspicious of a plan that would transfer the burden of the cost of renovations from the State to students. This is precisely what will happen if the Cage is turned over to the Building Authority. We are not opposed to the renovation of this building (although we do wonder where the University's priorities lie — they don't seem as concerned about repairing the Tower Library or fixing the corroded steampipes in Southwest): only that students are being forced to bear this burden without adequate input.

It is our belief that the University did not adequately investigate other sources of funding, such as alumni donations. A student based fee is being chosen not because it is the best method, but because it is the most expedient. Simple calculations will reveal that $20 times 20 years times approximately 20,000 undergraduates comes to far more than 2.3 million dollars, and that we will be getting far less than what we pay for in this "deal".

Cindy Lehmbeck, Sylvia Van Dyke, and Peter Lui are members of the SGA Rents & Fees Committee

Beginning a new life

Ronda Applebaum

Since this is my first year in college this past summer I received a lot of questions concerning how I felt about moving out. My parents' friends would ask me, "Are you nervous about going to college?," "Are you excited about going to college?," and of course, "Are you anxious about all of the new responsibilities you are going to have?" My friends would have other questions, "Aren't you going to miss having your own bedroom?," "Aren't you going to miss the use of a color T.V.?" and "Aren't you going to be homesick?" However, I didn't seem to think about most of those questions. I have to admit I was kind of sick of my high school and was really looking forward to going to a new school and making new friends.

However, my feelings started to change a week before I left for UMass. Oh, I still wanted to come here and make new friends but I did begin to ask myself some questions. The big ones in my mind were, if I would get along alright without my family and my good friends by my side, if I could live without the comforts of home and if I could ever make do without my closest childhood friend, who happens to be my dog, "Jacky". But even though I was really curious about college life I was not depressed...that is, until I pulled the plug out from my alarm clock on the morning I left for UMass.

For so many years my life at home revolved around my alarm clock. It told me when to get up, when it was time to do my homework and when it was time to go to sleep. It came to symbolize my active life at home. When I pulled its plug out of the wall I felt that my life at home stopped. It was no longer necessary for me to use the clock because I was leaving.

On my ride up to UMass I felt displaced. I knew that my home town was no longer the place for me because most of my friends had already gone off to college and my locker in my high school had been replaced by some freshman. But just the same, I did not feel that UMass was my home either. After all, I did not know what my room would be like, what my Profs. would be like and who my friends would be. After unpacking after I arrived here I plugged in my alarm clock and guess what? My feeling of displacement disappeared. My clock started ticking and so did I. My new life at UMass had begun.

Orchard Hill activities

I never dreamed that when I moved from my relatively small home town, I would end up living in another one here on the UMass campus. Accordingly, I was amazed at the social services and entertainment facilities available on Orchard Hill. The area functions as a small community and offers its own unique services. I am not referring to the nightly movies or rap sessions available in the lobbies. I am speaking of the specialized organizations here, such as the Bowl Beautification Committee.

Becky Lockwood

This group obviously is dedicated to raising the level of cultural awareness in Orchard Hill. With their inexhaustable supply of toilet paper, bottles and discarded underwear, they tirelessly design abstract art sculptures that are placed at strategic points in the area. Thus, we are blessed to be able to repeatedly admire the "lingerie tree" with its infinite variety of men and women's undergarments hung carefully from branches. Another masterpiece is "Toilet Paper Festivity" which involves several different bushes, pathways and trees carefully decorated with the paper. We, on The Hill, are grateful for these intellectually stimulating works of art.

Another group dedicated to the intellect is The Hill Orators who can be heard (from nearly anywhere inside the four dorms) several weekends a semester. They express their views and invite reply — often by insulting the listening audience into response — from the speaking platforms commonly referred to here as balconies. We are able to enjoy a wide variety of speakers and simultaneously receive an education in liberated rhetoric (or how to expand your cursing vocabulary). These rallies often draw a large crowd of both listeners and participants, and as the atmosphere is likely to be rowdy, these rallies are aptly titled "Bowl Wars".

The most outstanding service offered on the Hill, however, is the Information Help Line (or O. HEL!). This info help line is quite similar to the phone system of the college, but fortunately, these lines are never busy and someone is always willing to lend a helping ear. Our info help line is set up much like the news room of any paper. Area events are recorded within seconds of their occurence and then relayed to similar stations on the Hill. So, ours is a network operation where information is quickly recorded and passed on. The stories are always lively and I'm sure this service is very valuable to those poor bored folk who need such stories to brighten up their lives. Indeed, it is comforting to know that if I kiss someone on the second floor, the seventh floor will know of this important event within seconds of its occurence.

So, if you miss the social services of your home town, just apply to Orchard Hill where all of the above organizations are readily available. I'm sure you'll be as impressed with them as I am.

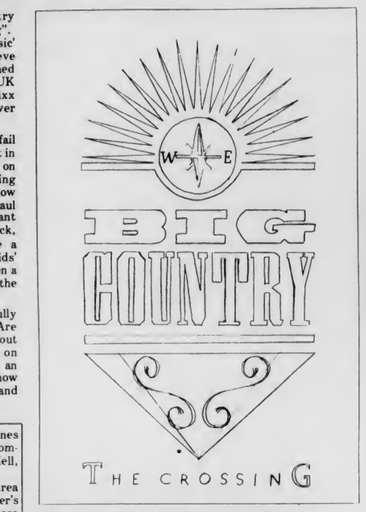
The Crossing: Big Country is a big letdown.

by GERARD COSLOY
Collegian Correspondent



Bad news —— The Powers That Be have mumbled. Corpulent publications like Rolling Stone, The NY Times, even (sound effects of loud coughing) the Valley Advocate all agree; "Big Country are hipper'n'hell". Obvious hype thus noted, let's try some historical perspective on "Big Country" (their name feels better in quotations). We'll have to begin with the Skids, a late '70's Scottish post—punk combo whose curious blend of Celtic lyricism and Verlaine—ish harmonics made for some pretty OK cultural clashing. The Skids split in 1982 when singer/lyricist/asshole Richard Jobson decided that he was "an artist", leaving to pursue a career as a second rate actor and a third rate poet (predictably enough, Jobson has returned with the band Armoury Show, also featuring former Banshees & Magazine guitarist John McGeoch). Unfortunately for us all, Skids guitarist Stuart Adamson didn't fancy himself a painter —— he's quickly resurfaced as the frontman for Big Country, this month's Great Bland Hope of the (deservedly) sagging record industry and (quickly) aging rock press.

Throwing together one of the clumsiest formats in recent memory, Big Country are a cluttered mesh of Scottish folk imagery (you know they wear checkered shirts), Springsteen melodrama (nah, no talk about cars, just "pained" moans), U2/guitar hero bombbast...all adding up to a sever indictment of UK pop's sorry state.

Spineless friends have told me not to take Big Country "too seriously". I won't. They claim they're "uplifting". They're not. The Crossing, for all its 1983 'new music' ringing guitars, whiplash drums and filtered vocals (Steve Lillywhite continuing his track record as the most cliched producer in music), is yet another piece in the new UK pomp—rock puzzle; soulless units like Bauhaus, the Fixx or Tears For Fears, ranking production values over songwriting, a perverted sense of style over substance.

Despite their supposed "positive" nature, Big Country fail to convince (eg., "the sun will shine in winter" —— not in W.Mass). Adamson's whiny Springsteen imitation on "Chance", is laughable at best ——— clearly after playing second prat to Dick Jobson for so many years, he's now anxious to elevate himself to the status of Bono or Paul Weller on his first album (I guess that's what they meant by 'uplifting'). The crossing's one only interesting track, the hit—bound "In A Big Country", is in essence a U2—soundalike with a guitar riff lifted from the Skids' "Working For the Yankee Dollar" (which would've been a more fitting title for this album) —— watch the satin—jacket clad AOR programmers drool.

I'll call it the scam of the year, but even that doesn't fully communicate what a shoddy record The Crossing is. Are American teenagers really expected to give a shit about Scottish folk culture? If I wanna be uplifted, I'll put on New Order or Marvin Gaye (or better yet, I take an elevator). If I wanna be baffled, I try to figure out how someone could find any vibrancy in a record as stoic and safe as The Crossing.

Greetings Umies & welcome back to yet another musically exciting semester (well, maybe if we pray a lot . . .) here in happy valley. Not much to let you in on as far as on-campus concerts go this semester - so far UPC has signed just one really big (read: not in the Blue Wall) act: Eddie Grant. He'll appear in the Fine Arts Center, and I'll pass more info on to you just as soon as I'm told.

Don't sulk just yet, though, 'cause WMUA and Hanger One are presenting a Solid Sound Dance Series, which will feature the likes of the Violent Femmes and the November Group.

Enough long range forecasts - on to the weekend at hand. Tonight's best bet musically are the ever-popular Heroes In Trouble at the Blue Wall. With a cover of only $.50, there's no excuse to miss this band - they're without a doubt one of the hottest local acts.

Tomorrow promises pretty sparse fare, especially since it's the "official" start of the weekend. The Blue Wall will feature Maurice Raymond and the Lonely Boys (the Blushing Brides under a different name). It beats me why these guys still want to pretend to be The Rolling Stones after all these years, especially now that Mick and company always look like death's just around the corner. Hell, I suppose everybody's gotta make a buck. . .

Boston's Midnight Traveller will make their first area appearance at Hanger One Friday night, and the Hanger's management must really have doubts about how well these guys will go over, because they're offering $1 off cover with a valid UMass ID, PLUS free drafts from 8-9 PLUS 2 fer 1s from 9-10.

Meg Christian will be at Smith College tomorrow night (call 584-2637 for all the details), and Heroes in Trouble will be at Sheehans in Northampton.

Things will definitely pick up Saturday, though, as UPCs fine Blues in the Blue Wall series continues with Cub Coda (w/The Wildcat) and the O'Halloran Blues Band. Hanger One's management regains its senses Saturday night as The November Group Limbo Race, and Heroes in Trouble (they certainly get around, don't they?) arrive. This is a not-to-be-missed show.

Also on Saturday, Sleepy La Beef will appear at Hampshire College. Call Hampshire College for details.

Sunday could be a great day for folk enthusiasts with cars: the Harvest Moon Folk Festival will take place from noon until 7 p.m. at the Highlands Ski Area in Tilton N.H. Scheduled acts include Gordon Lightfoot, John Prine and Tom Rush, and peak foliage is predicted. For directions or just general info, call Triple-C Productions at (617) 451-6307.

John Prine is just one of the many artists to be featured in the Harvest Moon Folk Festival 12-7 p.m. on Sunday, Sept. 25 at the Highlands Ski Area in Tilton, N.H.

Fred Frith makes noise in Vermont

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

Fred Frith banged and hawed and sawed and pounded all in time. All in time. All banged. All sawed. All timed sawing all banging all pounded time. All All All All saw. All saw. All saw all. Saw all.

And David Moss played the balloon. And talked. And played the drums (a little bit). Hemmed and hawed and played the drums (a little bit). He hemmed. He hawed. He talked.

Did I understand it? Was it understandable? Was there anything to understand? Was it all improvised? On and off. Did they know what they were doing? Were they on and off? On and off. Bang bang. Who is David Moss. Banger. He's a banger. Was he listening to Frith. On, was Frith listening, and, was it listenable, off.

Standing on my head I say, "I think I would have seen them separately." Or maybe just the guy who told Frith he'd gone dressed as Fred Frith to a party and that was why he should sign his album. I told him I wanted a self-portrait. The noise got to a level where it was no longer possible to intellectualize it, only react emotionally. I suppose this is good. On and off.

Fred Frith: Two-bridge table guitars, acoustic guitar (for humor), bodyless electric guitars, cymbol, various plates (metal), beans, mallets, and other percussive devices (which hit each other)

David Moss: Drums, Balloons, microphone, upsidedown muffin Tins, tape, music box, and many, many percussive devices.

Moss vocalized so fast it seemed like he must have known what he was doing but I missed the point. Frith I could follow. Moss does have some good sounds in his bag of tricks. In and out. Is there perspective in emotion?

Australia narrows gap

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) - Challenger Australia II overcame a potentially fatal premature start and staved off elimination in the America's Cup with an easy victory Wednesday over a limping U.S. defender Liberty.

The 1 minute 47-second margin cut Liberty's lead to 3-2 in a best-of-seven series made unpredictable by equipment problems on both boats and a baffling departure from form.

The sixth race on Rhode Island Sound is scheduled for Thursday, the first time since the Americans won 4-2 in 1934 that a foreign boat has won twice. In 25 defenses since the schooner America first won the Cup in 1851, the challenger has never won and no series for sailing's oldest trophy has gone beyond six races.

Wednesday, the Americans experienced equipment trouble, just as the Australians had in losing the first two races last week.

Skipper Dennis Conner had a mast problem before the start and had to send a chase boat back to the dock for replacement parts.

It took about 45 minutes to make repairs, crewmen scrambling aloft, and when the gun sounded signaling 10 minutes until the start, Liberty still hadn't hoisted her jib, the small, triangular sail held on a stay from the bow to the mast.

Once under way, the U.S. boat appeared to be heeling more than the challenger, leaning over under wind pressure, with a pronounced bending of the mast toward the aft. Conner appeared to be getting less advantage from the 18-knot winds and lumpy, 2-to 4-foot seas in which he had won the first two races.

Australia II skipper John Bertrand, who misjudged the start in Tuesday's pivotal loss, did it again Wednesday.

He crossed the line too soon and had to circle back and start over. By the time he got there again, Liberty was 37 seconds ahead, a huge advantage and the fourth time in five races Conner had won the start.

Collegian's NFL predictions

The fourth week of the N.F.L. season is upon us and the fearless writers from the Collegian sports staff are willing to put their necks on the line and predict what will happen this weekend in pro football.

The games (for those who don't know all the abbreviations) are Chicago at Baltimore, Houston at Buffalo, Cincinnati at Tampa Bay, Cleveland at San Diego, LA Raiders at Denver, Kansas City at Miami, New England at Pittsburgh, LA Rams at NY Jets, Washington at Seattle, Atlanta at San Francisco, New Orleans at Dallas, Detroit at Minnesota, St. Louis at Philadelphia and Green Bay at the NY Giants on Monday night.

The Collegian writers are Bill Shea, Gerry deSimas, Kevin Deluca, Tony Betros and Scott Hood. We hope to make this a weekly event.

Minuteman soccer fires blanks, UNH wins 1-0

By TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

Well, at least they didn't tie.

After coming off two tough ties against Boston University and Southern Connecticut, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team was hoping that they would have an easy time of it against the New Hampshire Wildcats.

With a tournament in Cornell coming up and an October of homefilled games, the Minutemen were vying to gain a little momentum. All that hoping and vying went for naught as New Hampshire put a clamp on UMass' offense and held on for a slim 1-0 victory.

UMass, ranked fifth in New England, went up against an upset-minded New Hampshire squad, unranked in the AP New England poll. The Wildcats jumped right out of the starting blocks and on the second shot of the game, Kevin Reusch broke through right down the middle and fired a shot past goalie Don Donahue, about 10 yards away.

The stunned Minutemen saw themselves down 1-0 before they could have a cup of coffee, and therefore decided to pick up the pace a little.

The pace was rather frantic throughout the entire first half, and because of this, neither side was able to dominate or have (real) scoring opportunities. As the whistle blew, UMass was still down 1—0, having been outshot 10-8.

UMass, needing an offensive spark, took to the pitch in the second half and did start to take control of the game. The second half featured a more physical style of play as the referees decided to let the play go a little. Few penalties were called, but alas, it could not help the Minutemen in their "Search for the Holy Goal." The Minutemen outshot the Wildcats 15-6 but just could not put the ball in the net.

Donahue stopped nine shots for the Minutemen and Wildcat goalie, Adam Chidekel, stopped five in registering the shutout. Tom Uschok and Kayvan Khatami sparked UMass up front both put the pressure on Chidekel but, once again, a superior job by the opponents defense led to the Minutemen's demise.

The next task for the Minutemen is the Cornell Classic this weekend. UMass, Cornell, Brooklyn College, and Cleveland State will be competing. A higher-caliber offense seems to be the number one problem for UMass. Hopefully, after this weekend, the problem will be a solution.

Netwomen "blown" away; Vermont takes the 5-4 win

By RICHARD BRUNELLI
Collegian Correspondent

Prior to yesterday's tennis match University of Massachusetts women's tennis coach Pat Stewart observed "that the wind will be blowing on both sides of the net." The excessive wind seemed to plague her team as they dropped a 5-4 decision to the University of Vermont.

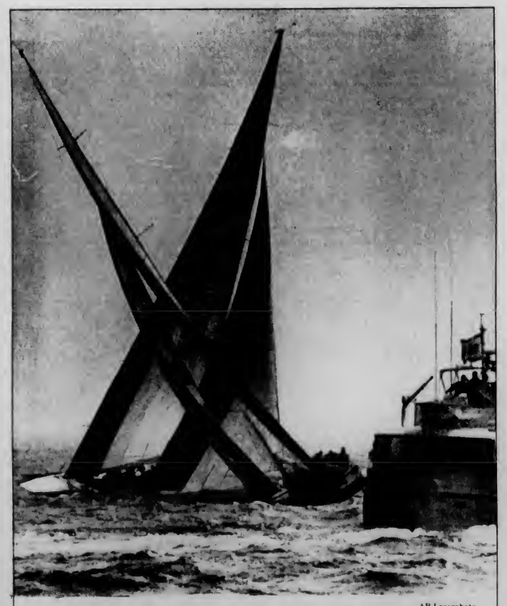
Although the match was a loss, Stewart was pleased. "Considering the number of good players out with injuries we're playing pretty well," she said.

The Minutewomen got their victories from number one singles player Elizabeth Sullivan, number two singles player Anne Tauger, number six singles player Karen Orlowski, and the number one doubles team of Jillian Nesgos and Marie Leary.

The strong and steady play of Tauger proved true as she dispatched her opponent 6-2, 6-2. Tauger, only a freshman, looks to be a mainstay of the team for the next few years.

Karen Orlowski displayed her staying power in three set battle of attrition. She downed Catamount Lyndall Heyar by the score of 7-5, 4-6, 6-4.

The first doubles team of Jillian Nesgos and Marie Leary scored another point for the cause with a 6-2, 3-6, 6-4 victory. This hard fought win should allay some of the concern voiced by Coach Stewart about the doubles teams' unfamiliarity with each other's play.



But the match of the day took place at the first singles slot where Elizabeth Sullivan wound up on top 6-3, 6-1. Sullivan plays tennis with two unquestionable commodities: grace and power. Strong, crisp volleying (compliments to pros like Martina Navritilova) seems to be comfortably residing in the strokes of Sullivan.

"She's playing extremely well. Her strokes have a greater consistency and her net game is strong," said Stewart. "I certainly would have liked a win, but we played well. The wins will come," Stewart said. Her team now stands at 1-2 and have plenty of time to turn things around. The next match is on September 26 at 3:30 against Springfield. The match is at home and will be played at the NOPE tennis courts.

Wildcats tame Minuteman tennis; roar to 7-2 victory

By SCOTT HOOD

DURHAM. N.H. — In the world of sport, no three words are more important to a coach than "total team effort." Receive it and your chances for victory range from "good to we'll kick their - - -." Don't receive it and your fate could be similar to the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team, who yesterday dropped a 7-2 decision to the University of New Hampshire. The Minutemen received outstanding performances from their top three singles players but, suffered from lackluster play from the four, five, and six positions, who all lost in straight sets.

Wayne Peterson, at number one, and Earl Small (2) squeezed out the lone victories for UMass. Peterson defeated Steve Noble in a tight match 7-6, 6-4, while Small rebounded to beat T.J. Hyman 4-6, 6-1, 6-4. The big point in that match came in the ninth game of the third set. With the score tied in games (4-4) and points in the game (3-3), Small followed his service return by coming to the net and knocking home a volley for the winning point.

"It was a big point," said UMass coach Bob Szlosek. "It takes a lot of courage to come to the net like that and volley on a crucial point."

Dave Singer turned in a respectable performance at three singles despite losing 6-2, 2-6, 6-3 to Shaun Hassett. Unfortunately, it was quite a different story for the other singles. Jim Gelinas (4), Marc Weinstein (5) and Andy Pazmany (6) all lost in straight sets as did the three doubles teams (Peterson-Pazmany, Small-Singer, Gelinas-Weinstein).

"Peterson, Small, and Singer all played impressively. Although Singer lost, he's been playing the kind of tennis necessary to win," said Szlosek. "We had real problems at four, five, and six singles. We're not competitive. They're playing tentative, almost frightened tennis."

"UNH was just about what I expected. They are not a bad team, but very respectable."

The Minutemen's next match will be Saturday afternoon on the Boyden Courts vs Ivy League rival Dartmouth. The Minutemen's record is 0-2.

UMass fiscal 1983-84 budget not finalized

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

An additional interim budget will have to be allocated to the University of Massachusetts at Amherst if the school's fiscal 1983-84 budget is not finalized by the end of next week, Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance John L. DeNyse said Thursday.

DeNyse, speaking at this semester's first senate meeting of the Professional Association of UMass-Amherst (Pauma), called the present state budget system "ludicrous" and said it was unknown whether the budget would be agreed upon before the three month interim budget, allocated in June, runs out the end of this month.

"The sheer absence of dollars is going to force someone to make a decision," he said. "But every week, this is the week we're going to have a resolution. The president (of UMass, David C. Knapp) still did not know Wednesday."

DeNyse said if the resolution os not made by Sept. 30, "we'll get another interim allocation of something--someone will make the money available to allow us to continue to operate."

Meanwhile, the delay has caused problems for new programs at the University, DeNyse said.

"If they don't know the budget, they can't start employing people," he said. "If there are going to be new programs implemented in September, there has to be some indication in February or March authorizing staffing of that program for the next semester. They should do the budget in June or July to reerruit quality faculty and graduate students.

DeNyse said the University budget is "caught in a crossfire" between the Massachusetts Legislature, which recommended a $114.9 million budget and the Board of Regents of Higher Education, who have agreed to a $113.8 million sum. Currently, the budget dispute concerns UMass and Southeastern Massachusetts University, whose funding was cut by $900,000, in the original budget recommendation to the regents.

"I have a guarded optimism that the campus will come out very well in this budget," DeNyse said. "But we're catching an awful lot of flack from other institutions (because of the delay.) The other school budgets have all been held up.

"The governor has now said he can't tolerate this kind of process again in another year. "This is the worst I've ever seen it," he added.

Greg Dillard, legislative aide to Sen. James Collins, D-Amherst, said he could not give a budget estimate for UMass and did not know when an agreement would be reached.

The senator is "in daily contact" with other members of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, he said, and wants the issue "resolved soon." The senate also plans to discuss a reform of the higher education budget process, he said.

Two EWC employees leave jobs reluctantly, will fight

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

After six months of dispute, two employees of the Everywoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts will leave their jobs today, but claim they will continue to fight for their positions.

"We are not going to drop things because we feel that whatever happens to us can happen to anyone else in our (work) category. It ought to be a test case," said one of the employees, Mary Wentworth, coordinator of the Poor Women's Task Force at the center.

Ruth Weekes-Washington, the Center's director, said it is unfair for the women to continue their dispute. "She's had her due process. She chose to settle this problem through the grievance process, and since the decision may not have come out in her favor, she says it is an unfair process."

Wentworth and Malika Jones, co-coordinators of the Third World Women's Task Force filed grievances after being notified by Weekes-Washington their contracts would be terminated. A performance evaluation made by Special Assistant to the Vice Chancellor, Robert Welch, claimed they were not fulfilling their job descriptions.

They also filed grievances against the director of the Everywoman's Center, Ruth Weekes-Washington, because they said they were not given six months notice before being told their contracts would end in June.

In the early stages of the grievance procedure, Jim Coopee, assistant personnel director said only full-time permanent employees must be given six month's notice and that Wentworth and Jones did not fall into that category.

In a letter to Wentworth dated June 20, Chancellor Joseph Duffey said, "My conclusion is that there were no substantial violations of University policies or procedures sufficient to warrant the upholding of the grievance."

Weekes-Washington said at that time the decisions to release the two employees was justified, despite the women's allegations.

"I don't really like the idea of her dragging us (the center) through the mud again. There's a whole part she's leaving out, the fact that they went through the grievance procedure, and were given a decision," she said.

Wentworth said their contract was extended three months until today, at the advice of a Professional Staff Appeals Committee at the University which said the women were improperly notified.

Wentworth said she still isn't satisfied with the solution.

MASSCON games convention to be held

By GREG FEIST
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Strategy Games Club will host the fifth annual MASSCON games convention this weekend in the Campus Center.

MASSCON will feature group competitions as well as single players competition in games such as Dungeons and Dragons, chess, Risk, backgammon, ace of aces and various computer games. "The idea behind the convention is to let people interested in these games compete against others of the same level of competition," said Dean Johnson, president of the Strategy Games Club.

Registration for the convention will begin at 8 a.m. Saturday in Campus Center in room 163. The cost is $3 per day or $5 for both days.

Johnson said although he expects that more than 250 people from Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York and other states around the country will attend, the main goal of the year's MASSCON has been to draw as many UMass students as possible to the convention.

"We have a terrible problem getting UMass students," Johnson said. "What I would really like to see would be 200 UMass students (come to the convention)," he said.

In the past only 10 to 15 percent of the people at the convention have been students from the University, Johnson said.

Limits will be set on the number of contestants in each game. Some of the more popular games will fill up before others, Johnson said. For instance, Dungeons and Dragons will be limited to 58 players, and registration for that game "will probably be full by 8:30 a.m. Saturday, but a game like Diplomacy will be open until two minutes before competition begins," he said.

Any novice or expert may register to compete in the game of his or her choice, and each event is coded from one to three according to level of competency, Johnson said. He explained that level one requires little or no previous knowledge of rules of the game, while level two requires some knowledge, and level three requires a sound familiarity with the rules.

Approximately $250 worth of games and gift certificates, as well as plaques, will be awarded to winners, Johnson said.

Soviet plywood cargo turned away

BOSTON (AP) - A Soviet freighter headed to Boston after it was turned away from New York by longshoremen refusing to unload its plywood cargo was diverted to Canada, a shipping company spokesman said Thursday.

The Novomirorod was scheduled to come to Boston, but a man at the midtown Boston office of the importer, Rice Unruh Co., pointed to a schedule that noted the ship was "diverted to Canada."

The man declined to identify himself or indicate where the vessel was.

Outside his seventh floor office, about 10 protesters showed up at noon carrying signs reading, "Soviets Are Murderers" and "Boycott Soviet Products." They were demonstrating against the purchase of Soviet goods in light of the downing of the Korean Air Lines flight 007.

"We are trying to make a point, asking that the U.S. not continue to get materials from the Soviet Union," said Artistids Lambergs, a native of Latvia and chairman of the Memorial Service Committee who headed a candlelight protest two weeks ago at Faneuil Hall.

"There is certainly enough plywood in the United States to satisfy the needs of America without having to buy it from the Soviet Union," he said.

An official of a Boston longshoreman's union local had said before that workers would unload the vessel if it reached Boston, but that if it didn't the cargo would be sent to Canada and eventually trucked to Boston.

Soviet delegate denies allegation

WASHINGTON (AP) - The State Department said Thursday comments by a Soviet official confirm some of what the United States has been saying all along about the Soviet downing of the South Korean jetliner.

Viktor Linnyk, a Soviet delegate attending a conference in Scotland, said Wednesday the Soviet pilot would not have shot down the Korean plane if he had known it was a commercial flight.

State Department spokesman John Hughes said Linnyk's comment "confirms what is now obvious to us all: that the Soviet Union shot down an unarmed civilian airliner without having made a serious effort to identify the nature of the aircraft or to communicate with its pilots."

He said, however, that Linnyk, in his statements to the British Broadcasting Corp., continued to press the "preposterous" allegation that the Korean flight was on a U.S.-sponsored espionage mission.

Watt denounced for insensitivity

WASHINGTON (AP) - As five Senate Republicans called for James Watt's resignation, the interior secretary apologized to President Reagan today for referring to members of an advisory commission as a black, a woman, "two Jews and a cripple."

"I have made a mistake," Watt wrote Reagan in an unsought letter.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Watt had not offered to resign.

On Capitol Hill, Watt was denounced on the Senate floor in the strongest outburst yet from members of his own party.

One Republican said Watt's comments showed a "panorama... of bigotry and hate." Another said Watt was an embarrassment to Reagan and a third called on Reagan to find someone who could better serve the country.

The calls for Watt's resignation came following Watt's speech Wednesday to a business group in which he said a coal-leasing advisory commission he appointed included a black, a woman, "two Jews and a cripple."

Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., called Watt "an embarrassment to the president who appointed him, an embarrassment to the party to which I proudly belong and an embarrassment to the country."

Reagan is wrong says missile study

BOSTON (AP) - A report released by MIT says the presumed "window of vulnerability" that has dominated recent U.S. strategic thinking in the arms race with the Soviet Union is based on oversimplified information.

According to the 143-page paper, entitled "Ballistic Missile Guidance and Technical Uncertainties of Countersilo Attacks," current assumptions that the Soviets can wipe out the U.S. land-based missile force don't take into account the "considerable technical uncertainties in planning such a strike."

The report also indicates there are so many unknowns connected with launching a nuclear attack with missiles 6,000 miles apart that no one can predict the results.

"We document the fact that uncertainties are there and they cannot go away by technical means - uncertaintiest hat we cannot control. The term 'unknown unknowns' that we use in physics applies here," Kosta Tsipsis, the MIT physics department's principal research scientist, said in a telephone interview Thursday.

Tsipsis, the co-director of the department's Program in Science and Technology for International Security begun in 1977, prepared the report with Matthew G. Bunn. Bunn is in his fifth year of study toward a master's degree in political science and a bachelor's in physics at MIT.

A simpler version of the paper is scheduled for publication in the November issue of Scientific American, Tsipsis said.

Druse positions bombed by French

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - At least four French jet fighters bombed Druse positions in the mountains overlooking Beirut today in the first air attack by any member of the multinational peacekeeping force since it was deployed more than a year ago. U.S. warships shelled Druse positions earlier in the day.

Western military sources said the Super Etendard fighter jets took off on the bombing runs from the carrier Foch after six French peacekeepers were wounded in two separate attacks in west Beirut. A Druse rocket also blew up the main ammunition dump of the Italian peacekeeping contingent.

The French contingent of the multinational peacekeeping force went on alert, scrambling into sandbagged bunkers and foxholes as the jets from the Foch streaked through the skies over Beirut.

Dukakis appoints first female comptroller

BOSTON - Gov. Michael S. Dukakis appointed Ellen O'Connor, fiscal officer at the Department of Social Services, as state comptroller Thursday, the first woman to hold the powerful position.

Miss O'Connor, 37, is a Lynn native presently living in Boston. She succeeds Myer A. Shockett, 65, of Newton who has worked in the office 35 years and was named to the top post by former Gov. Edward J. King.

The appointment, announced at a Statehouse news conference, was hailed by Lynn's top politicians - House Speaker Thomas W. McGee and Sen. Walter A. Boverini.

Salem Harbor being dumped on, says EPA

BOSTON - The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency filed a lawsuit Thursday against a North Shore sewer district to end the dumping of sludge laced with heavy metals into Salem Harbor.

For more than three years, the South Essex Sewerage District has been discharging untreated sewage into the ocean in violation of the U.S. Clean Water Act, federal officials charged.

U.S. Attorney William F. Weld and EPA Regional Administrator Michael Deland told reporters that the government is seeking an injunction in U.S. District Court in Boston to stop those discharges. EPA wants the sewage system to dump its sludge on land rather than flush it into Salem Harbor.

James A. Vitale, executive director of the South Essex Sewerage District, said Thursday afternoon that he had not been informed of the suit and that the district was already complying with administrative orders issued earlier by Deland.

"The overriding factor in all this is, we don't have the money," he said. Vitale estimated that it would cost about $7.8 million annually to haul the system's sludge to a landfill in New York that will accept it. Alternatively, he said it would cost about $3.5 million to repair the facility so it could resume incinerating waste.

Autopsy contradicts police, says lawyer

BOSTON - The lawyer for a 19-year-old man shot dead by police said Thursday that autopsy results contradict a police report that officers fired only in self-defense and show a possibility the victim also was beaten.

"One thing is for sure. It did not happen the way law enforcement officials say it happened," said Henry Owens, lawyer for the family of Eligha Pate, who was killed Sept. 7.

Police contend that Pate was shot while sitting behind the steering wheel in Boston after he tried to run officers down in his car, which they said had been reported stolen.

But Owens and Dr. Luke Tedeschi, chief of pathology at Framingham Union Hospital who was present at the autopsy, said it showed that at least four of the bullets hit Pate while he was outside the car.

And, Owens said, "laboratory tests are now under way to confirm the presence of hemorrhage found at several points on Pate's body.

"Speak and Spell" used in Africa

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

With American technology and a grant from the U.S. agency for International Development, a University of Massachusetts professor is making learning a little easier for young school children in Lesotho, Africa.

Associate professor of education David Kinsey, who works with the UMass Electronic Aids for Literacy Project (EALP), is studying the use of "Speak and Spell," "Speak and Read," and "Speak and Math" learning aids with fourth and fifth graders in five schools and one group of adults.

"We want to find out if these aids are effective in supplementing education in developing countries," Kinsey said. "The field study will last 12 weeks, ending by December, and will involve weekly tests and visits."

The study will have many benefits, such as "reactivating interest in literacy in developing countries and contributing to graduate research," Kinsey said.

Texas Instruments Inc. has donated more than $24,000 in electronic learning aids for the program, including three TI99 computers and more than 150 of the small aids such as "Speak and Spell" and "Speak and Math."

Small learning aids were previously tested in Gambia as supplements for short term adult education, EALP staff assistant Steve Anzolone said. "Teachers were very supportive and the results were encouraging," he said.

The current study is not a traditional one and is integrated with people from many institutions, including the Lesotho Distance Teaching Center and the National Teacher Training College, he said.

Sex is not the only thing, says Josh in presentation

By JOSH MEYER
Collegian Staff

If a person needs sex to express love in a relationship, then the relationship is not what it is supposed to be, said Josh Mcdowell last night in a lecture at the University of Massachusetts.

"Lots of people are having sex today, but very few people are making love," McDowell said, as he explained his three-point plan for freedom of the soul and happiness, in the second of presentations, called "Maximum Sex."

Nearly 600 students listened to McDowell talk about sex, love, marriage and God, and how they related to the way students were living their lives.

"There must be a oneness in three dimensions of your life and fulfilled sex life. First you have the physical part. Then you have the second part, which some black people seem to comprehend the most, which is soul, or the psychology part of it, where your attitudes become one," McDowell said, as he walked back and forth across the stage.

"And third, you have the spiritual part, where you and your lover become one in spirit," he said.

"Sex is a three-dimensional thing, and if any one of these is missing, you will have a watered-down, diluted relationship," McDowell said.

People feel pressured into having sex, and they have not learned to control their sexual urges and channel them into the productive task of building a permanent relationship, he said.

"The best thing to do is to treat women on a date the same way you would want a man to treat the woman you might marry," McDowell said.

Audience response to McDowell was mostly favorable and his humorous way of presenting examples of his ideas kept people laughing. Crowd members were asked to write a short response to the lecture and leave their name and address if they wanted to.

Later McDowell said, "This school is by far one of the more liberal schools around, but definitely not one of the more open-minded ones," adding that "Christians (and the like) have everything going against them when they come to this campus."

One student said, "I thought he was sexist, but that some of his ideas on love and sex were very good and useful to some extent," said Tracey McGarry.

"I thought the lecture was right on," said Phil Klausmeyer, an art history major. "It was just what UMass needs to hear."

Josh McDowell met with both respect and cynicism

By LORENA NOZZOLILLO
Collegian Correspondent

"I was very wrong about Josh (McDowell)," said Steve Krebs, an assistant head of residence at Cashin Dormitory. "I found him informative and enlightening. He has increased my awareness and understanding of Christianity."

Just a few nights ago, however, Steve posted this message for his floormates: "JOSH IS COMING, BE CAREFUL, Josh is a charismatic Billy Graham-type speaker who represents the Campus Crusade for Christ (CCC). He uses guilt as a manipulative technique; pokes at weaknesses and claims to give strength," the sign stated.

Since seeing Josh last Wednesday night, Steve has now ripped down his poster, apologized about his comments regarding the Campus Crusade for Christ, and has become an ardent Josh McDowell fan, all in one night.

However, not everyone was as overwhelmed with the energetic speaker as Krebs was.

"He relies so heavily on facts and figures, that he eliminates the need for pure faith. In a sense you could even say that he's being sacrilegious," said a transfer student from Indiana who wishes to remain nameless. She saw McDowell at the last school she attended and said she found him "presumptuous."

"He acts as if he's some sort of pseudo god. In reality I don't think Josh speaks for Christianity--I think he speaks for Josh McDowell and his own personal religion," she said.

The student said she feels there is little difference between McDowell and any cult leader, for they both "prey on people's insecurities and are using religion for their own capitalistic gains."

A member of Campus Crusade for Christ, the organization sponsoring McDowell, feels that he is a respected authority on Jesus Christ, who bases his statements on proven facts.

Brian Kelley, lecture series co-ordinator for the CCC, said he is strongly opposed to negative views on either McDowell or his organization.

"We are not a cult. We are a recognized student organization whose main goal is to tell people about Christ," he said. "I think (Josh) is worth listening to. He uses facts to lead you to a logical conclusion."

Civil rights violated by BOG, claim vendors

Personal vendettas and a violation of civil rights were the accusations made against the University of Massachusetts Board of Governors (BOG) by sisters Susan and Laura Gamer for denial of a Vendor's Identification (vendor permit) needed to sell flowers on the Campus Center Concourse.

"It's a violation of our civil rights because we have a right to sell and I am a full-time student," Laura Gamer said. "They have no reason to deny us a permit to sell."

The Gamers said they began to sell flowers three years ago on the CC Concourse, which became a successful source of revenue. This was not the first time problems have arisen with obtaining or keeping a permit, they said.

"Problems began a year ago when the Gamers began harrassing the other vendors who also sold flowers, which included reports of verbal threats," Kim Cohan, a former BOG member who was involved in last year's problem said. "There were also complaints from other vendors who saw the Gamers transferring flowers with another vendor who they were associated with whenever one of them ran out."

BOG Chairperson Michael Reilly said because of this evidence and other circumstances the BOG suspended Susan Gamer's permit last fall on grounds of violating Vendor Table Space Policy and Procedures.

"At the beginning of the semester Susan and Laura Gamer, along with their associate (Ross Mackay) came and applied for separate permits to sell flowers but were denied separate permits on the grounds that they are classified as a consortium," Reilly said. A consortium is a business alliance which is defined as a joint effort by more than one person working together for sales of similar goods, according to a policy clause, Reilly said. The Gamers were offered a permit on consortium grounds but refused it.

"We refused the consortium because we are individual vendors," the Gamers said.

Reilly said the consortium clause was developed last year to put a stop to vendors who may try to monopolize a product or item. "Individual permits would allow the Gamers to monopolize the sale of flowers whereas a consortium permit limits the number of days for which they are able to sell," he said.

"The BOG has no personal vendettas against the Gamers and by no means are their civil rights being violated. We are just following the policies," Reilly said.

Denial of Susan and Laura Gamer's request for separate permits was scheduled to undergo review by the BOG Thursday night. A meeting with the sisters will take place next week, Reilly said.

BOG plans TOC specials

By RALPH ROBERTS
Collegian Correspondent

Students on the meal plan will receive substantial savings on Wednesday evenings beginning next month at the Top of the Campus (TOC) Restaurant at the University of Massachusetts, said the chairmen of the Board of Governors (BOG) last night at the first BOG meeting of the semester.

Mike Riley said students with a two-day advance reservation will receive $3 and a 15 percent student discount off their meal price at the TOC.

Riley said he hoped the program would "catch on fast" and that it was based chiefly on a "break even" idea for the TOC. Students will be able to eat London Broil, Baked Boston Scrod, Chicken Kiev, on Wednesday nights at a discount. "Maybe if the idea sells, guys will start bringing their dates there," Riley said.

In other BOG business, while there were not enough members present to have quorum, coordinators of three BOG branches officially began their terms of office. Newly appointed coordinators Robert Abele, the Vender Cerfification Coordinator, Paul Agranat, the Space and Economic Developement Coordinator, and Julie Slavitt, of the Governor's Program Council, all expressed eagerness for the coming year.

"I'm really looking forward to an exciting year," Slavitt said as she discussed a few of her ideas including an enormous Halloween party somewhere in the Campus Center.

While no motions could be passed last night, Riley mentioned some of the probems of the Campus Center. Riley said there were many leaks in the building and the deck area outside could cost "anywhere between three to six million dollars to fix," he said.

BOG Director William M. Harris expressed his desire to keep a great amount of student participation at the Campus Center while increasing faculty help on various programs. Harris also said he felt that, "with Halloween creeping up very quickly, the BOG should begin working on a plan that would direct students to a safe and happy Halloween on campus. The main issue is that students want to be seen and want to see others on Halloween. If we can bring the people together in a safe environment, we can possibly have a great time," Harris said.

The BOG is a student body which in conjunction with the Campus Center administration runs the Campus Center and many of its various branches.

Senate to hold forum

By SEAN CASEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Forum Speaker program will present Dr. Leon Tabah, director of the United Nations Population Division on Oct. 23, Graduate Student Senate President Sanjuv Dugal announced last night.

"Dr. Tabah will speak on the main substantive issues before the United Nations Conference on Population to be held in Mexico City in 1984," Dugal said at the senate meeting.

The forum will be held in Memorial Hall at 7 p.m. and will be followed be a wine and cheese gathering, Dugal said.

Although graduate forums in the past have been by invitation only, the senate is currently investigating making the forum open to a larger audience, he said.

"We've kept forums in the past very small and select, but there has been some skepticism about the way we do it, so we will look into other ways," Dugal said.

Dugal also announced that Ray Rogers, a labor consultant who organized the J.P. Stevens strike in the late 70's will speak at a forum to be held in November.

Also at last night's meeting, Greg Graham and David Waxeter, both senate officers and steering committee members of the newly-formed Graduate Teachers oranization, said the organization is continuing with its organizing and membership drive. Wazeter and Graham also offered to have steering commmittee members go to individual departments to give presentations and answer questions about the organization.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Rape - the worst word around

Civility. Oh, how that word rings in my ears. Just three short years ago I watched, I listened, I believed.

When then Chancellor Henry Koffler proclaimed it The Year Towards Civility, the word meant so much, it promised the world, but three years later it means very little.

Civility is not one of those words which has a deep rooted meaning. It is very simple, very direct. It means politeness, courtesy, respect.

Rita Murphy

On Sunday night, around 7:30, a female was raped near Butterfield dormitory. She was stripped of her dignity, her self-esteem, her faith in people. It was all taken away in a moment of violence, in am moment of a criminal act so grotesque, so barbaric, so repulsive it goes beyond any sense of humanity, decency or justice any person could have.

How could someone rape another human being?

Is it so wrong of me to think there are good people, good decent, caring, civil people who care about one another?

There are good people out there. There are people like Lenny Sputnick, a man who one rainy afternoon in Washington jumped into the Potomac River risking his own life to save that of a total stranger.

There are other good people out there. People who give $5 when all they can afford is $1. People who smiled at other people just to brighten up their day.

There are good, decent, caring people out there.

There are also bad people. People who hurt, destroy; people who rape.

Rape is a difficult word to hear or to say. It is the most violent word in the English language, or in any language.

It is a word which nothing good can be said about. A word which emits anger, hate, and above all, fear.

I am afraid of the word rape. I'm afraid for myself, for my mother, for my sisters, for the woman down the hall whose name I don't even know.

I don't like living in fear. I shouldn't have to.

Three years ago, I believed Henry Koffler's message of civility. I believed him when he said if we just tried a little harder, gave a little more of ourselves, we could achieve civility in our life time.

I believed him. Was I so naive?

When I walk around campus I can see, I can feel, I can experience civility. I see people talking, laughing, caring. I see birds, I see the swans, I see and I believe.

When I walk into the building, I see the pamphlets, the posters, Women beware, What to do if you are raped, Protect yourself-don't walk alone at night.

Last year in a bar in New Bedford, Mass, a woman was raped. Later on, it was charged that men in the bar not only didn't help, but "cheered the rapist on".

This past summer a child in Boston was raped, beaten, and murdered.

The list goes on and on and on and on.

Men abusing women, people abusing people. Hate, anger, violence, all of the above.

The Russians are shooting down planes full of innocent people. Lebanon is at war with Israel. Israel is at war with Lebanon. Central America is at war with Central America.

People are killing other people. Men, women, and children are being murdered.

The world is full of fear.

I'm still watching, I'm still listening, I'm still believing, but it's getting harder every day.

James Watt does it again

As President Reagan would say it, "Well, there be goes again."

Just months after receiving a bullet-in-the-foot award by the President for his extemporaneously stupid remarks about how the Beach Boys attract the "wrong element," our favorite Bozo, James Watt, has done it again.

Josh Meyer

In a televised address to members of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, Watt defended his choice of members of a commission as being diverse, and therefore acceptable. In describing the five-person Commission placed in charge of reviewing his controversial coal-leasing program, Watt said, "I have a black, I have a woman, two Jews and a cripple." While he never formally (or informally) apologized for this outrageous remark, he said that his choice of words were "unfortunate."

If there is not a law or a substantial means of censure for this, there certainly should be.

Not that this is the first time Watt has said or done something that should be illegal; in fact he's done it quite often. As the Secretary of the Interior, he is responsible for the welfare of 735,000 Native Americans living on public reservations, which enjoy the lowest standard of living of anyone in the United States, by an incredibly large margin. Yet Watt went public as saying that Indian reservations are an example of how "socialism" is a failure.

Watt said, "I have a black, I have a woman, two Jews and a cripple." While he never formally (or informally) apologized for this outrageous remark, he said that his choice of words were "unfortunate."

If there is not a law or a substantial means of censure for this, there certainly should be.

As the person in charge of 32.7 percent of the whole of the United States, Watt has the authority to "define, regulate and shape the relationship between man and nature" any way he pleases.(Sports Illustrated, 9/26/83) He has said that he believes in the imminent second-coming of the Lord, and the subsequent separation of the blessed and the damned. He believes that until that time we should use all of the resources we were given to the fullest extent. Since he thinks we only have about twenty to thirty years to go, he must use care in finding the most expedient way of "exploiting our public resources for the benefit of private enterprise." He's proud of this philosophy, as evidenced by his recent attempts to lease our coal deposits to the lowest bidders as fast as possible.

He lost, two days ago, when the Republican-controlled Senate voted 76 to 18 for stopping his leasing program for 90 days until this newly-formed commission has delivered a report on the subject. (The Commission with a black, a woman, two Jews and a cripple.)

But Watt will still try to get his way, and he'll probably succeed, just as he has in the past on issues such as the increased industrial development of our Natural Parks.

James Watt has incredible power and authority both in Washington and nationwide. He has proven time and again that his actions and intentions go directly against the best interests of the citizens who comprise the constituency of his office.

Watt responded to charges that his remarks were ill-advised given the Administration's poor standing with minorities by saying that "It shows you don't have a sense of humor if you can't laugh at yourself . . .(and that)If you can't joke about these things, you shouldn't be in Washington."

But some feel differently, and I am among them. No Jim, it seems your logic has been twisted again. The ability to "joke about these things" just shows why you should not be in Washington.

Letters

Commuter Responds

To the Editor,

The Commuter Area Government would like to thank Vince Reppert from Southwest for his concern for commuter senators. Vince's letter in yesterday's Collegian raised the concern that the "Commuter Collective does a grave injustice to its constituency" by only appointing senators who fit in with our "left-wing Radical" ideology.

We are the agency to fill vacancies (When they exist) for the commuter seats on the Senate. Since there are elections in October, we will have input on who is appointed after the elections (these will be a few students who decided mid-semester that they would like to join). We have, and will, appoint anyone who is interested as well as serious about making a committment to the Senate ade its concerns, that is, student control over student monies. We won't appoint people whose goal it is to trash the SGA for their own personal objectives. So far this semester, we have approved all eight applicants who have come to us, wishing to have voting power before the elections of October.

Appointing senator seats is one of many functions we must perform as the representative of off-campus students. It is not in our interest to try to screen out the e' 'wrong" people for the Senate according to personal politics. In addition, the stereotype that Vincent uses for the office is unjustified as can be seen through the many diverse events we sponsor. The most political event we had scheduled for the semester (the El-Salvador Teach-In) represented several viewpoints and political standpoints on the issue. Since Vince has never spoken with us, it is somewhat understandable that he holds misconceptions.

Just to clarify for those who like to jump to conclusions before verifying: in the past three months we have reconstituted the PVTA board with the aim of extending the Campus Shuttle to include Stop and Shop and Price Chopper, we have worked on getting car insurance rebates for those who commute regularly by PVTA; we have begun fundraising for childcare centers at the university and we have sponsored a beach trip--to name a few. We try to offer as many services to our diverse constituents as possible. Before criticizing us or other student agencies, I urge Vincent and other concerned students to find out what's going on before they write articles that are incorrect and unfair. We do not try to push a particular political view on anyone and we welcome suggestions and criticisms.

On one point we agree with Vincent: please do go to the fourth floor of the Student union and take out nomination papers for the Senate office. The more student participation, the better off we'll all be!

What's Right is Right

Artist Jim Roche lectures on his art and the future of modernism

By ED BEEN
Collegian Staff

An audience of 80 was treated to a two-hour slide show and lecture covering the last 15 years of the work of noted artist Jim Roche last night in Herter Hall.

Roche, a graduate art professor at Florida State University, took the audience through his "Funk Art" movement of the late 1960's, to his installation pieces, to his most recent constructivist works.

All of Roche's work is very physical, and many, larger than life. His early ceramic pieces included 8 foot tall "mama snakes," and when he turned to drawing in 1970, he produced giant 5' by 40' works on mylar done with markers he made from cotton swabs.

"I started with basic childlike symbols, and worked on getting them to flow," Roche said.

Once he got his symbols to flow, Roche turned to sculpture. His first "installation" work was made with welded steel shapes, and exhibited at the Dallas Museum of Fine Arts in 1972. In the years to come his installation pieces became larger and more intense. The last one he produced was the ecology flavored outdoor piece in 1975 that measured 90' by 125' and was displayed in Florida's Art Park.

From the mid 70's, Roche showed examples of his human conditions packets, consisting of memorabilia from the 60's and 70's, and some of his performance art pieces, the stressing of a point through the use of photographs.

Some of Roche's more recent works include the beautiful "Meeting At The Crossroads," a 7—element piece that links modern human suffering with that of Jesus Christ's, and the humorous "In Case Of Vampire, Break Glass."

Roche is the first guest speaker in the University Art Council's fall Visiting Artists Lecture Series, and is promoting his latest exhibition entitled, What's Right is Right: What's Left is Wrong. This most recent piece consists of 13 sets of crosses, one large one flanked by two smaller ones to symbolize Jesus and the two thieves being crucified. On each cross are religious slogans Roche has collected over his career while listening to gospel music and preachers like Jimmy Swaggart.

The exhibit will be displayed at the University Gallery (located on the pond side of the FAC) from September 24 to October 28.

Roche comes across as a sensitive religious man, deeply concerned with the environment and the well being of the United States. In the late 70's, Roche said he felt "America was at a low point." However, works produced at this time, "Greed," "Crush," and "Bomb Out," still show a glimmer of hope, by using smooth lines, and sharp imagery.

His present day views are also optimistic, and his outlook seems to be maturing, as is his art work.

"It is an incredible time in art," he said. "Narratives haven't peaked, and Modernism still has a long future."

The Neats: not just another VU cover band

THE NEATS (Ace of Hearts)
The Neats

By GERARD COSLOY
Collegian Correspondent

It's more than coincidence that most every major American band this year has ended up echoing the Velvet Underground in one way or another, either thru cover versions and vocal inflection (REM), or an overall sound that occassionally borders on plagerism, intended or not (Violent Femmes, Dream Syndicate, True West). Boston's Neats thankfully fall into catagory No. 1. Guitar patterns that carry the Velvets' raw crunch, but aren't afraid to leap off on a journey of their own--like on the 6-minute "Another Broken Dream," where the twin guitar propulsion of Eric Martin and Phil Caruso weave themselves into a furious tangle. Imagine an unholy mix of Echo & The Bunnymen and Creedence Clearwater Revival, and you'll have a general idea.

Creedence might be a better focal point for where the Neats are coming from--Eric Martin sounds more like John Fogerty than he does Lou Reed (the Neats still cover "Fortunate Son" in their live set). Today's new folk, I'd guess. Like REM, the Neats construct rich harmonies around traditionalist themes (betrayl, faith, loss). But where REM place heavy emphasis on Michael Stipe's cryptic vocals and Peter Buck's unrestrained rhytmic shifts (the pop Husker Du?), the Neats are the Guitar Wall; mountains being built on single chords, and released (though not always spiritual) afforded through repitition (the pop Fall? the punk Dylan?).

Tremendously more varied and balanced than their 1982 EP, The Monkey's Head In the Corner Of The Room, The Neats ranks as one of the year's top American LP's. Somebody wake me up when it's time for the Donovan revival. REM and the Neats will both be appearing at the Living Room in Providence, RI, on October 8th and 9th, and at the Metro in Boston on October 20th.

Trailers

By Andy Gordon

Comedies cleaned up at the box office this summer, and the studios are hoping to duplicated that success this winter. Though the season traditionally showcases more serious films, this Christmas we'll get D.C. Cab, which stars Mr. T, Gary Busey and Max Gail as members of a looney cab company. Grandmaster Flash did the soundtrack and second-time director Joel Schumacher [Incredible Shrinking Woman] directed. Another second-time director, Amy Heckerling [Fast Times at Ridgemont High] will take-off on old gangster flicks with Johnny Dangerously, with Michael Keaton playing the title role. A bunch of college seniors on a white-water rafting excursion is the setting for Rafts, starring Tim Matheson. Only in Rio finds Joe Bologna and Michael Caine on vacation with their teenage daughters. And Woody Allen has another film on the way already, titled Broadway Danny Rose. Purported to be an honest to goodness comedy, the flick co-stars Mia Farrow.

Sheriff Justice (Jackie Gleason) and his son, Junior (Mike Henry) have a bit of car trouble in Smokey and the Bandit, Part 3.

Young doctors in love, or what? Richard Gere plays Dr. Eduardo Plarr in The Honorary Consul, also starring Michael Caine and Elpidia Carrillo (who was great in The Border) as the woman they each fall in love with. Timothy Hutton, meanwhile, plays Dr. Stanly Shepherd in Iceman, co-starring Lindsay Crouse and John Lone as a 20,000 year old frozen caveman. Hutton (now on screen in Daniel) will also appear in The Falcon and The Snowman, with his Taps co-star Sean Penn.

Barry Levinson (Diner) will adapt and direct Bernad Malamud's The Natural for HBO. Robert Redford plays the title role in this baseball drama, for which camera genius Garrett Brown (he invented the steadicam) created a "flying" camera. Also for cable, though Canadian, is the comedy-mystery The Fez, starring Roger Guetta, Bonnie Derosa and Anne Renehan. Guetta plays the title role, a rich Saudi Arabian who goes to an American Island to visit relatives. With his side kick Moustapha (Zead Hamzeh) always at his side, he ends up being followed by everyone from suspicious Islanders to the C.I.A. to a mysterious lesbian coven. The Canadian production was filmed on location in Nantucket.

Local Best Bets: Good flicks around this weekend. Bogey doublebill through Tuesday at the Amherst Cinema. Tender Mercies is back by popular demand to the Hampshire 4 and the Mountain Farms has Betrayal, the backwards love triangle starring Ben Kingsley, and a new film called Eddie and the Cruisers, which looks promising. Mad Max is on campus tonight. It's also at the Hampshire 4 at midnight tonight and tomorrow but me, I'd rather see it for free on Spotlight (tomorrow night at 8). Smokey and the Bandit Part 3, starring Jackie Gleason, also opens today at the Mountain Farms. Don't say I didn't warn you.

TRAILERS Trivia: Ken levinson correctly answered last week's question., Director John Landis humorously alludes to his Animal House in Twilight Zone: The Movie during the Vietnam sequence of his episode. After "American soldiers panic and fire numerous rounds of smmo," one soldier says, "I knew we shouldn't have shot Lieutenant Niedermeier." Animal House fans may remember that ROTC leader Doug Neidermeier was purported to have been shot by his own troops in Vietnam. This week's question: what do these names have in common: Dennis Taylor, Ron Johnson, Charles Jefferson, Linda Barrett. The first correct answer will receive an 8x10 glossy of Lance Henriksen (Nightmares) holding a dismembered hand and screaming his head off.

Speakers highlight academics at BCP freshman meeting

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

"This is the beginning of a long journey toward a new goal," Maria Voorhees, Academic advisor at the Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP) said Wednesday night as she addressed an audience of freshmen and upperclassmen at BCP's Freshmen Mandatory Meeting at the University of Massachusetts.

The meeting, which opened with a welcome address by BCP Director Benjamin Rodriguez, was intended to "expose the freshmen class to social sciences," Rodriguez said.

The "exposure" was given by Dr. Raquel Bauman, Assistant dean of students from UMass Medical School at Worcester and Barbara Spence, coordinator of the high school medical recruitment program at UMass-Worcester.

UMass-Amherst faculty and staff also participated. Brian O'Connor, pre-med advisor of the zoology department and chairman of the pre-med advisory commission; Dwight Tavada, academic coordinator minority engineering program (MEP), Steve Blane, staff psychologist of the career development and counseling program, and Robert Teixeira, a University student and member of the Student Government Association and Third Workd Caucus also spoke at the meeting.

Each speaker provided an overview of what is offered in their agencies emphasizing academic importance and time management.

Bauman's presentation encouraged freshmen to consider medicine as a profession. In an interview, Bauman said not enough hispanics enteres the medical profession due to financial reasons as well as poor counseling in high school.

On the other hand, Tavada said more Hispanics are interested in engineering. Tavada also stressed how fortunate these students were for having a program such as the MEP and called the program "a successful way of graduating from engineering."

The MEP provides students with tutors, study space, book loand, as well as job placement. There's also a two week summer program for freshmen giving them a "head start" on college. According to Tada, the dey to success in engineering is to "utilize classmates and other engineering students."

You are responsible for building a better society," Voorhees said. "You must work together to obtain this goal." Blane said,"We represent a fantastic resource for you. You don't need to have a problem. Only questions. If we don't have answers, we'll help you find it."

An informal gathering to meet BCP classmates was held after the meeting.

Alumni to lead Office of Third World Affairs

By Yadira Betances
Collegian Staff

Sherwood Thompson, a not so unfamiliar face to the University of Massachusetts, has joined its Third World community as director of the Office of Third World Affairs.

Thompson, a native of Greenville, S.C. graduated from UMass in the thirdCommittee for the Collegiate Education for Blacks and Other Minorities (CCEBMS) class with degrees in Afro-American studies and public health. As an undergraduate, he served as a student news broadeaster and a campus reporter for the Black Mass Communications Project (BMCP); a photographer for Drum Magazine; a campus organizer for Afri-kam and as the second editor of the Collegian Black Affairs department.

Thompson's early goals in life are a predominant factor in his job as director of the Office of Third World Affairs (OTWA).

A strong believer in "love, peace and unity," Thompson wants to contribute his knowledge to motivate and encourage youths to excel in their desires and goals in life. He also feels a "sense of purpose and hope" for those who have departed.

As OTWA's director, he also wants to establish a lance of communication with Third World student organizations, work closely with them and disseminate information about the Third World Caucus to encourage and recruit students' participation in extracurriculum activities. Thompson wants the OTWA to be "a clearing house for information on campus."

Other goals Thompson said he wishes to pursue are to organize and sponsor more student leadership conferences on campus, build a comprehensive library on Third World people's affairs, publish a monthly newsletter, conduct a eries of fundraising drives, serve as a referral agency to students and offer education for the Third World community by having distinguished visitors.

Sympathetic to women's struggles, Thompson said he hopes to organize an energetic coalition with women's groups to encourage women to take active roles in the University.

"Power is the eventuality of freedom. You use it, you don't talk about it," he said.

According to Thompson, today there is "a shift from enrichment programs and cultural activities to more popular commercial activities." Seeing this decay, he will encourage Third World organizations to get involved in these areas, he said.

Collegian photo by Ann Lamery

"We must develop new ideas, new systems to excel to higher ground," he said. "Education is the doorway to freedom, the elevator of success."

Hypercurricula

"Hypercurricula," a listing of events held at the University of Massachusetts and surrounding area, is published daily in the Collegian. Events are listed only on the day they are taking place. Announcements must be submitted on "Hypercurricula" forms available in the Collegian offices, 113 Campus Center, and returned to the office by 3 p.m. the Friday before the event. All submissions should be written in a similar style as they appear in the paper.

"Hypercurricula" notices not submitted on the standard form and not submitted by the Friday before the week the event will take place will not be run. Due to space limitations, the Collegian cannot guarantee printing of all "Hypercurricula" notices. Priority will be given to UMass organizations.

Women's soccer travels to tourney

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

It will be a rough and tumble weekend for the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team and their defense. After all, the 1983 edition of the Minutewoman is going to live and die by their defense.

"This weekend, our defense has to be numero uno to survive," said head coach Kalekeni Banda. "As long as we don't let them score, I'll be happy."

It will be tough. UMass will be participating in the Cortland State Tournament of Champions. Some of the top teams in women's soccer will be there. Among them Central Florida, UConn, University of California-Berkley, and UMass.

"Every team will be very strong," said Banda. "We belong there and we'll have a good chance to win all of our games if we play well."

Playing well means a great effort by the five UMass defensive backs. The Minutewomen play with three Halfbacks and only two fowards. The offense will come, reasons Banda.

The team's major fault may be in their lack of depth. The team only dresses 14 players and three goalies. Banda will be happy to get out of the tourney with no injuries.

UMass will play at least three games. They will face George Washington at 9:30 a.m. on Saturday and will play UCLA-Berkley at 4 p.m. the same day. UMass will then face Central Florida, who eliminated UMass in the quarterfinals of the last year NCAA's at 9:30 a.m. Sunday Morning. And if UMass qualifies, they will play in the championship game at 4 p.m.

"We're going to have to play from our heart," said Banda, "And with some good defense."

Spikers busy, busy

By ED CUNNINGHAM
COLLEGIAN
CORRESPONDENT

This coming weekend promises to be a busy one for the University of Massachusetts volleyball team, well, Saturday at least.

The team is headed for Central Conneticut to participate in their 12 team tournament. The most difficult part of this tournament is that it begins and ends on Saturday. "That means we play seven matches in one day. That is a lot," stated head coach Elaine Sortino.

UMass begins the tournament with a succesion of matches in the pool play. UMass must face Bryant College, Northeastern University, Sacred Heart, C.W. Post and the host team Central Conn. All of these matches consist of a best 2 out of three.

The semis and finals will be played by the top two teams from each pool. If UMass (7-1) can hold out Sortino expects to see some tough competition from New Haven and Springfield.

"I am optimistic. We have been playing real well, and we have had two good practices this week. If we play a little better than our last match (against Lowell) it should be a good weekend," Sortino said confidently.

Golf places fifth

By TOM SCOLLINS
Collegian Correspondent

"You can't blame the wind, everyone had to play in it," claimed University of Massachusetts men's golf coach Ed Vlach. He was referring to the Minuteman's fifth place finish in a six team match at URI on Wednesday.

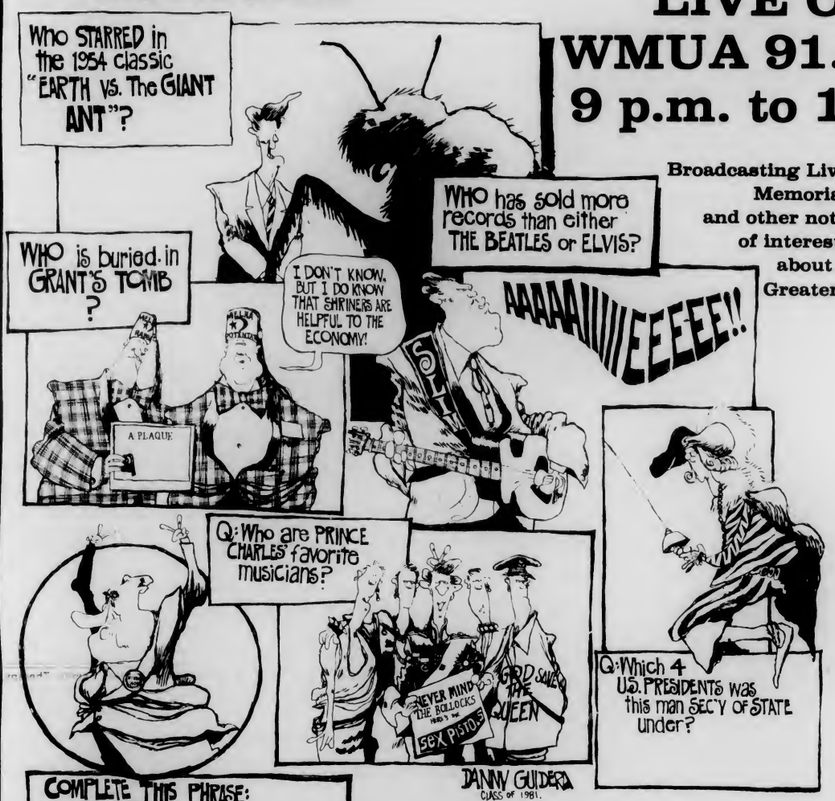
The wind had such an effect that only five of thirty golfers broke eighty.

"The wind was so strong that I hit an 8-iron 190 yards," senior John Couig said, "and you had to play into it, too."

UMass, who played without Tyler Shearer-low medalist at Army Invitational earlier this month, was led by freshman James Ryan of Springfield, who shot an 81. Sophomore Al Vorce and Couig shot 82 and 83, respectively. Brian Fitzgerald, usually a strong player, had an off day shooting 88, as did Scott Simmons.

Vlach was disappointed that URI changed the number of players from seven to five.

Ladies run to URI



By M.E. MURRAY

The University of Massachusetts women's cross-country team will join a host of other squads from around New England as the University of Rhode Island hosts their annual invitational meet tomorrow.

Coach Julie LaFreniere will be resting two of the top UMass runners, Eileen Kelly and Dana Mikesell, in anticipation of the Rutgers Invitational October 1.

"Eileen and Dana will be among the top five UMass runners this year," said LaFreniere. "We will be running a full squad Saturday bhut we are really aiming for our October meets."

Minutemen hope to make Crimson red

Fuller, Tracy spearhead UMass defensive effort

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

The young University of Massachusetts football team faces its third tough opponent in as many weeks this Saturday as they travel to Boston to play the Harvard Crimson at 1:30 p.m.

For UMass, the Harvard game is their last chance, following losses to Toledo and Holy Cross, to get a win under their belt before entering Yankee Conference play versus the University of Rhode Island next Saturday. The Crimson will be a stiff test for the Minuteman's solid defense and shaky offense.

Last week, Harvard opened its season with a convincing 43-14 win over Columbia. Senior quarter back Armond "Chuck" Colombo and junior running back Mark Vignali combined to lead a balanced Crimson attack which accumulated 438 total yards-274 on the ground and 164 through the air.

For Colombo, even though he is a senior, it was the first varsity game he has started and he began it in fine fashion with five straight completions on his way to 11 for 17 passing on the day.

Vignali also had a superb day as he rushed for 108 yards on 18 carries and caught a pass for a touchdown as well as returned a kickoff for another score.

On defense, Harvard shut down Columbia's running game, limiting the Lions to eight yards on the ground. However, Harvard proved to be vulnerable to the pass as Columbia completed 30 of 58 passes for 368 yards.

Fortunately for the Minutemen, their strength on offense this season has been their passing and it should improve as sophomore quarterback Jim Simeone gets more experience. Simeone's targets will include his brother, Bob, and tight ends Gary Freker and Paul Walsh.

The running attack, which has been less than spectacular in the post-Pearson era, will have a new starter at tailback, sophomore Frank Fay. Previous starter Dickworth Grange is expected to see plenty of action. Senior Rich Jenkins remains in the fullback slot.

The one problem with a pass-oriented offense when playing a team like Harvard is that it is not time consuming, which means that the UMass defense could end up spending too much time on the field against Harvard's potent offense. One can only hope that the defense, led by free safety Grady Fuller and middle guard Peter Tracy, is up to the challenge.

Actually, though, the key to the game will be whether or not the Minutemen can avoid the turnovers and various misplays that have plagued them so far this year. The Minutemen have lost the ball six times in two games, as well as recovering their own fumbles eight times.

"We have had a lot of mistakes, which is typical of a young team," said UMass coach Bob Pickett. "but we think we have improved tremendously. "Harvard is a very good football team. They have exceptional people at the skill positions."

Harvard coach Joe Restic sees UMass as a "tough team to prepare for. We are going to have to establish control of the ball and must have balance."

For those who cannot get to Boston for the game, both WTTT 1430 and WMUA 91.1 will be broadcasting the game.

UM faces Tar Heels tonight, UVM tomorrow

By JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

Two days, two games, two different playing surfaces, and hopefully, for the University of Massachusetts field hockey team, there will be two more victories.

Tonight, the stickers will be playing the University of North Carolina (Chapel Hill) on the turf at Springfield College. Tomorrow, the stickers will be facing the University of Vermont on the NOPE playing field at 1 p.m.

"I know the UNC has some speedsters on their front line," coach Pam Hixon said. "But the turf should be as beneficial to us as it will be to them."

Although the Minutewomen scored twice in their last game (against Boston College), Hixon is still looking for poise around the net.

"That will come in time," she said. "No matter what the field conditions, we will always play our own game."

So far this season, that game has been an intense combination of passes and breakaways, combined with a very solid, steady defense, one which has yet to be scored upon.

Against North Carolina, UMass will be looking for good pass executions and breakaways. Yesterday, the stickers spent the afternoon on the turf at Springfield, preparing for tonight's contest.

"The way these girls have been playing, they should be that much better on the turf," Hixon said.

After a good night's sleep, the Minutewomen will lace up their shoes once more, for the tomorrow's game against Vermont.

Last season, the stickers went up to UVM and came home with a solid 4-0 victory under their belts. According to Hixon, though, last season doesn't mean very much to her now.

"Every game is different," she said. "But there is one thing that remains the same," Hixon said, and that is, "we always try to come home with a win."

The stickers won't have far to travel this weekend.

Australia II romps over Liberty to tie series 3 - 3

NEWPORT, RI (AP) - Australia II foreed an unprecedented seventh race for the America's Cup when it swamped Liberty by a record 3 minutes, 25 seconds Thursday, seriously jeopardizing the 132-year U.S. monopoly on sailing's oldest prize.

The decisive race, with sports' longest winning streak at stake, was scheduled for Friday on Rhode Island Sound, barring a request by either side for a lay day.

Thursday's victory, the worst defeat ever for an undamaged defender, was the second straight for the Aussies and skipper John Bertrand, who had been down 3-1 in the best-of-seven series just three days earlier.

Their three victories are the most ever by a foreign boat in 25 American defenses of the Cup, the only international sports trophy never to change hands.

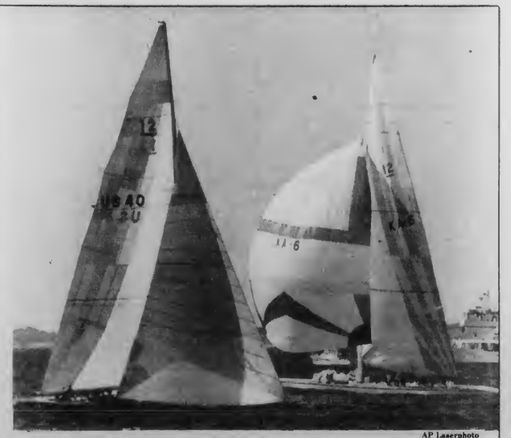
Only once before, in 1920, has the series come down to the final race, and that was when it was a best-of-five competition.

That year, the defending boat Resolute came back from an 0-2 deficit to win the last three races against Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock IV of Northern Ireland.

Liberty, crippled by a broken mast support in Wednesday's loss, had no such excuse this time.

Despite some last-minute sail changes, skipper Dennis Conner beat Bertrand to the start for the fifth time in six races but squandered that seven-second lead with puzzling tactics for the second straight day.

He sailed off to the right of the 24.3-mile course in search of a wind shift rather than engage the Aussies in a tacking duel. Bertrand, meanwhile, went the other way.



Conner, trying to become the first skipper since Harold S. Vanderbilt in the 1930s to successfully defend the Cup twice in a row, had done the same thing Wednesday when he lost a 37-second head start.

It didn't work any better this time.

When the two boats converged more than halfway through the 4.5-mile first leg, Australia II was in front by about three boat lengths.

The lead was 2:29 at the first mark - the biggest of the series at that point - and it was obvious that only something catastrophic would give the Americans a victory.

Sailing in northwesterly 12 knot winds that her celebrated winged keel likes so well, Australia II led by 2:28 after the first of two 3.15-mile crosswind reaches. She picked up an amazing 1:18 in the next, when a wind shift turned it into more of a downwind run.

AP Laserphoto

Australia II, running under spinnaker at right after rounding the first mark, speeds by Liberty, still short of the mark. The Aussies tied it up 3-3 to force Saturday's final and decisive race.

Cease-fire announced in Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Saudi and Syrian officals Sunday night announced a ceasefire agreement in the Lebanese civil war hours after a renewed attack near U.S. Marine positions at Beirut airport. Three Marines were wounded during the day.

The cease-fire accord — to take effect 6 a.m. today, midnight Sunday EDT —was announced in Damascus, where Syrian Foreign Minister AbdulHalim Khaddam told a news conference, "An agreement has been reached for a cease-fire in Lebanon, ending the war and starting a national dialogue. What was achieved is great."

Druse leader Walid Jumblatt, who attended talks with Khaddam and others, said he had ordered his militiamen to stop firing at 6 a.m. today.

Khaddam said, "We appeal to all our Lebanese brothers to go beyond the bloodshed and the hatred in order to restart the building of Lebanon."

Lebanon's latest civil war began Sept. 4 with the withdrawal of Israeli troops from the mountains overlooking Beirut to a new defense line further to the south. Syrian-backed Druse, reportedly aided by Palestinian guerrillas, battled fiercely with Christian militiamen and Lebanese army troops in the mountains and on the capital's outskirts.

Khaddam and Saudi Prince Bandar Bin Sultan refused to provide details of the agreement at the Damascus news conference, saying they would be disclosed later by Lebanese President Amin Gemayel in Beirut.

Bandar said: "This is the beginning of the road for Arab solidarity and for freeing Lebanon from Israeli occupation." He called the pact "a historic achievement that guarantees the establishment of a balanced rule in Lebanon."

Sunday evening, Christian neighborhoods in east Beirut came under heavy shelling from the Druse and Syrian-controlled mountains overlooking the capital, the state radio said.

A Marine spokesman, Warrant Officer Charles Rowe, said one Marine was slightly wounded in the nighttime barrage as he and the other men again went on their highest state of alert, diving into bunkers and foxholes.

No candidates for a quarter of Senate seats

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Nominations for elections to the Undergraduate Student Senate closed Friday without candidates in approximately one quarter of the elected senate seats.

Elections will be held October 5 and 6.

Elections coordinator Mindy Ordway said no candidates took out nomination papers for 25 out of the 102 elected Senate seats. All 25 seats are for on-campus representatives, and in Southwest Residential Area, 16 of 27 seats will go unfilled, Ordway said.

Twelve dormitories will not have Senators, while some other dorms that should have two representatives will only have one after the election, Ordway said.

Ordway said 80 persons returned nomination papers, for 77 seats on campus and in the Greek and Commuter areas. The two contested seats are in the Greek area, where six people are running for five seats, and in Grayson dormitory in Orchard Hill Residential Area, where four people are running for two open seats, she said.

Still, Ordway said, students should vote because the Senate is the main governing body of the Student Government Association, and "all senate seats are open."

"We need people to get involved," said Ordway, who also chairs the senate Government Affairs Committee. In past years, 15 percent of students have voted in Senate elections, "which is really not very good at all," she said.

"There's just a lack of understanding on the meaning of a vote," Ordway said. "People think things are set in stone, but if they vote, maybe things will change."

Senate Speaker Chris Sullivan urged students to vote to "give better credibility (to the Senate) in dealing with the administration and the community."

Sullivan said he thinks there will be some write-in candidates to fill open seats.

"If you're interested, all you have to do is tell people in your dorm," to vote for you, Sullivan said. "If more than 10 vote for you, and you beat everyone else," you are elected to the seat, he said.

"I think there are probably people interested who don't realize the possibility is open for them," Sullivan said.

USDA claims UMass mistreating animals

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts may be hit with as much as $10,000 in fines as a result of a United States Department of Agriculture inspection of facilities for laboratory animals.

The USDA charges claim, in some departments on campus, animals' food supplies were improperly stored, feeders were unsanitary, cages were too small or unsanitary. Also, some of the animals needed veterinary care.

The charges were based on inspections conducted on seven university research sites in January and February of this year, according to a USDA spokesman. Many of the problems had also been recorded when the campus was inspected in July 1982.

The university responded to the charges within the 20-day limit imposed by federal law, and the case will now be heard by a federal board, said Dr. David Kluesenger, acting associate veterinarian for APHIS (Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service) in Massachusetts. Neither Kluesenger nor anyone from the USDA would comment further on the hearing. University Counsel Sidney Myer could not be reached for comment.

The USDA regularly conducts inspections on all college campuses having laboratory animals. Among those departments cited for violations at UMass were psychology and zoology.

Michael Katz, hired in February as University Veterinary consultant, compared the inspection to a surprise inspection on one's dorm room.

"The animal care was good, but not up to USDA standards," he said, "it has changed since the inspections." Katz, who consulted on a call basis before February, now conducts monthly inspections.

The zoology department had been cited for uncleanliness and small cages.

"We were more than happy to clean the lab but sometimes it's a question of not having enough help," Mindaugas Kaulenas, department head, said.

"We have installed new cages," he said. "If you have a rabbit for a long time it outgrows its cage."

Deficiencies in the psychology department are for the most part in the physical aspect of the building, specifically the wall surfaces which were covered with grids and were unwashable, and the floor covering, which was broken, said Melinda Novak, associate chairman in charge of animal care.

"The physical plant is in the process of removing these walls," she said, "In no way was any psychology department faculty member cited for violations directly related to the physical well being of the animals. There was no crowding, dirty conditions or sick animals."

"The university has developed a file system to keep better watch on the animals," Katz said. "Some of the animals needed veterinary care when I started, but some need care now," he said, "and it's an ongoing process."

"Part of the problem UMass had may be due to changes in laboratory animal care standards," Kluesenger said.

Officials deny racism in day care delays

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts officials denied allegations made last week by parents that a "subtle racism" delayed the completion of renovations and the opening of a local day care center.

Officials said the delay was caused instead by a lack of workers.

David Zuccalo, director of the North Village Children's Center, said last week the center has the largest percent of minorities of the three day care centers in the UMass system.

Parents of children attending the center told Zuccalo and his staff the reason Whitmore has "not been too responsive is rooted in some subtle racism," he said.

According to Elizabeth Perkins, director of the UMass Child Care System, only the North Village Center cares for the infants (between the ages of 2 months to 15 months) in the child care system, and the race or ethnic background is not an issue.

"I'm really understanding of how it (a lack of child care) inconvenienced the parents, and caused the (racism) issue. But we tried every possible route," she said.

Dean of Students William Field said "In terms of racial mixture they (the day care centers) are basically all the same."

Zuccalo said while the center was closed parents brought their children to work and to classes.

The "kids were getting shuttled back and forth" to grandparents, and friends. Parents were "getting desperate," he said.

The renovations at the center are being done by Physical Plant employees on an overtime basis, Field said.

"The University cannot maintain its buildings. We don't have enough (workers) and we're not allowed to hire them. If we put a new day care center on the Physical Plant agenda, it might not come up in two

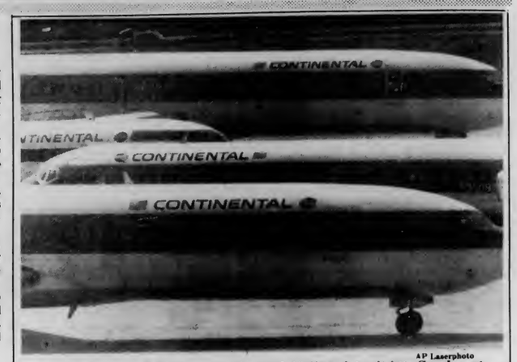
Germans decry mock burials

FRANKFURT, West Germany AP - The U.S. Army's rehearsal of mass burials of battle field dead has fed fears of nuclear holocaust and drawn angry responses in the news media.

Not since President Reagan said the United States was prepared to fight a limited nuclear war have West German commentators reacted with such sharp blasts at U.S. military policy.

West German newsman Martin Schulze condemned the grave-digging exercise as showing "total lack of sensitivity." Photos of a mass grave dug by an Army bulldozer near Hanau recalled the Third Reich's slaughter of European Jews in World War II, he declared.

"One can imagine how the Americans would react if the peace movement did the same," Schulze said on national television Saturday night after TV news showed films of the simulated grave.



The rehearsal was conducted last Tuesday by 50 soldiers from the 26th Supply and Service Company in Hanau who are being trained as graves registration personnel, the Army said.

It was the first time the Army has conducted such an exercise since annual NATO autumn training exercises began in the early 1970s.

The german news media gave prominent attention to the incident after it was diclosed Friday by the unofficial U.S. armed forces newspaper Stars and Stripes.

Lt. Col. Jim Lawson, an Army spokesman, acknowledged that the "job of burying people, a lot of people" is something the public doesn't want to think about.

"That's what makes it necessary to go through the exercise so that people will know what to do - God forbid - should it happen again as it has in the past," he told The Associated Press.

Alaskan Senator defends Watt

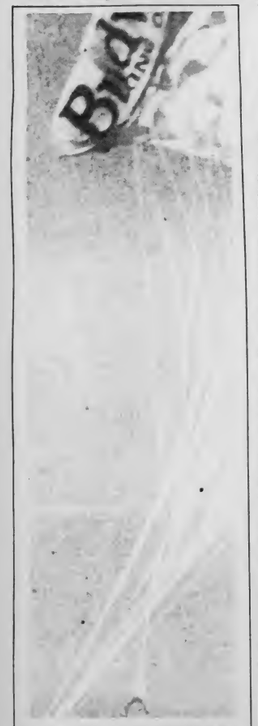
WASHINGTON (AP) — A top Senate Republican, saying James Watt is a "God-fearing man," not a bigot, promised Sunday to block a Senate resolution urging his resignation. But another GOP senator predicted Watt will not last another week as secretary of the interior.

Assistant Majority Leader Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, said Watt made a mistake last week in referring to five advisers as "a black ... a woman, two Jews and a cripple." But he said Watt shouldn't be driven from office for the blunder.

"He's not a bigot. Jim Watt is a God-fearing man who is really quite a Christian gentleman," Stevens told reporters after an appearance on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation," where he defended Watt.

The Senate is scheduled to take up debate Wednesday of a Democratic-sponsored resolution calling for Watt's resignation for conduct "totally unbefitting a senior Cabinet member."

Stevens said the resolution will not come to a vote "as far as I am concerned." He told reporters he would try to prevent the Senate from voting on the resolution, but he did not elaborate.



IRA guerrillas blast out of prison

BELFAST, Northern Ireland(AP) — Thirty-eight IRA guerrillas shot their way out of top-security Maze prison Sunday, killing one guard and wounding others, authorities said.

Army helicopters and scores of policemen with tracker dogs swarmed around the countryside after the spectacular escape — the biggest in British history, said a spokesman for the Northern Ireland Office.

Police said the escape created "total bedlam" at the 900-inmate jail outside Belfast, site of the 1981 Irish Republican Army hunger strike and home to some of Northern Ireland's most-hardened convicted bombers and killers.

As many as 15 escapees later were captured at scores of police roadblocks set up on all roads leading from the jail, authorities said.

Hearings to review insurance hikes

BOSTON - The size of car insurance bills for Massachusetts drivers in 1984 - the first year of a state-mandated shake-up in auto insurance - will be determined on the basis of hearings that begin Monday.

The battle lines have already been drawn for Insurance Commissioner Peter Hiam's review of industry's proposed $130 million rate hike. The hearings are expected to last four to six weeks.

Ultimately, these are the requests that he must weigh:

-Industry has asked for an 11.3 percent increase in the rates, adding about $45 to the average policy.

-The commissioner's staff in the state Rating Bureau is recommending a 9.6 percent hike, adding $39 to the average policy.

-Atty. General Francis X. Bellotti wants Hiam to cut the cost of auto insurance by 1 percent, slashing the average annual bill by $5.

Boston voters unhappy with schools

BOSTON - Most of the city residents contacted in a poll conducted for the Boston Herald said they are unhappy with Boston's public schools, but only 37 percent said more money should be spent on the system.

The random telephone sample of 600 registered Boston voters who voted in the 1979 preliminary election was conducted last week for the newspaper by Bill Johnson and Associates of Mount Vernon, N.Y.

"Our findings indicate deep dissatisfaction with the school system," said pollster Bill Johnson.

Only 1 percent of the sample rated the public schools as "excellent" and 12 percent termed them "pretty good." Fifty-four percent called the schools "poor," and 27 percent said they were "only fair." Six percent couldn't decide.

Simon and Garfunkel end tour

TEL AVIV, Israel — Singer Paul Simon wiped away tears as an ecstatic Israeli audience cheered him and partner Art Garfunkel through the first of two concerts billed as their last together.

"I want to say so much, but I can't," said Simon, who doesn't usually talk to his audiences. Fighting back tears, he added: "I'm so happy to be here. I love you all."

"We love you, we love you," the crowd of 50,000 yelled back as the two sang "Sound of Silence" at the Saturday night concert.

The duo was emotional as they played their first concert in Israel together. Simon performed here solo in 1978. Both men are Jewish.

Marcos orders protests crushed

MANILLA, Phillippines - President Ferdinand E. Marcos on Sunday ordered his riot troops to crush all unauthorized demonstrations, and warned protesting businessmen they had been videotaped and would be tracked down and arrested.

He rejected a proposal by Cardinal Jamie L. Sin to share power with an advisory council and accused priests and nuns of teaching schoolchildren to hate him.

Sin, the archbishop of Manila and leader of the Philippine Catholic church, denied the charge and accused Marcos of casting "a terrible darkness" over the land and forcing Filipinos to choose the path of "violent confrontation."

Printers fight over ballots contract

BOSTON (AP) — With one of the state's largest printing contracts at stake, two companies are facing a court hearing this week in a dispute over their bids for printing the state election ballots

The Acme Printing Co. of Medford has held the contract for the past 10 years, but recently lost it to Bradford & Bigelow Inc. of Danvers when the Danvers company submitted a lower bid, The Boston Globe said.

Bradford & Bigelow's sealed bid was for $1.5 million, compared with Acme's $2.8 million bid, according to state records.

Bradford & Bigelow, however, was later disqualified from the contract because of a ruling that it violated the "prevailing wage" law requiring state contractors to pay union-scale wages.

U.S.-Chinese dialogue urged

PEKING Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger said Sunday that China and the United States should revive their strategic dialogue and cooperate militarily to safeguard world peace.

Weinberger did not mention the Soviet Union, but his remarks were considered a clear call for resurrection of a U.S.- China dialogue to counter what Washington and Peking both call Soviet expansionism.

said President Reagan's new policy allowing the Chinese to import sophisticated technology will help them modernize their 4.2 million-member army.

Registry coming on campus to issue liquor IDs

By STEPHEN HOWE
Collegian Correspondent

Officials from the Massachusetts Registry of Motor Vehicles and local police officers will be processing and issuing Massachusetts Liquor Identification cards on campus and in Amherst this week.

In the past students have had to go to the police station or make a trip to the Registry of Motor Vehicles in Northampton to acquire a Masachusetts Liquor Identification card.

The program is the result of an agreement between local and campus alcoholic beverage operations, the Amherst and UMass police departments and the Registry of Motor Vehicles.

The purpose of these cards is to provide people who are over 20 and do not possess a valid Massachusetts driver's license with a commonly accepted form of identification for purchasing alcohol.

Purchasing alcoholic beverages is often a problem for people who have out of state drivers licenses that are not always accepted by local establishments and package stores.

Richard Ellis, director of the University Food Services which operates the Blue Wall and the Top of the Campus lounge, said this is the first time that the Registry of Motor Vehicles has offered their services beyond the confines of their local offices.

"The most significant thing here is that through a community effort the registry has agreed to bring their facilities out of their offices and into the town and campus," Ellis said. "I think a special thanks is in order for their extra effort," he said.

Local and campus police officials shared Ellis' appreciation for the registry's action.

Gerald O'Neil, director of the UMass Department of Public Safety, noted that it is difficult for many people, especially students, to get to the registry office in Northampton.

"By coming to the University the registry is trying to accommodate as many students as possible," O'Neill said.

Lt. Dave Jankowski of the Amherst Police said, "The registry should be commended in their effort to make getting these cards easier for the student."

Applications will be issued in the Bluewall Tuesday between 9 a.m. and noon and Thursday between 1 p.m. and 4 p.m.

Applications will also be processed at the Amherst Town Hall next Tuesday from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. and next Thursday between 9 a.m. and noon.

Student group fights pro-life legislation

By DIANE LANE
Collegian Correspondent

Organizing against pro-life abortion legislation remains a top priority for the Committee For Equal Rights and Reproductive Freedom (CERRF), a student-run organization at the University of Massachusetts.

Formed in 1980 by the Student Center For Research and Advocacy (SCERA) Women's Issues Team and the Radical Student Union (RSU), CERRF was formed in response to increased attacks on reproductive freedom, according to members.

In addition to taking a pro-choice stand on abortion, CERRF members said they actively support the struggles of lesbians and homosexuals, free access to safe birth control, sex education in schools, equal rights for women and the prevention of forced sterilization of minority and low-income women in this country and in Puerto Rico.

This year CERRF will try to organize against the Hyde Amendment, a state bill which would attempt to cut off or restrict private and public funding of abortions.

"The passing of a bill such as this would put a foot in the door for further restrictions on abortion at both the state and federal levels", said Tildy Turchinetz, a student activist and CERRF member.

CERRF tries to keep a "constant eye on the state and federal legislative bodies", said Artie Walsh, also a CERRF member.

According to CERRF members, one in seven native Americans and one in five black women in this country have been forced into non-voluntary sterilization through bribery or other tactics. In Puerto Rico one in three women have undergone "the operation," which is restricted by government regulations. Only one in 25 white women have undergone non-voluntary sterilization.

"Many women are told that unless they agree to sterilization their Welfare benefits will be cut off. Others sign agreements which they cannot read or do not understand and many more are sterilized without consent while undergoing an abortion. This is basically a racist policy," said Walsh.

According to Walsh, leaving teenagers sexually ignorant and unprotected is another way of restricting reproductive choice. CERRF was active in lobbying against the "Squeal Law" but says that it is only a beginning.

"Young adults need to know the emotional and health consequences of their sexual actions" said Walsh. "For most people their first year at college is their sex education."

Some of CERRF's projects include an informational table in the Campus Center concourse, petitioning in the dorms, letter-writing campaigns, and peer education.

"We represent the entire campus population," said Turchinetz.

or three years. We can't argue about priorities," Field said.

Perkins said the employees working overtime did as much as they could to complete the renovations, but had overestimated what they could finish before the opening date.

One of the biggest complaints made by staff and parents was the lack of office space given to the center. Zuccalo said he petitioned Housing Services for the (empty) apartment next door, but was told it was rented. However, on Friday, September 16, after a story in the Collegian described the situation at the center, they were given the apartment.

Perkins said she knew nothing of a correlation between the Collegian article and the sudden vacancy of the apartment.

"I'm just very pleased to see the center get some very much needed physical renovations."

Third party alternatives necessary

Coming back to the University this Fall, probably one of the first things you noticed was that there were First Week posters everywhere, especially in the dorms. What you may not have noticed were the bright pink Diversity Week posters. It is important for us, the students, to understand how Diversity Week developed because it is a symptom of a much greater problem at this University.

Barbara Brodley

First Week was created three years ago by those at the Vice-Chancellor level as an effort towards a smooth opening of school. Traditionally, the student groups and the Student Activities office have worked together to plan the activities and events. The goals of First Week have always been somewhat nebulous because there has never been a formal guideline set. However it is safe to say that in the past, the main objectives of having first Week included offering events and programs primarily oriented to new students, but also to welcome back returning students. Another objective has been to provide the opportunity for students to become familiar with various student groups that exist on campus.

This summer, the Student Activities office suggested that the student representatives that were here in Amherst be notified that if they were interested they could be a part of First Week planning. Letters were sent out in the hopes of forming a First Week committee with the employees of the Student Activities Office. Each group could organize an event providing that the committee as a whole approved.

Many student groups responded with interest. However, the controversy developed when the Student Activities Office overrode a majority vote for some of the events that the students wanted as a part of First Week. The events were. the first two films of the Women's Film Festival Norma Rae and Portrait of Theresa, the Central America Teach-In, and the workshop for gay men and women. Only two students out of a total of 11 voting committee members voted with the Student Activities Office to reject the events. An employee of the Office even had the gall to claim that she knew what the students want. This seems ludicrous when it was the students who wanted the events.

The problem with the First Week agenda was that it only appealed to a certain group of people at this university. The events were not diverse; they were all fun and games. Of course there is certainly nothing wrong with having a good time-this is not the issue. The issue is that there are many students at the University and the agenda should address as many different interests as possible. The argument used against the Central-American Teach-In, for example, was that students would not be interested in international issues. The Student Activities Office took on a condescending attitude, believing that students were only interested in light social activities. However, the Student Union Ballroom was packed for the Teach-In,indicating a gross underestimation of students' interests by the administration.

Thus, the rejected events were put together as Diversity Week in protest to the unilateral decision-making process that took place. The fact that all the events for Diversity Week were such a success only proves that there are many interests on campus and that one or two administrators cannot possible determine what thousands of undergraduates are interested in.

The controversy over First Week is an indication that a much larger problem exists. That is, the continual struggle of students to pursue goals for improving the academic, financial, and extra-curricular quality of offerings for the student population. Rather than listening to student voices, the administration prefers to claim that they know more than we do (the students) about what students need. At the heart of the issue is the fact that they are using student money. We as students have the right to determine how our money is spent. The struggle for power ends up hurting the University as a whole because much time and energy gets spent in such a fruitless manner.

Well, that's the problem. "What can I do about it?" you say. I can't offer a theory that can reconstruct the whole complex bureaucratic system. But I do know that the first step is to get as many students involved as possible. There is (to be cliched) strength in numbers, and with more student involvement in student groups (particularly in the student government), we will be a stronger and more solid unit to contend with.

Reality ignored in First Week

On August 25 the guy with the black robes and the long scythe cut down an old man in Harborside, Maine. His name was Scott Nearing and he had lived 100 years.

Some people know of Nearing and his wife Helen for their books such as "The Maple Sugar Book". He was also contributor to many magazines; his writing career stretching from 1908 to 1972.

BROOKE STATES

One of the things that made Nearing so important was that he was one of the few remaining radicals who came from the time when there had been a large left-wing current in this country's politics, when it had not been confined to college campuses and large cities, but rather had an institutional and social base rooted deep in the experiences of the immigrants and others in America as the country became industrialized.

In his autobiography Nearing describes how he bought German bonds before World War 1 that were worth 800 dollars. They were valued at 60,000 dollars after the war. As Nearing describes it: "I pondered the situation. Here were war profits on a fantastic scale that must be paid out of the exploited labor of the German people. I put the bonds in the fireplace and reduced them to ashes." Later on he talks about moving from Vermont to Maine: "Why not put our belongings in two bags, walk down the road, and seek our fortune somewhere else."

While some might see this as insane, stupid, or asinine; it shows the type of character and willingness to buck the system that characterized Nearing during his whole life. He was a member of the Socialist and Communist Parties at different periods, and was indicted under the espionage act of 1919 for publishing a book critical of the United States' entry into World War 1. Nearing lost jobs at the University of Pennsylvania and Toledo University for political acts. One dismissal was for speaking out against child labor, the other for opposition to World War 1.

Not only was Nearing a "political" radical, but early on he became involved in environmentalism and organic farming. His most widely read book, "Living the Good Life", was originally published in 1954. It describes the life that he and his wife lived on their farm, and advances many of the values that the counter-culture and back-to-the-land movements would espouse in the 60's and 70's.

We are entering a period when the United States is facing difficult choices and problems. In response to this there has been an ongoing attempt to create parties and organizations that are viable outside the two party system, or as one of my professors calls it "one party with two wings". The Citizens' Party, the populist caucus in the Mid-West, Jesse Jackson's rumblings about running, and even the threats of some New Rightists to bone Bonzo and find somebody else, all point to the disintegration of the two party system and structure.

Neither the Democrats nor the Republicans have been able to come up with effective answers to our current problems. Both parties, in particular the Democrats, have large varied constituencies, and are having increasing trouble covering all the bases.

Third parties and alternatives have a long history in the United States. Eugene V. Debs, Socialist Party candidate for President, got almost 1 million votes in the 1912 elections, and socialists throughout the country were elected to positions, including mayors of cities. Previous to this, the great populist upsurge of the 1880's and 90's, had provided one of the most serious challenges to the continued industrialization of the country, and the maintenance of unbridled capitalism. By the Depression of the 1930's much of the older left had been crushed. But the Communist Party and a variety of local third party organizations such as the Farmer Labor Party, and Upton Sinclair's End Poverty party in California, challenged the two party system on the local level.

In his autobiography Nearing writes "The momentum of destruction brushes aside opposition and continues the mad race to Armageddon. No effective alternative is in sight." Hopefully the day will soon arrive when there will once again be many different parties capable of attracting mass support. It is, after all, the American way.

Charitable guise deceptive

To the Editor,

I am deeply disturbed by a Reserve Officer's Training Corps, (ROTC) fundraising event that took place on our campus on the twenty-first of September. I think it is important for the community to be aware of the hidden meanings behind this sort of event.

Let me first say, I am not against fundraisers or charitable organizations. In our political economy, which does not guarantee our economic well-being, inevitably we must give directly where we can see the greatest need. This is how Mr. Reagan would like us to care for the welfare of this country.

In having an ROTC-sponsored Easter Seals campaign on campus, it is clear to me that the intentions are ultimately other than "charitable." As many of you know, on Monday the campus pond area was temporarily converted into a small ROTC encampment. A helicopter was flown in, a green tent was erected and a rope bridge was hung across the pond. To the passers-by this may have seemed like an intrusive and distasteful "occupation,"or it may have looked like fun, as it did to many who stopped to "join" the fun. This is the stuff Boy Scouts are all about, but is it, really what the U.S. military is all about?

Clearly, this event was not about Easter Seals, however noble it may have seemed. As I saw it, it was about a military presence here on our campus. We as students are a potential military resource. Uncle Sam wants us. As a public university, UMass may be subject to forms of military interference. Do we have a right to a military-free education? Apparently not. Reagan's registration policies pose a direct threat to our rights to equal educational opportunities. These are not unrelated points that I am making.

If students have to register in order to qualify for the ever-shrinking number of loans and grants, many of us may be coerced to go one step further and take out a loan with the U.S. military. The delayed payments may end up costing our lives, but if not, the interest rates may appear relatively low.

As I tried to gather support to make a counter statement to this show, I found that students were not ready to mobilize themselves spontaneously around a crucial issue, which pertains directly to our lives here at UMass. A question: if not now, when? The point is, we need to be on guard at all times. The political integrity of this community is only as strong as its ability to gather its resources together when most needed. There may be a time when there just isn't time.

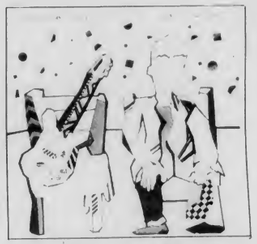
Lemkin: subtle drama

By GRACE MALLIMSON
Collegian Correspondent

The Student Union Gallery is presently holding a showing of photographs by James Lemkin. The exhibition, which started on Sept. 22 and will last for three weeks, is entitled "Impressions of Diana, Color Photographs Made With the Diana F Toy Camera, Autumn Series." It consists of a series of photographs which Dr. Lemkin took using the Diana F, a $4.00 toy camera made in Hong Kong.

According to Dr. Lemkin, the poor quality of his camera enabled him to "remember simplicity." His exploration of the imprecision of the Diana F makes the pictures almost abstract in quality. Because of the autumn colors and the naturalistic lighting, the works are dramatic, while remaining subtle and simplistic enough for the final interpretation to be up to the viewer.

Dr. Lemkin started using the Diana F after his photography equipment was stolen in New York City in the summer of 1982. Prior to that he had been an architectural photographer. He studied photography at the University of Rochester, George Eastman House, and was a graduate student at MIT. Dr. Lemkin has also taught photography and film at Harvard University, State University of New York Canadaigua, Kansas Newman College, and on a Cree/Chippewa Indian reserve in Montana. His work has been exhibited throughout North America, and his photos are on permanent collection at the George Eastman House of International Photography, Museum of Contemporary Craft (NYC), the Hayden Gallery, and the Creative Photography Department at MIT. He presently practices naturopathic medicine in Northampton, Mass, and Enfield, Conn. In general practice, he emphasized natural and preventive methods of health care.



One of James Lemkin's "Autumn Series" photos currently on display in the Student Union Gallery.

Pianist Estela Olevsky will perform a solo recital at 8:15 p.m. on Sept. 27 in Buckley Recital Hall at Amherst College. The recital is the second in this season's faculty recital series, presented by the UMass Department of Music and Dance.

Belew: king for a day

By NEAL O'SHEA
Collegian Correspondent

Rip bash smash burn up a fret I can keep it, in tune and nearly beat it to death.

Is this the product of a cruel, sadistic guitar hater? Hardly. This is a stanza from Twang Bar King, the latest solo album from Adrian Belew.

Twang Bar King is a welcome addition to American avante garde music that definitely establishes Adrian Belew as one of the greatest guitar players ever.

The opening song on side one is a cover of the old Beatles' song, "I'm Down." Belew's version is probably not what the Fab Four had in mind; his guitar twists and screams its way around both his superbly ranged voice and the backup choruses from his well rehearsed band.

The next song, entitled "I Wonder", is a love song of sorts. The guitars here are reminiscent of Robert Fripp and also show Belew's ability to jump from rhythm to lead.

"Sexy Rhino" is a short electronic song that is most likely about Belew's wife, to whom he seems very devoted. The title is also an allusion to his first solo album, "Lone Rhino."

On the title track, Belew mercilessly careens his guitar through some amazingly distorted riffs. This is a nicely danceable tune, something that Belew usually reserves for his own music.

The A-side finishes with "The Rail Song", a highly personal journey back into Belew's Illinois childhood. The music is melancholy and the lyrics deal with his romance with the rails of the Midwest.

Side two starts with "Paint the Road", a jouncy instrumental in which Belew's excellent band gets quite a workout. The band — Christy Bley on piano, William Janssen on saxaphones, Larrie Londin on drums, J. Clifton Mayhugh on bass and Adrian Belew on all guitars — deserves a round of applause.

"She is Not Dead" mourns the loss of someone who was so beautiful that her beauty lived on after her death. This tune makes good use of some heavy African rhythms.

In summary, this is a fine work from a guitarist who blends several styles of playing into his own unique sound. One can hear bits of Zappa and Fripp, but it's Adrian Belew all the way.

Dartmouth blasts tennis

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

They are eight of the most respected institutions of higher learning in the world. The Ivy League. Since their inception in the 17th century they have graduated some of the most influential leaders in government, business, and law. Enhancing the reputation of these schools have been the athletic programs. Back at the beginning of this century and well into it, the Harvard-Yale football game was a national event, unquestionably "The Game" of the year.

But the present represents a different story. In the greedy world of intercollegiate athletics where TV's king and winning's the thing the Ivies represent the last stand for sanity. They forbid their football teams to participate in any bowl games and reluctantly allow their basketball squads to participate in the post-season torney. Result: The Ivy League, athletically anyway, have fallen from grace and in prestige. But there is one sport that the Ivies remain strong: Tennis.

And the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team learned that lesson on Saturday as the Dartmouth Little Green, rated only seventh in their league, thrashed the Minutemen 8-1.

"They were a good team. It wasn't that we were out-classed, we were out-experienced," said Coach Szlosek. "We have zero experience."

The lone UMass victory was registered by Wayne Peterson, who defeated Kris Robbins at number one singles, 6-4, 6-4. In the other five singles matches, UMass managed to capture only two sets (Earl Small at two and Mark Weinstein at five, who won in a tiebreaker). It was the same story in the doubles, where Dartmouth won at one and two by the identical score of 6-4, 6-2.

On Wednesday the netmen will travel to Storrs, CT to take on UConn. Next weekend, the squad travels to Princeton, New Jersey for the ECAV Championships.

UM has win, two 0-0 ties

CORTLAND, NY - The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team traveled out to the Cortland St. Tournament of Champions this weekend, which featured 12 of the Top 20 teams in the nation, and came out with a win and two ties.

UMass, ranked fourth in the nation, opened their portion of the tourney on Saturday with an impressive 3-0 win over unranked George Washington. Jamie Watson, Lori Stukes and Chris Taggart hit home for the Minutewomen.

In the next game, the defense stood tall but the offense couldn't come through in a 0-0 tie with the 11th ranked University of California-Berkley Golden Bears.

UMass outshot UCal-Berkley by a 8-6 margin and relied on freshman goaltender Lisa Ellis to turn away five shots.

Sunday morning, Massacusetts was again held scoreless as they tied seventh ranked Central Florida 0-0. Ellis stopped four shots as UMass outshot Central 8-4.

The Minutewomen take their 2-0-2 record and oppose Brown, 13th ranked, on Wednesday at 3 p.m. at Boyden.

National Rankings: 1) UConn 2) North Carolina 3)Cortland St. 4) UMass 5) Missouri-St. Louis 6) Cincinnati 7) C. Florida 8) Harvard 9) Boston College 10) Princeton.

Men in Cornell finals

ITACHA, NY - The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team advanced to the finals of the Cornell Classic this past weekend and didn't score a goal.

The Minutemen and Cornell battled to a double overtime 0-0 tie, but UMass got the bid to the finals by virtue of outshooting Cornell 5-4 in penalty kicks.

UMass met Cleveland St., who also advanced to the finals on penalty kicks after they tied Brooklyn St. 0-0.

Cornell out shot UMass 19-13 in their semi-final game but couldn't get it in. Goalie Jeff Donahue had 10 saves for the Minutemen.

Spikers fight to third place

New Britain, CT. - Adversity was a key word for the University of Massachusetts volleyball team this weekend. Six matches, sixteen games, two key injuries and ten hours of volleyball - this is how head coach Elaine Sortino spelled adversity this weekend.

The team traveled to Central Conneticut Saturday to play in a twelve team tournament. Things started off well, but progressively got worse.

UMass breezed by their first two opponents beating Bryant College and Sacred Heart in succesive games in their two out of three matches, but national power C.W. Post was next for UMass.

"This was a team we really wanted to see. Post would show us just how well we were doing." Sortino said. She did not however, foresee the upcoming trouble. Following a loss in game one, UMass was behind 13-11 when Kirsten Smith hit the floor writhing in pain. The diagnosis was a badly sprained ankle and Kirsten would be out for at least 2 weeks.

Sortino called in Ellen Deady cold off the bench to replace Smith. In a new position, Deady responded by playing her best volleyball of the season. UMass was able to push Post to the edge, but it was UMass ultimately fell off, losing 16-14.

"Post is the finest in New England, it was a good showing for us," praised Sortino.

UMass wrapped up the pool play beating Northeastern University and Central Conneticut. Both of these matches went the full three games. Following the Conneticut match, it was Leslie Smith who was being wrapped up. Leslie pulled her shoulder in the Central match and while warming up for the semi-finals against Springfield, she dislocated her shoulder - more trouble.

Sortino again turned to the bench and this time chose freshman Michele Barys. The 'new look' UMass team fought hard, but lost the third and deciding game 15-12.

Springfield squared off against Post in the finals, but Post reigned supreme and left Connecticut with the championship.

UM gets it together against Crimson

Offense starts quickly; Defense is fantastic

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

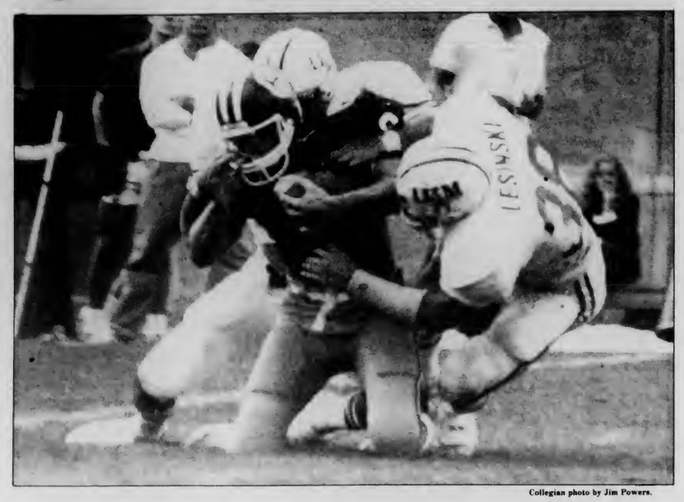
CAMBRIDGE — An explosive first quarter and a stubborn defense enabled the University of Massachusetts football team to come away from Boston with a 21-7 victory over the Crimson of Harvard Saturday.

The winning ways started with the coin toss and the Minutemen chose to kickoff so as to have the wind at their backs.

After the Minuteman defense forced Harvard to use their vaunted punter, Jim Villanueva, for the first of his eight punts on the day, the UMass offense went to work from their own 25 yard line.

With sophomore tailback Frank Fay, in his first start, slashing of left tackle for big gains, the largest of which being 17 yards, the Minutemen found themselves at the Harvard 38 facing a third down and ten situation.

At this point, quarterback Jim Simeone came up with the first of several big UMass plays, hitting his brother Bob Simeone with a 38 yard touchdown bomb and the Minutemen were suddenly leading, 7-0.



Once again, the UMass defense stymied the Harvard offense and the Minutemen took over at their own 32.

With the UMass offensive line controlling the line of scrimmage, Fay and senior fullback Rich Jenkins proceeded to pound out the yardage necessary for another score. Fay blasted into the end zone from five yards out for the touchdown and UMass was leading 14-0. Things would get better.

On the next series of downs, Harvard was facing a third and ten from their own 21 as quarterback Armond "Chuck" Colombo dropped back to throw. Defensive pass specialist Troy Turner read Colombo's intentions perfectly, stepped in front of his pass at the 25 yard line, and waltzed into the end zone with the third UMass score of the opening quarter and their last of the day.

In the second quarter, both teams traded punts and headed into the locker room with UMass leading, 21-0.

After a revolutionary halftime show by the Harvard marching band, during which they formed themselves into the initials U S S R and played "Live and Let Die"; the initials U S M C and R I P ? and played "Only the Good Die Young"; and the word PUKE; the teams came out to play the second half.

Craig Leskinsi and teammate helped bring Harvard to their knees in Saturday's 21-7 win out in Cambridge.

The last two quarters, especially the third, were dominated by Harvard as the UMass offense went into a shell and gained only 66 yards, all on the ground.

Fortunately for the Minutemen, their defense was nearly impregnable, only allowing the Crimson time-consuming yardage via the run.

The defense also came up with the big plays, including interceptions by strong safety Jack Shay and Turner (his second), and two fumble recoveries.

In a key series, the UMass defenses stopped Harvard on a fourth and goal at the five to preserve the 21-0 lead, which lasted until Harvard broke through with 29 seconds remaining in the third quarter to account for the final 21-7 score.

"It was a great win for us, we beat an excellent football team," said UMass coach Bob Pickett. "We were a little tentative in the second half. We're going to play better."

If UMass plays better next Saturday, they are sure to defeat Rhode Island at Alumni Stadium in their first Yankee Conference game.

Stickers tie UNC 0-0, crush UVM 7-0

If all the shots had been goals, the University of Massachusetts women's field hockey team would not have left their game Friday night against the North Carolina Tar Heels with just a 0-0 double overtime tie. UMass had 23 shots on goal to UNC's 2.

On Saturday, it was different. The Minutewomen rolled over the University of Vermont, 7-0, at NOPE.

There was elation and disbelief for the UMass fans three times during the North Carolina game on the turf at Springfield College when shots which appeared to be in the net rebounded off the post. "We just had no luck, as well as we played," said UMass coach Pam Hixon.

Both teams played a good game. UMass successfully executed passing combinations giving them repeated offensive opportunities. The Tar Heels played a sharp defense, but created far fewer scoring opportunites in which to capitalize on.

The team meetings at half time reflected the seriousness of the game. The UMass players lined the bench, entirely attentive to what Hixon was saying. They had to score. There had been good opportunities in the first half but they weren't goals.

North Carolina seemed to acquire more of everything during their respective half time session. They were fired up on attack, and defensively broke up the UMass penetrations.

With six minutes left in regulation, UMass captain Carol Progulske shot with a flick that deflected off the goal post.

With four and a half minutes remaining the Minutewomen put successive pressure on the UNC defense in a concentrated effort to score but to no avail.

In the two ten minute overtimes both teams struggled but couldn't get the offensive penetrations. The UMass offense got on track in Saturday's rout of Vermont. "Right away, right away," said Hixon in reference to offensive pressure before they went out to play the Catamount's.

"Go all the way to the goal," she said.

UMass had no problem and exploded. Pam Moryl crossed the ball from the right wing position to midfielder Patty Smith, who tipped it in to give UM a 1-0 lead with twenty minutes gone.

Four minutes later Moryl received a pass from midfielder Judy Morgan, carried it along the endline into the circle and tipped it for the score.

Throughout the first half the UMass offense dominated. UVM did not get into their scoring circle once.

Less than a minute into the second half, Pam Moryl shot from the top of the circle into the corner of the net, giving her a hat trick.

Shortly after the third UMass goal a UVM defensive player yelled to her team, "C'mon Vermont!" It was like a plead to stop this UMass team. But the Minutewomen were on a roll.

At nine minutes Judy Morgan drilled a clean shot into the goal off a short corner pass, and at 14 minutes, UMass was awarded a penalty stroke after the UVM goalie obstructed the ball with her body. Carol Progulske put a firm flick in to up the score to 5-0.

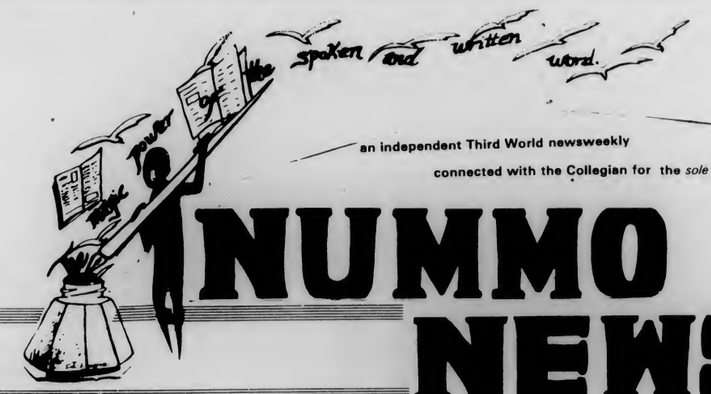
With 48 seconds left to play, left wing Diane Kobel was alone in front of the net. She deflected a cross ball in the goal to complete the UMass rout.

Two games. One scoreless. One explosive.

"The difference was that we made it happen. We came out and really exploded. I was really pleased," said Pam Hixon.

Cup is on the line today

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — A nervous Newport waited and wondered Sunday whether an old Liberty, a new Liberty or the same Liberty would face favored Australia II in Monday's seventh and decisive race for the America's Cup.



The answer was to be found in a shipyard drydock 25 miles away, where the embattled defender could undergo further changes in weight and sail configuration, a move the angry Australians have vowed to protest.

But just as the Aussies kept their revolutionary winged keel secret all summer, the Americans weren't saying what they would do with Liberty in an effort to maintain their 132-year monopoly on sailing's oldest prize.

The yacht was towed to the Cove Haven Marina Sunday and put in a shed for preparations to either add more ballast or take more away.

"I don't know if we'll make any changes," said Liberty skipper Dennis Conner.

NUMMO NEWS

Class of 1987 Third World Enrollment High

by Tracey Bryant
Nummo Staff

The University of Massachusetts is seeing its largest Third World student population to date. In the midst of a national decline in Third World college enrollment, this year's 311 incoming Third World freshpersons is the highest number in UMass history.

Why has UMass Third World enrollment increased, during a national decline? Rudy Jones, Director of UMass Admissions believes it is due to his aggressive recruiting, and his refusal to accept the assumption that increasing numbers of Third World students can not be recruited with the current national problems.

While Jones admits it was "very difficult", he insists that it is very possible. UMass admissions statistics have proven his point. In 1981, incoming Third World enrollment was 6.5 percent. In 1982 the figure dropped to 5.1. percent. For 1983 it is 7.5 percent.

Jones, who has been the Admissions Director one year, explains that his efforts consisted of visiting high schools, "convincing them (Third World students) UMass is a relatively decent place to study", developing good networking, counseling with minority students across Massachusetts and selective out of state visitations.

Jones is confident that increased Third World enrollment will increase the quality of education at UMass. He states, "A great university is measured by its dynamic faculty, excellent facilities and administrators; but also by the diversity of its students, faculty and staff. It will increase the status of the University."

What has decreased, says Jones, is financial aid. "It is no longer a free ride." He explains that although financial aid usually covers approximately 86 percent of a recipient's bill, the student will still need loans. The average student accumulates around $10,000 in loans by the end of four years. Says Jones, the University "needs more creative (financial) packaging to get minorities to come. It's not fair for a poor person to have to pay $10,000 (in loans) back after school. More can be done and is being done." Jones cited increased tuition waivers and the new Du Bois sholarships, which are four-year tuition waivers given to four incoming Third World freshpersons.

Jones feels that through the University's academic and extra-curricular programs, Third World students can accumulate valuable skills. Teachers, engineers, historians, doctors, business managers, nurses, and

Malika Jones: Dismissed from EWC

by Brenda Ling
Nummo Staff

As Malika Jones left the Third World Women's Program of UMass' Everywoman's Center (EWC) last Friday, she said that "it's up to student involvement (to decide) what focus the Task Force is going to take in the future."

Jones described the Third World community's needs for direct services and educational programs as "important, a priority." Yet, since "UMass is a microcosm of society at large, the University sees that there is a turn to the right in this country," and because the University doesn't exist in "a vacuum," it decides that Jones' " type of work is just not necessary."

Jones worked with Third World Women's Program since its inception in 1980, first in public relations and later as coordinator of the Program with Panna Putnam. Looking back on her experience, Jones commented, "I feel that the original thrust of the program no longer exists," blaming right-wing pressure with the disappearance of any incentive to focus broadly on Third World women's issues.

Jones' dismissal, along with Mary Wentworth's and Marianne O'Leary's, was a heated public issue last spring; committees began to work not only to reinstate the employees, but to try to understand the University's underlying reasons for not renewing the three contracts. Jones attributes the personnel upheaval to a "long history of exploitation in the EWC."

Nevertheless, Jones says "I am optimistic that whoever they hire will be able to act independenty of the controls that exist in the Center." She hopes that the Program will expand to be more campus-wide, and urges all members of the community to broaden support so that "when they see injustice, they will take a risk, regardless of the circumstances."

At the end of the month Jones and her four-year-old son will leave Amherst to return to Cambridge. From there, UConn's program for a master's in social work interests her, as does working to counter violence against women. Wherever she may settle, Jones reaffirms her commitment by saying that working with Third World women "would always be the priority."

And in the spirit of her dedication, Malika Jones leaves UMass this message: "Third World women in the community and on campus should put pressure on the EWC to fulfill the needs of Third World women, to demand that those programs not be compromised or watered down."

What John Wright did for our community and this University we must not forget. Brothers and sisters, we must learn from the precedent John set for us. Although John's life was cut short he still proved that if you try hard enough you can reach the sky and more. He showed that academic discipline and community involvement are not separate entities but vital, necessary aspects of one's total education.

Help us keep John's name alive. What he did for this University we must not let be forgotten. John gave the UMass Athletic Department a part of his life. His winning spirit elevated the standards and esteem of the UMass Track and Field Division. We must not let his efforts be in vain.

Racism and ignorance will try to bury John's memory. I say this because myself and some others remember a brother named Alex Eldridge. He was a star of the UMass Basketball Team who died while a student. He was one of the best players ever to set foot in the Cage. He turned the tide of UMass basketball. But when he died racism and ignorance buried his name with him.

We will not let this happen to John. Just as he lives in our hearts and minds he must also live in UMass history!

John Wright was one semester short of graduation. He never received a degree from this University. We believe that the brother and his family deserve something for his dedication and contribution to the sport of Track and Field at UMass.

We strongly urge the UMass Athletic Department to dedicate a memorial in the name of John Wright and that the University grant him an honorary degree.

John has done more for the Track and Field Team than any other athlete in the history of this institution. Both on the field and off John helped this University be a better place to grow and learn. Is this too much to ask for a great athlete and human being who lost his life at the peak of his athletic training?

Note: We would like to commend Coach O'Brian's efforts to establish a University scholarship in John's name.

John C. Wright of Dorchester, Massachusetts drowned August 1, 1983 while swimming at Puffer's Pond in Amherst. He was 21 years old and entering his final year of shool at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst. He was studying Political Science with hopes of becoming a lawyer some day. He was a World Class athlete and a World Class person.

When I first heard the news, I was emotionally stunned. I couldn't or wouldn't believe it. I, like many who knew him kept searching for information about the tragic event. Maybe there was some kind of mistake. Maybe someone had gotten the names wrong or maybe it wasn't "our" John. I searched for newspapers and I listened to the news on the radio hoping that the news would somehow change. It didn't.

I had seen John a lot in his last few weeks of physical life. He had been training for his most recent athletic challenge which was to 'play' for the University Varsity Football Team. He was in great physical shape. He had been working out with Bingo (All-American safety), Grady Fuller, Duck (running back, D. Anthony Grange), and several other members of the football team.

He was supremely confident about his chances of contributing to this year's football team. John didn't go around telling people he was going to make the team. You had to see the look in his eyes and the smile on his face when he talked about his challenge. You know he was very serious and determined to succeed.

John Wright touched our lives in a very speical way. He was, as one friend described him, "a genuinely nice person" who had the trust, respect and love of all the people who came in contact with him. He was a kind of prophet sent to us by God. His mission was to show us all how to love our fellow man and woman. His mission was to show us how to set high goals and then to work really hard to achieve them.

It has been extremely hard for me to accept the reality of John's physical death. He was such a superb athlete that it is hard to believe he could die the way he did. I have put my faith in God, and it is only with God's help that I can accept this reality. We should realize, however, that John is with us spiritually. He will live forever in our hearts and in our minds because he was someone who touched us with his warmth.

John is survived by his mother, father and two brothers. He also left behind many, many friends, coaches and competitive rivals who are better people for having known him. The staff of Nummo News will miss John's many contributions to its' pages. The entire community of Amherst will feel the loss for some time to come. The human race has lost one of its finest persons.

other health care providers are badly needed in Third World communities, he explains. He is concerned with Third World student underrepresentation in fields like computer science, health services and education.

He feels students need to build strong communication skills, especially writing skills. Jones, who cofounded Nummo News and was the *Collegian's*first Black Affairs editor, believes that both Nummo News and the Black Affairs page are good ways to pick up these skills. He also suggests the Black Mass Communications Project (BMCP), Afrik-Am, and the Third World Caucus.

Jones believes that each Third World student should contribute at least one hour weekly to a Third World campus organization. He does not believe extra-curricular activity necessitates poor academic performance. Although all the entering Third World students "are well-equipped to handle college work," says Jones, many of them don't perform when they come to school. He does not feel the University should be " too flexible." Students "should be expected toperform and can if they concentrate on doing their work," says Jones. "They have to get their priorities straight."

Self-determination for the Puerto Rican nation

by Brenda Ling
Nummo Staff

Friday, September 23 was the 113th Anniversary of the Puerto Rican "Grito de Lares" (Cry of Lares) revolt against Spanish domination. To commemorate the historic 1868 battle, a New York demonstration at the United Nations demanded that the "question" of Puerto Rico be included on the upcoming agenda of the U.N. General Assembly.

Independence for Puerto Rico, a US colony, is not simply a "question" to the 1000 people who demonstrated on Friday in support of self-determination for the Puerto Rican nation. The local Comite Lares en la ONU, a committee formed specifically to mobilize for the New York rally, sponsored a bus that traveled to New York from Western Mass for people to participate in the event.

The local group first stopped in Harlem to join a march, called by the Movimiento de Liberacion Nacional (MLN), down 60 blocks to the rally at Dag Hammarskjold Plaza. The lively pace of the march was matched by militant shouting of more than 300 voices, both in Spanish and in English. Chants demanded the island's independence and the ousting of the U.S. military machine before it converts the entire island into one huge naval base for intervention in Latin America; denounced the use of Grand Juries to imprison members of the Puerto Rican independence movement; and asserted that only people's war will win the struggle.

At least 1000 people attended the rally outside the U.N., where speakers and musical groups continued to draw shouts of support and rounds of raucous applause. Individuals working toward and supporting Puerto Rican independence spoke of "the reality of the struggle, or the war, against Third World people, (through) the forced emigration of thousands from the island and educational genocide." Although the U.N. Committee on Decolonization acknowledges the colonial status of Puerto Rico, the U.S. doesn't, so continued exploitation and repression necessitates that the movement be "not just a nice thing to do, (but) essential to the people."

While carrying that committment back home, participants spoke of their impressions of the day. For Steve Coons, of the South African Solidarity Group and the Che Lumumba School, the event began to answer "a long, long cry for independence." UMass School of Education Professor Sonia Nieto had expected a larger crowd at the rally, but she was glad to see more "'non-radical-looking' people, more elderly and working people" giving their political support. UMass Political Science grad student Raul Cotto-Serrano very much enjoyed the celebration, but was disappointed by the low turnout and thinks that the movement needs to grow. Maria Idali Torres, a UMass Public Health grad student and member of the local Comite Lares, said that the event was "a good opportunity for people from UMass to unite with people in New York."

The local Comite, supported by WMLASC, AHORA, NCOCA, New England CISPES, Casa Latina, the Venceremos Brigade and the Springfield Action Committee, will meet again to evaluate the day and to discuss future plans for the group. For now, to stay in touch with events, contact:

El 23 de septiembre se celebra el Grito de Lares, gesta histórico que tuvo lugar en Puerto Rico en el ano 1868 contra la dominación española, y que representa la lucha continua del pueblo puertorriqueño por lograr su independencia; que a partir del 1898 significa independencia de la dominación norteamericana, cuando Puerto Rico fue invadido y occupado por el ejército yanqui. Para conmemorar esta día, se llevó a cabo una demonstración en New York, frente a las Naciones Unidas, con el propósito de que el caso de Puerto Rico sea incluido en la agenda de la Asamblea General de las Naciones Unidas. Para los demonstradores, el caso de Puerto Rico es mucho mas que un simple caso dentro de la agenda, es una cuestión vital e imminente, para el pueblo puertorriqueno, y los pueblos hermanos de América Latina.

El Comite local Lares en la ONU organizo y mobilzo un grupo del área de Mass. El grupo se unio a la marcha, organizada por el Movimiento de Liberación Nacional, que partió de Harlem hasta la Plaza de Dag Hammarskjold, donde se congregaron todos los participantes. Oradores, cantantes y grupos musicales fueron parte de la jornada. La Asociación de Artistas Puertorriqueños en New York, y las diferentes representaciones de diversos sectores de la comunidad puertorriqueña en los Estados Unidos se unieron a la petición de la decolonizacion de Puerto Rico, como punto esencial dentro de la lucha por la independencia.

De regreso a Massachusetts, algunos de los participantes comentaron sobre el evento: para Steve Coons del South African Solidarity Group y de la escuela Che Lumumbra, este día tan significativo comenzó a responder en el a "un largo llamado, por la independencia." Para Sonia Nieto, profesora de la Escuela de Educación en UMass fue muy positivo el ver y encontrar la participación de mucha gente "'que no parecetan radical,' y que son mayores y de la clase traba jadora,dando su apoyo politico." Raúl Cotto Serrano, estudiante graduado de Ciencias Políticas, quien disfrutó plenamente dela celebracion, anadió que "me hubiese gustado ver mayor participación," y cree que el movimiento tiene que crecer.Maria Idali Torres, estudiante graduada de Salud Publics y miembro de Comite loca de Lares, comento que esta fue una gran oportunidad para la gente del área el poder compartir con la de New York.

El Comité local apoyado por WMLASC, AHORA, NCOCA, New England CISPES, Casa Latina, Brigada Venceremos y el Springfield Action Committee se reunirá para evaluar el trabajo realizade y discutir planes futuros. Para aquells que deseen ponerse en contacto con el Comité, pueden escribir a:

Escort service offers security

"Share a Walk" will provide personal, to-the-door company

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

A new form of the student Escort Service called "Share a Walk" is now being organized at the University of Massachusetts. Until that time, students desiring an escort around campus can get on through the Student Security office in the Department of Public Safety.

Abandoning the old designated route service featuring academic credit for the escorts, "Share a Walk" will be an on-call service out of the tower library with paid and trained escorts available nightly from 7 p.m. to 12 a.m.

In response to last week's rape on the outskirts of campus and other incidents, there has been an increasing interest in campus escorts causing the student security office to provide a temporary service anywhere on campus.

"We started getting calls one week ago and have done about one escort per night," said Carol Radzik of the office.

Trained student supervisors with portable radios who partol the campus every night from 8:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m. are always available to escort anyone if there is a need, Radzik said.

"This is essentially an interim plan until a regular service is finalized," she said.

"Share a Walk" will be more of a personalized service than the previous program said Sophmore Paul Earsy, one of its organizers.

"Instead of a fixed route at a certain time this service will conform to the needs of the people. Escorts will go all over campus and will actually go right up to the door," Earsy said.

Earsy said a permanent office with a phone has to be found and a budget has to be approved but hopes it can start in two weeks.

Other than offering student escorts, the Department of Public Safety is also in tackling the campus crime problem.

"We will provide service within our power but we are asking for community participation to advise us and help us follow leads," said Gerald O'Neill, Director of Public Safety.

The Department of Public Safety at UMass employs over five hundred students for means of seurity, either in residence halls, academic halls or on a campus patrol with student supervisors, he said.

"If harassed call us. We are here to help you out," O'Neill said.

Radzik said although the student supervisors are only on duty until 1 a.m., the office can provide service anytime.

"If someone had a special case very early in the morning around 2 a.m. we could handle it," she said.

Budget delays aquisitions for projects, library

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Delay of a 1984 budget for the University of Massachusetts is causing problems in planning and supply acquisition on campus, and these problems are expected by University officials to increase with further delays.

Director of Financial Affairs Paul Page stated in a memo that hold ups in acquistions for the library, maintenance projects and supplies for the Physical Plant and equipment and services for all departments on campus will drive up costs and could prevent department goals from ever being accomplished.

The UMass budget has been delayed, along with all other state college and university budgets, by a struggle between the Board of Regents of Higher Education and the Massachusetts Legislature over control of the higher education budget process. The legislature has recommended a $1.1 million more than the Regents recommendation.

A three-month interim budget granted by the legislature in June has kept the University running, but that money will not last, and "there haven't been any acquisitions as far as new equipment goes," for lack of funds, Page said.

Regents officials and University President David C. Knapp predicted the struggle would be resolved by today or Wednesday, but Page said uncertainty over the expected budget has hampered planning efforts since the summer, and "with each passing day the problems associated with the lack of a firm budget for fiscal year 1984 escalate."

Richard McDonald, business director of the University library, said the library has recieved some money to buy books and magazines, but added, "we've got a lot more invoices than we have money available."

Payments to vendors are being delayed, and "theoretically, if they don't get paid on time, we would have to get back issues and in some cases we might not be able to get them or they would be too expensive," McDonald said.

At the Physical Plant, some maintenance projects are "on hold" for lack of funds, and this may complicate planning, according to Peter Wozniak, director of maintenance. Projects funded in the budget must be completed within a certain amount of time, Wozniak said, and "if we delay using the money we may not be able to use it."

Also, Wozniak said he is "sure we have some vendors who are being held off. They have bid the work and delivered the supplies we've asked for, and they haven't been paid." These vendors "might be a little hesitant about bidding next year," he added.

Page said ordering supplies and equipment in all departments has been complicated by the budget delay, and costs could increase because bids taken in June or July "may or may not hold in November."

Vendors "give us a (price) quote good for 30 to 60 days, and if we don't buy, it's purely up to them," to maintain the price or raise it, Page said. In his memo, Page predicted that "prices will no doubt go up."

Soldiers killed in cease - fire

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The Lebanese army battled snipers in the central mountains and Beirut suburbs Monday despite a cease-fire in the three-week-old renewal of the civil war. Two more Lebanese soldiers were reported killed.

Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan, a Sunni Moslem, and his 10-man Cabinet bowed to the demands of the Syrians and Druse leader Walid Jumblatt and resigned to pave the way for a national unity government.

President Amin Gemayel, a Christian, said he asked the 58-year-old prime minister to stay on "until the features of the new era crystallize, and arrangements to usher it in are completed."

The cease-fire agreement mediated by Saudi Arabia and the United States went into effect at 6 a.m. midnight Sunday EDT, and the army said it was holding generally in the central mountains southeast of Beirut where the army battled Druse and Palestinian militiamen for three weeks for control of the strategic hilltop town of Souk el-Gharb.

But army sources said three militiamen tried to infiltrate Souk el-Gharb about 2½ hours after the cease-fire, Druse snipers killed two soldiers at Kaifoun, less than a mile away, and the troops in Kaifoun fired automatic rifles and .30-caliber machine guns for at least 30 minutes at the snipers 30 yards away.

The government's Radio Beirut reported after nightfall that army positions in the mountain village of Kabr Chmoun were under fire from rocket-propelled grenades and automatic rifles, but the government troops were not shooting back.

However, the radio reported that army troops fired at snipers shooting at them from Shiite Moslem neighborhoods in the Beirut suburbs and that about 20 military vehicles were spotted at sunset headed toward the Druse mountain garrison of Baissour.

In Souk el-Gharb, however, Lebanese soldiers milled about the ruined streets, eating grapes, talking with each other and raising clenched fists in the victory sign.

HAPPIER DAYS — Jimmy and Billy join sister Ruth Carter Stapleton at a Carter family gathering in May. Mrs. Stapleton is reported to have died of cancer Monday.

Reagan requests ' R and R '

NEW YORK (AP) - President Reagan, calling for "restraint and reconciliation" in Lebanon, says the cease-fire agreement worked out in Beirut and in other Middle East capitals "is a critical first step" for the troubled nation.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz said the agreement, announced Sunday evening, would bring no immediate change in the mission of the 1,600 U.S. Marines stationed there.

But, he said, "I think they will be a little more comfortable in carrying that mission out" if they are no longer being caught in a cross-fire between the armies in the Lebanese civil war.

The fast-moving developments in the Middle East became a central theme of Reagan's visit to New York on Sunday. He was here to address the United Nations General Assembly today.

The president spoke by telephone on Sunday with President Amin Gemayel of Lebanon. Reagan was joined in the conversation by U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar, while the two were meeting at the President's hotel suite.

Reagan praised Gemayel's "Statesmanship," as well as the help of Saudi Arabia and the cooperation of Syria, which, he said, have been indispensable" in bringing out the ceasefire agreement.

The Syrians have been supporting the Druse Moslem militiamen who have been fighting the U.S.-backed Lebanese army.

At a brief news conference, Shultz said the mission of the Marines, four of whom have been killed since the renewed fighting erupted last month, "remains important and remains unchanged."

Reagan firmly augments nukes

WASHINGTON (AP) - The government plans to build 17,000 new nuclear weapons and retire only 6,000 old ones over the next 10 years, and nothing President Reagan proposed in his United Nations speech will reduce those figures, the Center for Defense Information said Monday.

In a study on the U.S. nuclear stockpile, the center, a pro-disarmament organization headed by four retired military officers, called the projected increase "excessive," especially in view of U.S. policy to use weapons only to deter the Soviets from attacking.

"If you think you can fight and win a nuclear war, this is a reasonable figure, then this makes sense," said retired Rear Adm. Gene LaRocque, director of the center, which publishes frequent analyses on military issues.

"Even if the Soviet Union strikes us first, we can destroy them and they know it," he told a news conference. "That is an adequate deterrent."

LaRocque said Reagan's proposals, spelled out in his speech in New York, deal solely with stationing nuclear weapons, not with reducing the number in the Soviet and American stockpiles.

He called Reagan's proposals "not very significant" and suggested they were aimed chiefly at reassuring Europeans, uneasy over the forthcoming deployment of new U.S. missiles on European soil.

House opposes prejudice

BOSTON - The Massachusetts House approved legislation Monday to bar discrimination against homosexuals in jobs, credit and most housing.

The vote on the controversial measure was 75-71 and came after more than three hours of debate. Democrats favored it 64-53 and Republicans were opposed, 18-11. All 13 absentees were Democrats, including two who voted for it at a different stage a few minutes earlier.

Rep. Thomas J. Vallely, D-Boston, led the fight for the bill and Rep. Michael F. Flaherty, D-Boston, led the opposition. Flaherty lost, by one vote, and attempt to side track it to the Judiciary Committee, where he is chairman.

Rep. William F. Galvin, D-Boston, sponsored an amendment, unanimously adopted, precluding claims of sexual preference discrimination in evictions or actions that involved criminal conduct.

The debate included several references to the acknowledged homosexuality of Rep. Gerry Studds, D-Mass.

Vallely said he could not predict whether opponents could turn the results around Tuesday, if an anticipated bid for reconsideration is initiated, or if this measure will prevail in the Senate.

"Is it going to pass ultimately? There is no question about that," he said. He said Gov. Michael S. Dukakis supports it. Similar bills have been rejected in other years.

Arline Isaacson of the Massachusetts Gay Political Caucus said this is the first time this proposal has advanced as far as it has.

"It shows that people are becoming more accepting of differences," she said in a brief interview outside the House chamber.

She said this would permit the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination to consider complaints based on sexual preference allegations. She said the bill concerns alleged discrimination in housing, except in two-and-three family owner-occuppied homes, employment and in credit on grounds of sexual preference.

Tear gas guards women

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) - The Israeli army says it plans to arm its female soldiers with tear gas canisters to help them deter sexual assaults.

A spokeswoman said Sunday that 10 percent of the soldiers would receive the canisters on a three-month trial basis.

The daily Maariv said the move was initiated by Pinhas Goldstein, a member of Parliament for the ruling Likud bloc, following an increase in sexual assaults on hitchhiking women soldiers.

814 th dive proves fatal

PHILADELPHIA — Television weatherman Jim O'Brien was a veteran skydiver, jumping once to deliver the opening day baseball to the Philadelphia Phillies, but on his 814th dive, his expertise failed and he plunged to his death.

O'Brien's chute had become entangled in the parachute of another jumper, Doug Sellix of Bethlehem, in a five-man dive Sunday from a small plane at an altitude of 8,500 feet, officials said.

O'Brien, 43, rewarded for his popularity at WPVI-TV with one of the highest TV news salaries in the Philadelphia area, a reported $400,000, fell free for about 100 feet before crashing to the ground, officials said.

While Sellix pleaded with O'Brien to ride out the jump with their lines tangled, the newsman cut his main chute free, intending to finish the jump on his reserve, said Jim Place of Pottstown, who also made the jump at the Hanover Township Airport in Gilbertsville, Montgomery County, at 12:30 p.m.

Detective Joe Donahue of the New Hanover Township police said O'Brien apparently thought that cutting his chute would avoid injuries to either Sellix or himself. But Donahue said O'Brien cut himself loose at about 100 feet — too low to allow his reserve chute time to open.

Gold mining rejuvenates

REDDING, Calif. (AP) — Dennis Morgan and Dennis Hancock have gold fever, got it bad. Their eyes glow and their voices rise with excitement as they describe the new gold rush, a "rush" they're sure is more than a feeling.

"It's the same story that gold's always been, ever since they first found it in California," Hancock said. "I'll tell you, the first time somebody sees a nugget, they're hooked."

These modern-day prospectors are part of the renewed interest in gold, the result of tough economic times that have the jobless as well as the big mining companies seeking the buried treasure.

"You can say there's a gold rush going on, but the results haven't been manifested yet because of the long time it takes to set up a gold mining venture," said Ralph Lloyd of the state division of mines and geology.

More than 110 gold mines are preparing to begin work, which means California could regain the gold-producing supremacy it held more than a century ago.

In 1853, when shouts of "Gold" reverberated through a 300-mile area called the Mother Lode and bounced off the Sierra Nevada, the state produced almost 4 million ounces of the precious metal.

But for the last 30 years, only the Oriental mine in Sierra County has been producing anything of consequence, Lloyd said, leaving California behind at least four other states in gold production.

The big companies that have been working quietly for several years are looking forward to putting California back on top.

Shoppers shirk shell

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — An old military shell that turned up at a flea market attracted some unexpected attention from the bomb squad, when an alert customer noticed the 12-inch-long shell was still live, witnesses say.

Willie Davis, described as a regular flea market salesman, brought an old military shell to the Hillsborough Avenue market on Sunday not knowing it was still live. The shell, nestled in a blanket of red satin on the ground with no price tag attached, was gun-metal gray.

A passing customer who knew about military ammunition spotted the shell and told Davis it could be dangerous, Tampa police said.

The bomb squad was called in; the 80-mm military round was dunked into a safety tank, and then taken to a firing range for detonation, police said.

Tim Glisson, 18, who operates a stand at the Fun Lan Drive-In and Swap Shop with his mother, recorded the whole event on film.

Needs, rights, awareness to be focuses of new team

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

Strengthening community awareness of sexism and of the needs and rights of women are the primary goals of the Women's Issues Team.

The Women's Issues Team, a component of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA), was formed in 1978 when a "minority" of women in SCERA wanted to focus more attention to women's issues and specifically violence against women, according to member Tildy Turchinetz.

In its first year of operation, the team researched violence against women, and later invited the community to participate in the team, Turchinetz said.

The first activist-oriented project was the Sexual Harassment Grievance Procedure, which was drafted by the team and a cross-section of the UMass community. The grievance procedure is a policy which enables sexually harassed individuals to pursue a formal route of action against the offender.

"One of our most important concerns is sexual harassment in one form or another," Turchinetz said.

Other concerns of the team include women's self images, assertiveness training, pornography, and internalized oppression.

Valerie Singleton said she enjoys working with the team because, "It helps me break down the barrier of stereotypes of being a woman, and to be independent and assertive without feeling guilty."

Last semester, the team held workshops in which women defined sexual harassment and discussed means of preventing it, and other women's problems such as eating disorders, and a woman's self image.

The team also set up tables in the Campus Center Concourse in an effort to inform students about media violence against women and sponsored the movie, Killing Us Softly.

Turchinetz said she did not know what the team's focus will be this semester.

"At the end of last semester members wanted to focus on pornography," she said. The team petitioned against companies whose advertisements offended the women on the team.

"It's hard to say whether our focus will be on that," she said.

The direction of the team this semester will be decided at today's meeting at 4 o'clock in room 811 of the Campus Center, she said.

UMasspirg will present new projects at meeting Thursday

By JILL LANG

UMassPIRG, a division of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, will continue its present recruiting drive with more than advertising on the Campus Center concourse. They will hold their first meeting of the semester Thursday.

The meeting will focus on the groups present projects.

There are five of these projects, and Ron Lavigne, UMassPIRGchair, said. "We do manage to keep pretty busy."

The first project is a Grass Roots Lobby, divided into two parts. The first is an effort to gain passage of a consumer utility board. Lavigne explained that this would provide consumers with representation at utility rate hearings.

"Right now consumers are outnumbered something like 8 to 1 at these hearings, and it is only fair that consumers be able to present their side of the story," he said.

The second part of the lobby calls for efforts to gain passage of a solar tax credit bill.

"We want to generate community support through letter writing, targeting representatives, and getting constituancies going," Lavigne said.

The second project is a harzardous waste cleanup, and a follow up on last year's Superfund. New sites will be targeted for cleanup and old sites will be checked to be sure that monies allocated through Superfund are being correctly used, Lavigne said.

The third project is an effort to put caps on sulfur emmissions in Massachusetts, thereby decreasing the amount of pollutants the state contributes to acid rain.

"We would like to achieve this through local resolutions at town meetings asking for caps," Lavigne said.

This project also involves a voter registration drive. Lavigne said MassPIRG wants to confront presidential candidates with the problems of acid rain, and ask them to take a stand on the issue.

The fourth project MassPIRG will take on this semester is ongoing, a hotline consumer.

UMassPIRG's fifth project this semester will be a streamwalking project, one that was continued from the previous two semesters.

This project entails walking or canoeing in streams and rivers, taking samples of the waters, and testing them to make sure that they stand up to environmental regulations. A report from this data is sent to a government agency.

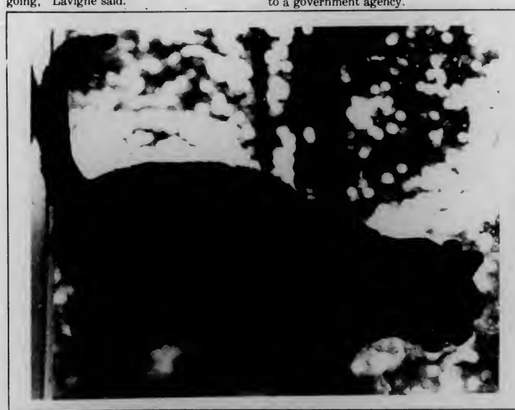
Alleged assaults top report

By MARY ANNE BEEN
Collegian Staff



University of Massachusetts police arrested Brian W. Hurley, a 21-year-old man from Quincy, shortly before 3 a.m. Sept. 25, charging him with assault and battery on a police officer, possession of a Class C controlled substance and betting slips.

Police said the subject was observed accosting females in the lobby of John F. Kennedy dormitory. When a UMass police officer attempted to check the subject's identification, Hurley attacked the officer, repeatedly hitting him on the head. Police then transported Hurley to headquarters.

In other police action:

In a report of assault and battery, five males were said to have approached a female in the Southwest area at 1:40 a.m. on Sunday. The males, according to the complaintant, pushed her and pulled on her clothing. When the complaintant screamed, the men dispersed. The police have a description of the five men.

In another report of assault and battery, a male was said to have been standing in the bathroom on the 14th floor of J.Q.A. dormitory. Police said when the complaintant entered the bathroom, the subject approached her, made comments and pulled on her clothing. The complaintant was able to get away unharmed. The police have a description of the subject.

New exchanges offered

JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachsetts will now be able to study abroad at three more institutions of higher education; two in China and one in Brisbane, Australia.

With the addition of the University of Queensland, in Brisbane, the Shaanxi Teacher's University in People's Republic of China, and the Beijing Institute of Foreign Languages in Peiking, UMass has formal agreements for student exchanges with 36 institutions abroad.

According to Barbara Burn, Director of international programs and coordinator of the China exchages at UMass, the exchange with the Beijing Institute came about "purely by accident."

"While in China, I met some professors who had been teaching at the University," Burn said. "And they suggested I visit the University."

Burn said, "I invited a student to study at UMass, and that was the start of our exchange with the Beijing Institute. You simply must make the most of the contacts that come your way," she said.

Many institutions of higher education are eager for exchanges in the United Sates, Burn said. Here, she said, they can receive advanced training for both faculty and students.

UMass has exchanges with eight institutions in the People's Republic of China.

Burn said the exchange with the University of Queensland was also achieved through a faculty contact.

Lynn Vandien, a retired professor of sports studies at UMass, began UMass-Queensland relations with an informal exchage of one student, and , Burn said, "We decided to follow that up with a broad exchange."

Crampton fire causes evacuation

A fire in Crampton Dormitory in the Southwest Residential Area Sunday night caused an estimated $500 in damage but no injuries.

Keith Doyle, UMass fire prevention officer, said the fire, reported at 10:17 p.m., originated in a trash room on the dormitory's second floor. A smoke detector alerted residents, and two floormates who investigated the alarm saw smoke seeping out from under the door. The residents notified their resident assistant, Jeanne Gonsalves, who opened the door and attempted to extinguish the fire but was driven back by smoke. Gonsalves then pulled the building fire alarm and evacuated the building, Doyle said.

The Amherst Fire Department sent two engines to the scene, and firefighters, wearing self-contained breathing apparatis, put out the fire, using a portable extinguisher from the dorm, he said.

The fire is of suspicious origin and is under investigation, Doyle said. Damages include smoke damage to the trash room, destruction of the two trash receptacles and smoke damage to the elevator lobby on the floor, he said. -Anne McCrory

Hi tech seminar logs on tomorrow

A seminar on "Preparing for High Tech Careers in the '80s" will be held 3:30 Wednesday in Memorial Hall. A four member panel will give a formal talk and discussion will follow.

The seminar launches a series sponsored by the Graduate Business Association of UMass.

Fulbright deadline set for Oct. 17

The deadline for students to apply for 1984-85 grants offered under the Fulbright Program for study in more than 70 countries will be Oct. 17.

Applicants for approximately 670 awards must be United States citizens and hold a bachelor's degree before the beginning date of the grant. Students should be proficient in the language of the host country. Most of the grants provide round-trip transportation, tuition and maintenance for one academic year.

Feminist will discuss responsibility

The series "Writers on Writers and Social Responsibility," a program of the Institute for Advanced Study in the Humanities, will begin Wednesday with a talk by author Adrienne Rich. The speech will begin at 8 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium.

Rich is the author of Of Women Born: Motherhood as Experience and Institution, one of the most influential books in contemporary feminist literature.

Slides portray Central America trip

Today at 7 p.m., there will be an informational meeting and slide show about Berkshire Community College's Central American trip to be held at the end of the year.

The expedition, which costs $1350, begins December 30 and ends January 19, 1984. It will include jungle exploration and visits to Mayan sites.

There will be training workshops in November for registrants which will cover the history of the region, tropical and marine biology, skin and scube diving, and Mayan civilization.

The trip will be led by Berkshire Community College Associate Professor Lawrence Brandstein. Benjamin Kaghan, a University of Massachusetts wildlife graduate student, will be Brandstein's assistant.

Interested students can contact Kaghan at 256-8211 or at 205 Holdsworth Hall.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

We used to think God was a prude when it came to sex, but wasn't He the One who thought the whole thing up? And His imagination is much greater than ours.

Josh was here,

Point

"A lot of people are having sex on this campus, but few are making love." Josh McDowell had the audacity to make such an assumption. Don't we use those two expressions for one and the same thing? Aren't they?

Josh was coming and we had been hearing about it for a long time. Why was he coming, and what did he want? Josh didn't come because he had a problem, or was "disturbed"; Mr. McDowell came to talk about the ever-popular and always-in-demand topic, of sex..."Maximum Sex".

We had a pretty good crowd in the F.A.C. on Wednesday night, but Thursday night there were twice as many. Sure enough, Thursday night we were treated to "Maximum Sex". But Josh didn't demonstrate anything even vaguely sexual on stage before us; I mean, the guy just talked. And boy, did he talk.

Anna Roell

Sex is quite a story for a Christian speaker to tackle. It's a subject most people have become pretty open to discuss and explore, in our modern day and age.

Many people like to think they're very open-minded and liberal in their views on life, and sex is one of those areas. Let's face it, if you're in a relationship with another person, and you really care about that person, you want to express that beautiful feeling.

Maybe we need to take a closer look at what love is and try to measure some of the main ingredients. McDowell said that the two basic ingredients are love and trust. Well, there we are again, right back with that big four-letter word: "love". Love means different things to different people. Josh went on to explain that there are three levels, or degrees, of love; "eros", that's the lower level of attraction where our physical desires are met; we then move up to the middle level, where we're engaged with the "filio", or emotional degree of amour; and finally, "agape" love, spiritual love, God's love, which is a giving love, not expecting anything in return. The unity of these three enriches a relationship and frees people to make love, and not just have sex.

Three degrees may not sound very maximum, but that also depends upon whose thermometer you're using. Those first two levels, physical and emotional, for many of us, could be very easy to fulfill. To be attracted to someone physically is a common thing; there are a lot of good-looking and wonderfully gifted people out there. And to be attracted to someone emotionally,...aren't there quite a few people you can "relate to"? Or, people who you really admire for their personality or intellect? It's okay to love someone because you're attracted to them, and it's okay to want someone because of their personality. But maximum love calls for a complete combination. Now that grand finale of spiritual love might be a little tougher to grasp. Where do we get that from?

You're probably saying to yourself, "Religion, here we go again. If it's not one thing, it's another. And if we're talking about sex, where does God fit in?"

It's true, the Bible does mention God telling Adam and Eve, "Be fruitful and multiply," in Genesis 1:28, and that looks like a good sign for "go ahead". But, as Josh pointed out, "The main purpose of sex is unity, not pro-creation." Our earth has been very fruitful and has multiplied quite rapidly.

Ask yourself honestly, "What am I looking for in a relationship?" Or, if you're in a relationship, "Do I really feel a true unity and bond with this other person?" Are you getting something out of your relationship, or adding something to it? Might there be more?

The Christian groups on this campus had something to get excited about when they knew Josh was coming, more than five months ago. Those same Christians wanted Josh to come, not for their own good, but for the whole of UMass, because Josh had something to share with us. He told us again and again how much he loved his wife and how he couldn't wait to get home to be with her and see his kids. I'm sure he's found maximum sex.

We used to think God was a prude when it came to sex, but wasn't He the One who thought the whole thing up? And His imagination is much greater than ours. Josh brought us this message: God desires for us to have a full and satisfying sex life, but He wants us to do it His way.

The SGA protects students

To the Editor,

In last Tuesday's Collegian a column appeared that attacked the SGA with a number of charges. This is not a new occurence, and I'm sure there will be more. But as the SGA gears up for a new semester, it presents a good opportunity to address the charges directly and to explain a little about issues the Senate will be facing.

The first accusation is that the Senate is supporting issues which have little or nothing to do with UMass students. When the Student Senate chooses issues to work on, we organize around the issues most important to the student body. We find areas that people are the most motivated to work on, and where students can make the largest impact. A major priority of ours for the Fall will be organizing to prevent the implementation of a $20 student fee for renovations to the Curry Hicks Cage. Before selecting this issue we did extensive research to correctly represent the students' views on this issue. This research included both a campus-wide referendum and a detailed survey. Two of the other issues the Senate will address are halting a proposed tuition hike and working to institute an Academic Grievance Procedure. We remain open to new ideas, so if you notice a problem on campus approach the SGA and maybe we can begin to help get the problem solved. If you don't have an idea of your own there is probably something we are working on that would interest you.

The next charge the author presents implies that the Senate is squandering students' money. He portrays a number of erroneous opinions as being facts, with no evidence to prove them. He describes the SGA's retreat as a "subsidized party". If he had bothered to ask, we could have told him what we worked on during our retreat. The SGA decided to have a retreat to struggle with long term problems. When we address these problems we improve our ability to serve students. Some of the questions we debated include: How do we reach more students? How do we get more students involved? How do we structure ourselves to best represent students? When people criticize the Senate with unresearched accusations, it hurts our ability to solve these problems and move ahead. It is harmful to constantly criticize, instead we should work constructively for positive change.

The Budget Act of 1984 is the next victim of attack. Again, the author presents generalized opinions without explaining the reasoning behind them. If there were specific problems or examples articulated it would be easier to understand. As it is written, he complains about "special interest groups". These are not defined, and presumably could include anything from the Outing Club to the Black Mass Communication Project (BMCP). I know from experience that sitting on the Student Senate's Budget Committee is no easy task. There is a myriad of deserving student groups who are underfunded. We do not try to "appease" anyone, but to allocate students' money in the best way possible. I challenge anyone to find a student fee that benefits the student body more than the Student Activities Fee does. We provide student radio station (WMUA), concerts by UPC, speakers from the Distinguished Visitors Series, free legal services, Student Controlled Businesses, and a host of other groups and services. The best way to find out for yourself is to come to the Student Senate Office and look at the budget. I think you would like it.

There is one point where I strongly agree with the author. Elections for the Student Senate are coming up and we need people to get involved. There is a lot to do and a lot to learn. It's usually exciting, rewarding and challenging. If you are interested come to the Student Office at 420 Student Union Building or go to a Senate meeting. The meetings are held every Wednesday night at 7:00 in the Campus Center. If you are not running, find out who is and vote for the person who you think could do the best job representing you. If you don't join the Senate, there are a lot of other activities on campus you can become involved with. If you do, I think you'll find it both entertaining and rewarding.

One final note: If the "Resistance" has begun as the author of that column stated, what are you resisting against?

Chris Sullivan
Speaker, Undergraduate Student Senate

Josh gives us back the same old model: monogamous marriage based on trust which is based on sexual control.

Now he's gone

Counterpoint

I was offended by Josh's lecture on Maximum Sex. Although I agreed with some of the things he said, they were generally buried beneath so much sexist stereotyping of men and women, condescending and very planned humor, and heterosexist assumptions that it would have been very easy to walk out early. I stayed, determined to weight what he said and decide for myself, as he challenged us all to do.

Josh said the "Unity Factor" was the most important reason to have sex. He then said that this sexual oneness was possible without marriage, but devoted the entire remainder of his talk on why we should confine sex to marriage. He told us many times to control our sexual urges so that later we could experience true sexual fulfillment through heterosexual intercourse within marriage. I'm sure that for people who have chosen this course of action, and for those who plan to follow this course because of tradition or in order to fulfill other's expectations (non-choices), Josh was very validating. But for other people who are confronting the challenges of today's relationships, his stale answers to old questions were not enough.

Hugh S. Grogan

Instead of stating that men use sex to cover up problems whereas women want to talk out their problems, why not ask why men are socialized to be noncommunicative and why this stoicism is such an integral part of the male sex role?

Instead of hinting that women who have had sex are like used furniture, why not ask why our society places such a high premium on virginity? Why not ask why some people persist in viewing a sexually experienced women as used...as not worth having? (hint: "having")

Instead of stating that 85-90 percent of sexual problems are not physical in nature, why not ask about what in our upbringing could have possibly instilled in us such conflict and such anxiety about sex that it becomes a feared ordeal?

Instead of relating a student's opinion that "love is surrender, sex is conquest" as an example of conditional love, why not ask about what powerful forces are present in our patriarchal society which keep men dominant and limit them to a conquering role over women in intimacy. The effects of this sex-role dichotimization are conditional love and a fundamental distrust between the sexes but the causes are in the structure of society.

Instead of portraying women with unwanted pregnancies as having been pressured and manipulated into sex and then pressured and manipulated into abortion, why not teach young women to accept the fact that they are sexual beings with wants, needs, and feelings and that these wants, needs, and feelings demand for her to make responsible decisions about her sexuality, i.e. whether or not to become sexually active, and if so what kind of birth control, if any to use.

It may be comforting to some to hear that the boys (with the sex drive like a "sherman tank") are still pressuring the girls (with the sex drive like a "snowmobile"), but I found Josh's scenarios and role-plays depicting the primrose path of dating quite oppressive. When will we realize that images of male sexuality as unpredictably explosive, and women's sexuality as naively titillating are damaging both to men and women and leads to the kind of sexual ugliness that Josh is trying to avoid. By leaving out all other scenarios he attempts to invalidate alternative ways of getting together.

Rather than examining the model which traditional relationships are based on, Josh gives us back the same old model: monogamous marriage based on trust which is based on sexual control. Why should trust have sexual exclusivity as a prerequisite? Can a person love unconditionally and totally trust a person who is not sexually exclusive to that person? The answer is "yes" and can be achieved by redefining what is considered a breach of trust.

Jesus and masturbation were also talked about by Josh; Jesus was given the most attention of all subjects and masturbation was given the least. Jesus was built up and masturbation was put down but I think that if anyone wants either or both in his or her life, they should have it.

Limbo Race: Pop with teeth

NOVEMBER GROUP
HEROES IN TROUBLE
LIMBO RACE
Saturday, September 24
Hangar One

By GERARD COSLOY
Collegian Correspondent

Not enough pop bands with teeth, these days, y'know? Actually there are plenty (Bunnymen, X, Bongos, Violent Femmes just to spew four), but I figure you can't have too many. Like Boston's Limbo Race, who aren't filler, nor do they fit in too well with today's supposed "dance" music...Limbo Race sound better when you're listening (dancing too, 'tho), you won't hear them piped into the Campus Center in the near future.

Pushed by the virtoilic lyrics of singer/guitarist Randy Black, Limbo Race combine somewhat folky vocal patterns (the occasional trade-offs between Black and bassist/vocalist John Niedermeir just barely holding tension in check) with aggressive rhythmic shifts and spurts similar to those of Mission of Burma or the Minutemen, tightly anchored by Niedermeir and drummer Mark Poulin. There's a more than slight jazz structure at work in songs like "Criteria" and "Ina's Song" (the current 45), Poulin's economical cymbal shots fired around Black's generally pissed-off vocals.

Backstage at the Hanger, Randy Black mumbles, "The Rumble has been veddy, veddy good to me." Chico Escuela "humour" aside, "the Rumble" (an idiotic annual 'battle of the bands' sponsored by the equally idiotic Boston AOR powerhouse WBCN), has done little for Limbo Race – winning the 1982 competition might've slightly enlarged their cult following in Boston, but out-of-town, it's another story; 5 months and two strong 45's later, Limbo Race find themselves opening up for the likes of Heroes In Trouble and the November Group – not the sort of thing they'll brag about back home. "Well, I liked the airplane in the roof " said Mark Poulin, perhaps the only member of the band not to be baffled with the Hanger's decor. I suppose it's here where I'm supposed to get all indignant about a great original band being treated like shit by a snoozing audience and a sleeping booking policy, but you've heard it before, right? I mean, wouldn't it be cool if college radio threw it's support behind American bands like Limbo Race and let modern industry worry about "breaking" slop like Kajagoogoo or Haysi Fantaysee (yeah, they are a group, so stop laughing)?

As for the rest of the bill Saturday night, Heroes In Trouble would've gotten a laugh out of me with their leaden cover of Stevie Wonder's "Masterblaster," 'cept I suspected that H.I.T. thought they were

Curfew: A call to action

To understand is to change; And change is what filmmaker Zoe Tamerlis' new project is all about. Much has been written lately about the film in progress - Curfew U.S.A. - but perhaps not enough Political consciousness is something UMass students are renowned for, but without the conscience to act on that knowledge, it is worthless. Consciousness is not an end in itself.

Curfew U.S.A. is a call to action. It follows a young Mount Holyoke undergrad (in scenes to be shot there in the coming weeks) through a literal and metaphorical journey to the heart of Latin America. Producer and star of the film Zoe Tamerlis will speak tonight on the film and it's political stance in Campus Center room 101.

Preceding her talk several relevant films will be screened; Ms 45, the 1981 cult film in which Tamerlis starred; Black America, a powerful documentary about Malcom X; and Listen America, the highly controversial film about this country during the sixties. All three films deal with reality, rebellion and change concepts integral to Curfew. The first film will be shown at six p.m. Admission is free.

The filmmakers are also looking for help in the production of the project, much of which has already been shot in New York and El Salvador. People wishing to be extras or who can otherwise provide assistance should call Sarah at 1-467-9247. The 35mm film boasts a budget of almost 7 million dollars. - Andy Gordan

I've long contended that the November Group, aside from being the biggest joke in Boston, are a grim and humorless bunch; heavy facist overtones backed by a painful syntho-drone. I'm told that this is "dance" music. Huh?

TODAY'S PUZZLE ANSWER

Golfers win season opener

By TOM SCOLLINS
Collegian Correspondent

The women's golf team opened the season on a bright note this weekend winning a three team match at Oak Ridge C.C. in Springfield.

The women linksters were led by their number one player Judy Guzy who shot an 86. Theresa Collins, who Coach Jack Leaman calls his most improved player, shot a 97 to place second.

UMass shot a total of 388, 35 strokes better than second place Springfield. Dartmouth and Amherst were not represented as they are both gearing up for a strong showing at the ECAC's October 8th and 9th at Dartmouth. The next match for the women's team will be October 1st and 2nd at the Yale Invitational.

Runners show improvement

BY M.E. MURRAY
Collegian Correspondent

Kingston, R.I. - The young University of Massachusetts women's cross-country team continued to show signs of improvement Saturday, turning in a number of steady performances here at the University of Rhode Island Invitational.

The ten competing schools fielded a total of 110 runners. Among them was Yale's Margaret Whynn who finished first overall, covering the 3.2 mile course in 18.10.

Co-captain's Maureen O'Reilly and Kim Baker turned in the best times for UMass, finishing 25th and 34th respectively in 19.09 and 19.28. Teammates Chris Pratt, Deidra Doyle and Sally Howes all came in among the top fifty.

Holy Cross, first overall as a team, placed five of its runners in the top twenty.

UMass will travel to New Jersey Saturday to compete at the Rutgers Invitational.

Five collge roundup

Amherst soccer loses, hockey wins

By THOMAS KELLEY
Collegian Correspondent

The Amherst College women's soccer team lost 4-3 to visiting Trinity College on a goal by senior co-captain Karen Orczyk from the corner with 1:45 left to go in the second overtime.

Amherst's record dropped to 0-2, the first loss coming on a heartbreaking 1-0 defeat to Westfield St.

Amherst led 3-2 at 18:07 in the second half when freshman Sara Couch scored for Trinity on a head shot to send the game into overtime.

"It was a tough one to loose," said Amherst coach Michelle Morgan. "It will be tough to get the girls up after a loss like this."

Morgan is still optimistic about her young teams chances for the rest of the season.

"We can beat anyone on our schedule," she said. "I felt we outplayed Trinity today. We lost on a goalkeeping technical error."

Trinity, NIAC Tournament semifinalists last year, played man to man pressure defense against Amherst. Coach Karen Erlandson attributed this to her teams success. Trinity's record is now 2-1, their loss coming to division I Yale.

In other section Saturday, the Amherst field hockey team defeated Vassar 4-0.

Diane Flaherty and Sue Prosnitz had two goals apiece for Amherst. Haley Mason provided speed on the wings to enable Amherst's hit and run type offense to produce.

Amherst is coming off a two week trip to England where it gained valuable experience playing some very talented teams. Coach Susan Zawacki hopes to at least duplicate the 10-3 record her team had last year.

"We have good scoring power," said Zawacki, "but hockey is a game where anything can happen."

Amherst's record is now 3-1, their only defeat coming on a 4-2 loss to Division 2 Keene St.

Smith field hockey undefeated

By JOHN BADGER
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — "She's a great passer with a terrific shot" was the pregame praise Smith field hockey coach Jackie Blei had for forward Paola Prins Saturday. The 6'2" sophomore thanked her coach by scoring a hat trick leading Smith to a 3-1 victory over previously undefeated Williams.

The Smith offense dominated the first half with Prins beating goalie Jean Hakmiller in the short side off of a corner pass at 21:18. The native of Amsterdam scored her second goal at 26:56 on an unassisted blast from 35 feet out that shot between Hakmiller's pads. Prins ended Smith's scoring 17 minutes into the second period placing it over back-up goalie Betsy MacIver's right shoulder from the left post.

Williams applied the pressure during the last ten minutes only to be stifled by Smith's well rested defense led by Martha Kittredge and Liz Mitchell. The wandering tactics of goalie Kathy Linton frustrated the Williams forwards until Alison Fuller snuck behind her and tallied Williams only score of the day at 26:01.

"We've been really good defensively this year" said coach Blei. "We've outscored our opponents 17-5 in 5 games. I'd like a little more goal production from our forwards, otherwise I'm pleased with our play, especially in the clutch. We've performed really well under pressure winning two one goal games against tough teams."

This win over Williams leaves Smith with an undefeated 4-0-1 record.

Australia II wins the America's Cup

Comeback overtakes Liberty; Aussies overcome 3-1 series lead

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Australia II won the America's Cup on Monday, shattering 132 years of U.S. supremacy with a stunning comeback victory over Liberty in the most dramatic finish ever for sailing's most prestigious prize.

The 41-second victory, the fourth-closest in Cup history, brought to an end the longest winning streak in sports history.

The Cup, first won by the schooner America in 1851 and defended 25 times since, was the only international trophy never to change hands.

Now it belongs to the Australians, who ended 21 years of frustration covering six previous challenges by taking advantage of a crucial mistake by American skipper Dennis Conner to win an unprecedented seventh and decisive race.

The victory triggered wild celebrations among Aussie supporters in the spectator fleet on Rhode Island Sound, on the docks and streets of Newport and Down Under, where millions stayed up most of the night to watch it on television.

It also climaxed a determined comeback by skipper John Bertrand and his crew, who feel behind 3-1 and then won three straight races, the last one marking the first time a Cup series had gone as far as seven races.

They appeared out of it Monday, as well.

Liberty, with Conner reading the winds correctly, held seemingly safe 57-second lead after the fourth of six legs on the 24.3-mile course on Rhode Island Sound.

But there were nine miles to go, and the Aussies wouldn't quit in this.

Bertrand found a wind shift of his own, while Conner let the Australians get unobstructed air.

The American lead — and the America's Cup — was gone.

Soccer places second in Cornell tournament

By CHARISSE E. FEINERMAN
Collegian Staff

The night was cold, the spirits were hot, but the games were scoreless during the first night of the Cornell Soccer Classic in Ithaca, New York. After a double overtime struggle between Brooklyn College and Cleveland State ended in a scoreless tie, the University of Massachusetts and Cornell University came head to head in what amounted to an over two and one half hour confrontation which ended in a scoreless match.

Regardless of the empty scoreboard the Minutemen/Big Red game was action-packed. Within the first few minutes of play UMass realized that they had better stay alert when Cornell held the ball steadily near the UMass net.

For the majority of the first half, Cornell posed a threat to UMass. However, UMass rallied back to apply pressure to the menacing Big Red squad. With about five minutes left before the half-time buzzer Cornell's Pat Murphy attempted a shot which was headed away from the goal keeping UMass alive.

Coming back to the field after half-time UMass was eager to rally and score. However, this was not to be the fate of either team for when the end of regulation play was over the scoreboard still read 0-0.

The up and coming overtime periods were fast paced, but still uneventful for goal scoring. So when twenty minutes had ticked away, the game ended in a mutual shut out.

UMass and Cornell then fired penalty shots to determine who would advance to play Cleveland State (the winner of the penalty shots in the first stale mate). With goaltender Donald Donahue in the net UMass emerged victorious with a score of 5-4.

"I hope that we score some goals sometimes," said a smiling coach Jeff Gettler. Showing extraordinary ability in Saturday night's game were senior Lenn Margolis, sophomore Tom Uschok, freshman Paul Sarafino, junior Donald Donahue, senior Frank Neffinger, and freshman Peter Geddes.

"We're a solid team. We all worked hard," said Gettler.

Saturday night's game against Cleveland State ended in a disappointing lose of 2-0. Massachusetts wound up placing second in the tourney, and comes home with a record of 0-2-3.

The first half of the second round game was scoreless. Within minutes UM's Khatami rallied the ball in front of Big Red's net, but was unable to score when the ball hit the post and was taken away by Cleveland State. With 18 minutes left in the game, Cleveland came back to widen the gap 2-0.

"It was a very defensive game," said senior captain Kevin Flynn. "Donny kept us in the game, he made some good saves."

UMass plagued by injuries during this tournament. Senior Mike Runaere, Frank Neffinger, and Donahue have been injured and are hoping to back in the game soon, while Flynn is back from an ankle injury he sustained earlier in the season.

UMass finished second in the tourney after first place Cleveland State. Earning postions on the all-tourney team were Margolis for defense, and Khatami for offense.

The Minutemen play their first home match on Saturday.

Over recruiting wastes talent Players deserve better

By DAN LEBERFELD
Collegian Staff

There is a terrible injustice present in college athletics today. It is called over recruiting.

Big time college football coaches are the biggest offenders. They make too many promises to recruits they can not possibly keep.

"Joe you are just the quarter back we were looking for to replace Steve Jones, Come to Sun Tan University and you will be starting in no time," says coach John Doe to a prospective recruit. Coach Doe also repeats this to five other high school seniors.

A classic example of this is the case of Holy Cross tailback Gil Fenerty. Fenerty was a high school phenom at Jesuit High School in New Orleans, Louisiana. He was heavily recruited by Louisiana State University and he enrolled there.

Unless some injuries occured Fenerty would have little or no playing time over his four years with the Tigers. You see, LSU possesses the best backfield in college football. Sophomores Dalton Hilliard and Garry James are both All-Americans.

Gil got sick of the splinters he was getting on the bench so he gave Holy Cross coach Rick Carter a call and the rest is history. Fenerty ran for 196 yards in his first game in a Crusader uniform. It is quite obvious that there are a lot of mislead players with a lot of talent sitting on benches in places like South Bend, Indiana and Tuscaloosa, Alabama.

For [illegible] the Dallas Cowboys have been looking for a punter to spell quarterback Danny White from his dual role. Finally the Cowboys have found their man and he is John Warren, a punter who sat on the bench at the University of Tennessee watching Jimmy Colquit do the Volunteers' punting. Warren wasn't good enough for Tennessee but he is good enough for America's team.

Two of the University of Massachusetts top gridirons are transfers from the magical world of bigtime football. Starting noseguard Peter Tracy (one of the best players on the team) transferred from Navy and offensive guard Vince Reppert is from Syracuse.

One more example of overrecruiting was the situation at Penn State in 1978. The Nittany Lions had two high school All-American quarterbacks coming in as freshmen: Todd Blackledge and Jeff Hostetler. They were involved in a ferocious battle for the starting job with Blackledge winning. Instead of sitting around, Hostetler transferred to West Virginia where he is now a senior All-American.

Over recruiting is a problem. What is the answer?

The NCAA should incorporate some rules into their books to harness over recruiting. College football needs some talent diversification to lessen the monopolization of talent of big-time college football clubs. It is about time that Penn State stops getting all of Pennsylvania's top players and Temple is given a fair shot. If nothing is done about this problem we are going to see the same teams in the top 20 year in and year out.

New group and new policy combat racism

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Stressing a committment to combat problems of racial harassment at the University of Massachusetts, a working group headed by Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey Tuesday outlined plans to deal with racial incidents on campus.

"Anytime an individual feels threatened...we have some responsibility to address the problem as a community," Duffey said to the group outlining why it was formed.

The group, originally formed last April by Duffey in response to growing concerns by students, faculty, and administrators of the increasing problem of racial harassment on campus, (specifically in the residential areas and in classrooms) presented reports of the progress being made in the area of dealing with racial problems at the University.

John DeNyse, vice-chancellor of administration and finance, announced a new "formal" policy concerning graffiti around campus which includes any "racial, ethnic or sexual slurs."

Under the new policy, which DeNyse said has been an "informal" one on campus for a number of years, faculty, administrators, and students would be able to call the physical plant to remove offensive graffiti.

DeNyse said he did not know what would be done to persons found writing offensive graffiti on walls.

"We just want to get rid of the graffiti as soon as possible and we'll worry about the rest later," he said.

Over the summer, various groups on campus initiated ways of informing the UMass community of racial harassment.

Housing Services sent a letter to all campus residents which said that racial and sexual harassment was not acceptable on campus.

In the new residence hall manual, harassment is defined as "a form of violence; it consists of verbal and/or written invasion/violation of an individual's rights and may be racial, sexual, or personal in nature and may be expressed through graffiti, obscene telephone calls, or other means."

Duffey said the group has done an "impressive amount of work," to help combat racial harassment on campus. But more work still needs to be done, he said.

Police receive mixed reviews from town on peeper

By JULIA MAYCOCK
Collegian Correspondent

Town Manager Barry Del Castilho made a public statement at the Amherst Select Board meeting Monday night commending the actions of the Amherst Police Department concerning incidents of peeping and exhibitionism in a central Amherst neighborhood.

A by-law that would make the act of peeping into property or spying on someone a specific crime was proposed at the meeting as well by Police Chief Donald Maia. The law, which would carry a maximum fine of $200 for each violation, was not discussed by the Board and may be brought before the Town Meeting in October.

Del Castilho said a neighborhood committee's complaints the police did nothing in response to a series of Peeping Tom and exhibitionist incidents are grossly inaccurate. He reported that eight nights of stake outs were tried follow-up investigations were assigned, and arrests were made.

Barbara McGlynn, committee spokeswoman, said Del Castilho hadn't made a proper investigation.

"He hasn't interviewed anyone in the neighborhood. But he has taken the police's word 100 per cent. I don't understand why the town should be taking their word against mine," she said.

On Sept. 19, McGlynn asked the Select Board to investigate the police department's actions and called for an apology. She charged the police with negligence in the cases of sexual harassment and said the women living alone in the neighborhood had been victimized by both the man (or men) who committed these acts and the police department because of prevailing sexist attitudes.

McGlynn said the police did not investigate the scene by asking which window the suspect had been at, did not take fingerprints, footprints, call in the state police dog, or even appear interested. She said the Select Board has not refuted her charges and she still wants an acknowledgement that the police did not act in an appropriate manner.

Lieutenant David Jankowski said 42 incidents have been reported in the last 20 months, 23 of which involved indecent exposure. The average response time was 2.6 minutes, he said, and the police have 10 to 15 suspects.

After June 12, when someone wearing a mask was reported to have entered a residence, Jankowski compiled a list of related crimes and issued a memo to the department outlining action to be taken in the event of a similar crime.

Edith Wilkinson, chair of the Select Board, said some of the perception of negligence may be well-founded from a certain vantage point.

"I think we have a problem with attitudes that have been historical in our society. I would suspect that the police need to work on this just like everyone else in the community," she said.

McGlynn said the police have not regarded the crimes seriously.

"They (the police) have no conception of the intimidation involved. As men they can't understand that threat," she said.

Lights installed on Orchard Hill pathway

By RITA MURPHY

Responding to safety problems in the Orchard Hill residential area of campus, the University of Massachusetts over the weekend installed temporary lights in the area, according to Vice-Chancellor for Administration and Finance, John DeNyse.

DeNyse said the lights were installed in the path which begins at the rhododendron garden behind University Health Services and goes up the hill to the right of the Chancellor's House.

DeNyse said he didn't worry about the cost of putting the lights up because "our main concern was in getting them up there quickly."

Student Government Association co-President Tom Ahern said the lights are "a good start" in making the campus a safer place to walk around at night.

Ahern said the lights "miss a few places," but for the most part are effective.

Ahern said he would "hope to think" the campus is a safer place to walk around at night, but there are "still tons of places which are dark and need lights."

Last week a female was raped outside of Butterfield dormitory in the Central area of campus.

To date no lights have been added to that area, which is poorly lit.

There are other safety measures in the works around the residential areas which include more emergency phones and a paved way for the area in which the temporary lights were put, Ahern said.

Chancellor Joseph Duffey said "we all owe our mutual appreciation to Jack DeNyse for the lights up in Orchard Hill."

U.S. denies black box rumor

TOKYO (AP) — U.S. spokesmen denied Japanese news media reports Tuesday that the U.S. Navy has located the flight data and cockpit voice recorders of the South Korean airliner shot down by the Soviets almost four weeks ago.

"As of this afternoon, we have not found the black box; I'm not waffling on that one," said Lt. Gary Shrout, spokesman for the U.S. Navy in Japan.

But his superior officer, Capt. Heber E. Darton, was less incisive. He said he had been in contact with Washington and 7th Fleet headquarters in Hawaii, and "neither has anything at all to indicate any change in the situation."

President Reagan, asked by reporters in Washington if the United States had recovered the recorders, replied, "I have no knowledge that we have. No."

Alan Romberg, the State Department's deputy spokesman, said "we have absolutely no information that would confirm the Japanese media reports on recovery.' He told reporters "there is no indication that anyone has located the flight recorder and is about to haul it up or anything of that sort."

Navy officials in Japan say they have no direct information on the progress of the search north of Hokkaido, Japan's northernmost island. The U.S. task force reports to the fleet headquarters in Hawaii, the information is relayed to the Pentagon in Washington, and the Pentagon tells the Tokyo spokesmen.

Still shooting in Beirut despite official cease-fire

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The Lebanese army exchanged fire with Moslem snipers Tuesday in Beirut and an Italian member of the international force was wounded despite a civil war cease-fire. The army said rival militias were exploiting the truce to rearm.

Government soldiers shot back at the snipers in the Shiite Moslem Chiyah district of southern Beirut, wounding "several" gunmen, an army communique said.

A spokesman for the Italian contingent of the multinational force said the wounded man was reported in good condition after being struck in a thigh by a bullet. Several Italian positions in the capital are near Lebanese army posts that came under sniper fire.

The United States and Saudi Arabia arranged the Monday cease-fire that curbed the latest round of Lebanon's civil war, in which the army and Christian militias have battled Druse militias and Shiite Moslems in Beirut's southern slums and nearby mountains.

But the army accused the Druse and their allies Tuesday of using the cease-fire to reinforce their positions facing government forces in the central mountains. The army accusation coincided with reports in the Lebanese press that the Druse militiamen considered the truce to be only temporary.

State-run Beirut radio announced formation of a committee comprising army officials and representatives of Christian, Druse and Shiite militias. The committee was supposed to meet Tuesday at the Defense Ministry in suburban Yarze outside Beirut, the radio said.

But a source in the Shiite Moslem militia Amal said the parties could not agree on the location, escorts and security guarantees, so the conference was delayed by at least one day.

Minister of Public Works Pierre Khoury said if the cease-fire held, state-run Middle East Airways would resume operations Thursday from Beirut international airport, which has been closed since Aug. 28.

New Boston tunnel proposed

BOSTON — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis announced his support Tuesday for an ambitious, $2.2 billion plan to unplug downtown Boston's notorious traffic tie-ups with a new tunnel to the airport and a depressed Central Artery.

"Now is the time to fix the Artery and fix it right," Dukakis told a crowded news conference at the Public Works headquarters. "Now is also the last chance we may ever have to get 90 percent federal funding from the federal gas tax money we've all been paying for so many years."

The plan, which was to be submitted to federal authorities by a Sept. 30 deadline, envisions construction of a new below-ground roadway from South Station to North Station with four or five lanes in each direction.

Hampden County may be halfway to economic heaven

SPRINGFIELD — It may not be Vermont, but Hampden County is "halfway to heaven," said an economic forcaster who thinks the area ought to look to Hartford, Conn., for new industry.

A recent report by the University of Massachusetts says the county, which hugs the Connecticut line from the Berkshires to Brimfield and includes the industrial cities of Springfield, Chicopee, Holyoke and Westfield, can best compete with the Hartford area in costs of doing business. And it recommends that the county look down the Connecticut River for ways to further its economic growth.

Most business expansion and spinoffs take place within 25 to 50 miles of the original business, making Hampden County a logical location for Hartford businesses looking to expand, said Samuel N. Seskin, director of the University's Center for Economic Development which prepared the study.

California musician's zapping applauded as "all part of the act"

HUNTINGTON BEACH, Calif. — It was indeed a shocking experience for guitarist John Teasley, known professionally as John T. of the group called McDowell County Line.

"It felt like I was in a giant washing machine," the musician said as he recalled the Sunday night incident. "It put a hem in my dress, that's for darn sure."

The audience, thinking it was all part of the act, cheered when Teasley leaped from the stage and began writhing on the floor at the Blarney Stone bar.

They didn't know a spilled beer had short-circuited an amplifier, sending hundreds of volts of electricity through the musician's body.

Teasley, 32, said that when he realized he was being shocked he tried to call out for help, but, "My voice came out like I was under water."

300-year-old adultery statute applied to Worcester woman

WORCESTER — A Worcester woman goes to court Wednesday to appeal her conviction on an adultery charge, in what authorities say is the second time in a decade the state's 300-year-old adultery statue has been used.

Under the law, married people who have sexual intercourse with people other than their spouses can be convicted of adultery, a felony. Violations are punishable by up to three years in prison, two years in jail or fines of up to $500.

Judith A. Stowell was earlier found guilty of adultery at a bench trial in Central District Court. But a $50 fine was held in abeyance pending appeal and a state Supreme Court decision on the constitutionality of the adultery statute.

Italian cup entry hauled through Palmer while Aussies celebrate

PALMER — While the Australians toasted their victory in the America's Cup, the Italian entry in the yacht races was parked outside a diner in western Massachusetts.

"It was our first time in the America's Cup, but we will be back next time, possibly with a new Azzurra," said Rosella Korner, as the big blue sailboat rested outside Carol's Diner on Route 20.

Complete with tractor-trailer, she stretched 90 feet in length, weighed 96,000 pounds, reached 15 feet 2 inches in height and 14 feet 6 inches in width, including two 90-foot masts strapped to each side.

Nervous robbers bungle heist, leave empty -handed yesterday

MEDFORD — Masked robbers let their nerves get the best of them and bungled an attempted armored car holdup Tuesday, shooting up the truck but escaping emptyhanded, police said.

"They apparently jumped the gun," said Capt. John Keating. "The driver hadn't taken the money out of the truck. When they attempted the ambush, he hopped back in and that was the end of it."

UMass data bank counts calories by computer

By JENNIFER L. CORNACCHIA
Collegian Correspondent

Huddled around a computer terminal not much bigger than a manual typewriter, three people are plucking at keys, gaining access to a data bank which has put the University of Massachusetts' reputation on the rise.

What started as a personal research device for Kenneth Samonds, associate professor of nutrition at UMass, has now turned into a tool used by more than 40 various institutions.

"I started developing it for my own research and people heard about it by word of mouth and started calling me," Samonds said.

The Massachusetts Nutrient Data Bank, developed by Samonds with the help of graduate and work study students, holds one of the largest files of nutrient data composition in the world. Started four years ago with funds from the University's Agricultural Experiment Station, it now contains over 5,000 food entries and continues to grow with the addition of several hundred new entries each year.

"The computer makes inaccessible knowledge accessible to everyone who would want to know nutrition statistics," said Charles Narrow, manager of the data bank.

Within moments the computer can make a detailed analysis of what you ate yesterday, calculating the total intake of vitamins, minerals, proteins, carbohydrates, fats, and fiber in conjunction with the serving size and eliminating the tedious process of looking things up.

"The data bank is an ideal tool for all health care professionals to practice nutritional therapeutics," said Narrows.

Samonds said the nutrient computer brought the University a nationwide reputation.

"UMass is now beginning to be well known in the field of nutritional accessment," said Samonds.

There are over 40 different users of the computer with permanent access to the data bank through the University's Computing Center, where the actual information is stored:

McCall's magazine taps in to analyze the nutritional value of their recipes; Harvard, Yale, Columbia, and Rutgers universities all use the data bank for dietary and menu evaluation and research purposes; and the U.S. Department of Agriculture, U.S. Army, Mass. Department of Corrections, hospitals, research groups, and food companies all have access to the computer, as well as Weight Watcher's Organization which uses it to analyze their prescribed diets.

Dr. Kenneth Samonds, (foreground) assistant professor of nutrition, works on Data Bank used to calculate the nutritional value of food.

Although the data bank is not yet part of any course at the University, it is available for use by Five-College faculty members and students wanting to use the computer for a research project or independent study.

There is a small fee for permanent access to the data bank through the University Computing Center to help support the data bank.

"I wish we could offer dietary analysis to anybody who wanted it but we really don't have the staff or funds to make that possible," Samonds said.

UHS seeks a new director

By LYNN PERKINS
Collegian Correspondent

The search committee for a new University Health Services (UHS) director met last week to discuss procedures that should be followed to find a new director.

The present director, Barry Averill, will be leaving the University on January 1, 1984.

Averill, director of the facility for eleven years, announced his resignation this past summer when he accepted a position as executive director of the Michael Reese Health Plan in Chicago.

At the meeting, staff from the Affirmative Action office requested that the panel keep interviewees confidential, ask them the same questions, and not judge them in a biased way.

Larry Benedict, assistant vice chancellor for Student Affairs and chair of the search committee, said the committee is looking for "a person who is familiar with prepaid group health programs and someone who has broad experience within health services."

UHS director's responsibilities include planning and administering all UHS activities. Averill, speaking to the panel about his perception of the job, said the typical work week is 60 hours.

The application deadline is September 30. After that date, the committee will take two weeks to evaluate the applications, and interviewing will begin in November.

The committee wants to narrow down the total number of applicants to 3-5 candidates, Benedict said. The committee will then make a list of strengths and weaknesses for each candidate and hopefully will select the new UHS director by mid-December. The director will take office January 1.

Robbery delays sports co-op opening

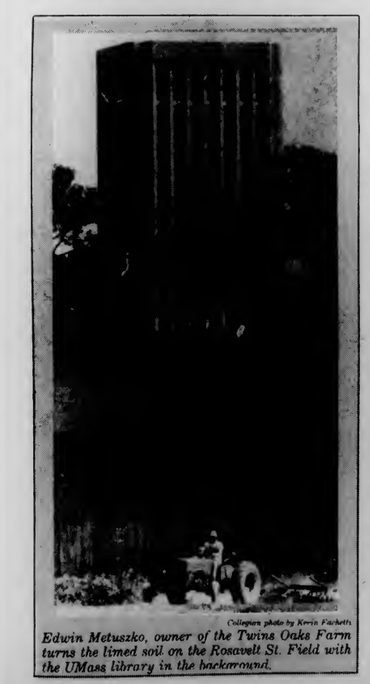
BY JESSICA BARMACK
Collegian Correspondent

The theft of $2300 worth of sporting equipment over the summer will delay the opening of the University of Massachusetts Sporting Goods Co-op until at least November, according to members.

Co-op volunteer Richard Adams discovered the theft last Tuesday when he opened the shop for the semester. Of all the inventory left from the spring semester, only three frisbees remained, said co-op volunteer Dave Fechetti.

Fechetti, who works as the co-op's accountant, said "all kinds of sporting equipment" were stolen. Files in the Economic Development Office (EDO) set the worth of the equipment at $2300.

On Tuesday it appeared that the lock on the door of the co-op had not been tampered with, Fechetti said. Boxes which contained the equipment were empty and dusty, and three ceiling panels were discovered missing. Fechetti said he was not sure whether the panels had been there in the spring.



Former co-op manager Susan Kimlan locked the co-op and turned the key in to the Student Activities Office in the spring and no co-op members have used the store since then, Fechetti said.

UMass police said a report was made in July by a Campus Center security guard, who found the sports co-op door open "a couple of times" in July.

Fechetti said he does not think the stolen goods were insured. New equipment stock will have to be paid for through a loan from the Student Government Association Treasurer's office or the EDO, he said.

In the future the sports co-op staff will have all inventory cleaned out of the co-op over the summer and intersession, Fechetti said.

"Everything will be cleaned out next time," he said. "You can't protect anything you can't watch."

Women's Studies is now a top program

By JANICE CARTEN
Collegian Correspondent

Encouraging other departments to emphasize women's issues in the classroom is a major goal of the Women's Studies Program at the University of Massachusetts, according to one of its staff assistants.

The Women's Studies Program "has met most of their initial goals and their new concern is mainstreaming," getting other departments interested in women's issues, said Dale Melcher.

The program was established in 1974 to provide a vehicle for students who wanted a coherent women's studies program.

Women's Studies has met its initial goals of becoming well established and gaining national recognition, and is now considered one of the top three programs in the country among people in the field, Melcher said.

Enrollment has increased over the years due to more course offerings in the department as well as in other majors.

The program also offers what is called a "component course", which enables students who are enrolled in a course dealing with women's issues to request approval from their professor to use it as a Women's Studies course, she said.

A cross-cultural course is a new requirement of Women's Studies in an attempt to deal with the history and life experiences of women worldwide.

"I think we've made a lot of progress in this area," Melcher said.

"The program is anxious to get a wide variety of students, and recommends people who are highly motivated and have the ability to work independently," said Arlene Avakian, a staff assistant.

Students in the program have a wide spectrum of political and feminist thought and there is much diversity among them, Avakian said.

"Students who have gone on and applied to graduate school have had a 100 percent admittance record," she said.

In addition to providing a strong basis for graduate school, the program also prepares students for a variety of career options, she added.

Women's Studies graduates have gone into a number of different fields including law, teaching, counseling, and writing, she said.

The Women's Studies Committee is currently working on a proposal for the creation of a graduate program in Women's Studies, Melcher said.

JQA room broken into last Sunday

By MARY ANNE BEEN
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts police reported an incident of breaking and entering in John Quincy Adams dormitory shortly after 11:30 a.m. Sunday. Police said the complaintant reported her stereo receiver and speakers, valued at $575, stolen sometime between 3:30 a.m. and 11:00 a.m. There are no suspects.

In other police action:

Police said a person or persons broke into the second floor lounge in Baker dormitory on Monday morning. The subject(s) apparently gained entry through an open window. Ten gallons of paint, valued at $220, and paint brushes valued at $180 were stolen. There are no suspects.

Police received a complaint of larceny at 3:22 p.m. Monday from a student in Dickinson dormitory. The incident, involving the theft of a purse and its contents, apparently occurred between 10 a.m. and 2:45 p.m. The purse contained $10 in cash and a traveler's check worth $50.

A student in Washington dormitory in Southwest reported the theft of an AM/FM cassette radio valued at $160 Monday shortly before 11:30. Police said the student left his door closed but unlocked when he left the room between 11:10 and 11:20 a.m. The complaintant did not see any suspicious persons in the area.

At 12:47 p.m. police responded to a call for help from a student locked in his room in Webster dormitory. After forcing the door open, police escorted the student to the UMass Infirmary for medical treatment.

Activism is alive and well on campus

By CAMDEN PIERCE
Collegian Correspondent

When asked what title she held in the Radical Student Union, Mimi Turchinetz laughed and said, "Comrade!" She added, "Don't print that...Actually we don't have titles in the RSU." Yet she was serious when asked why her union existed.

Though small in size, the RSU defines itself by its leftist stands towards a number of issues. Located around the corner from the Student Government Association senate, the RSU--one half of a room furnished with a desk, a phone, a couple of file cabinets and an old sofa or two--works to change the world we live in.

"The established government has not responded (to the needs of the people)," she said. "The Radical Student Union is for people interested in politics...who see themselves as activists who are interested in pursuing social change and a new political vision."

Longtime member Mitch Gaslin described the RSU as "a vehicle to get people to think...a vehicle to harness energy." Last year the RSU helped to bring Sean Sands, brother of the late Bobby Sands--an IRA member who died after a hunger strike in 1981 in protest of the British presence in Northern Ireland--to campus. They helped fund Alan James's national tour. Alan James is a representative in the British Peace Movement. They have sponsored films and study groups on topics such as racism, United States' involvement in Central America, and women's rights.

Members of the RSU have participated in national occasions such as Martin Luther King Day and the International Women's Event. Last August the organization helped sponsor buses from Amherst to Washington D.C. for the March for Jobs, Peace, and Freedom. The event marked the 20th anniversary of Martin Luther King's speech, "I Have A Dream."

The realization of the dreams of the people who compose the RSU is slow or non-existent. Turchinetz sees the 1970's as marred by the fragmentation of a strong national student movement into "local pockets of resistance." Here, out of the thousands of students at UMass, a maximum of 30 are active members of the RSU.

But in the "ebb and flow" of student activism, Turchinetz looks for a resurgence of radical spirit. This past summer, a core of five to 10 students worked to strengthen the Progressive Student Network. Begun four years ago, the PSN is attempting to form activist student groups around the nation into one front. According to Turchinetz, the PSN wants to "redefine and form a new national student movement...(by) defining the connections between different student groups and building coalitions.,'

Last year about 300 people from around ths nation participated in the PSN's national convention at Kent State University "to find out how people can work together," GASLIN SAID. New plans are in the works for the PSN to convene again at Kent State, from October 28 thru October 30. Since the RSU has access to printing equipment here at UMass, they will be responsible for printing pamphlets about the convention to be distributed nationwide.

'A little bit Opus, a little bit Bill'

Berke Breathed on campus

by MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

Berke Breathed, it must be noted, looks like none of his characters. You almost expect him to, like you would expect the proverbial geriatric poodle-owner down the street to have a Lucille Ball hairdo and half-shaven legs.

He doesn't have the sunken-chested, shapeless body or aviator shades of Steve Dallas, nor a cigarette stuck to his lip; he has the hair and mustache but not the laidback expression of Cutter John, none of the chubbiness of Milo; and he does possess a chin, unlike Binkley. Shoot, he doesn't even have acne like Bill the Cat.

Berke Breathed, it must be noted, looks like a candidate for an American Express commercial, one who'd have to pull the card to show you that the 25-year-old, average-built, good-looking person before you is the creator of one of the most popular comic strips of the decade and of Opus and Milo and Binkley and Steve and Cutter and all of the characters he admits to being a part of.

Well, people, if you've read "Bloom County" lately, you know the funny pages aren't suffering from lack of wit. And if you weren't at the Student Union Ballroom last night, you deserve the scolding Binkley's father is fond of feeding him: "God, you're a weenie!"

The standing-room-only crowd got just what they wanted. Confessions. Sneak previews. Propaganda, (even the good kind), along with Breathed biography and philosophy.

He is one who, by his own admission, never thought he'd end up as a cartoonist, does not consider himself an "artist"--("...art was simply created by the Bolsheviks to confuse the peasants. I'm not an artist.")--and should have been, he says, and still aspires to be, a filmmaker.

He is a fan of SCTV--("naturally they cancelled it")--which doubles him over. He considers television a perfect vehicle through which to study American sociology, especially "Three's Company." He is relaxed, even soft-spoken in person, and by his own admission, "not too crazy about interviews because I simply don't think I'm all that of an interesting person to interview."

Who is this guy? Why does he touch us? Why does he dislike Victoria Principal? And why, most importantly, did he kill off Bill the Cat?

He's a product of the University of Texas at Austin, where he earned a photojournalism degree, a "place I ended up after my senior year in high school. I think my mother did all the applying."

He earned a B average but "liked all the aspects of school except the academic ones." He spent most of his time at the Daily Texan and UTMost, a student magazine, the latter for which he produced an article sparking a hoax of the national press, a hoax which eventually landed him and his sense of humor in jail and in debt. But that comes later.

"Bloom County" started out as "Academia Waltz," a strip he created for the Texan after he'd tried his hand at editorial cartoons which didn't quite seem to skim past the threat of libel.

"Waltz" had many of the qualities "Bloom County" does today; even some of the same characters, but Breathed, who now calls it "just as rank and uneven as many college strips today" became somewhat of a celebrity at UT, writing, taking photos, and illustrating for the two publications. It was a period in which he found it "healthy to get the celebrity stuff out of my system."

Always "down at the Texan looking for something weird or new to do," Breathed and a friend came up with a bet that cost him many dollars and area real-estate developers almost $20 million in property values. Ten dollars said Breathed couldn't fool the local press.

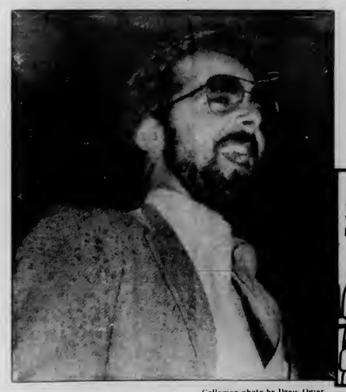
"We published this report in UTMost that said there were live alligators in Lake Travis. Well the national press picked it up from the local wires who believed us, and when they found out it was me I had my phones tapped and my apartment raided and searched twice. This, of course, created a scandal where people started pulling their boats out of the water and moving off the land, so they finally came after me," Breathed remembers. "I won the bet though."

"Academia Waltz" progressed to an early form of "Bloom County" he did for the Washington Post Writer's Group, which now syndicates his strip.

There are other Lake Travises in Breathed's past, lurking under the surface--he once included in his strip his girlfriend's mother, for instance, too-accurately drawn and portrayed as screaming, "Can't I at least remove the hair from your lip?" to Bobbi Harlow; the time he portrayed Betty Crocker in what was considered a less than desirable light General Mills threatened to sue...

Breathed is, indeed, a part of everything he writes; both pseudo-machoman Steve and his Twinkies-for-brains "chick" Quiche Lorraine are based on actual fraternity and sorority members at the University of Texas; Binkley's anxieties are resurrected Breathed fears; and Milo, Breathed says is "the yellow journalism side of me, the sensationalist reporter", and Opus. Well, Opus, Breathed says, is Opus. Breathed seems almost not to know quite how to identify with Opus--he's still developing.

Breathed, for now, has plans. "Bloom County" is making, but a new book will be added to his first one, "Bloom County"--the name of it is 'Toons for our Times' and is due out in April. Breathed was recently in the news for doing what only one other cartoonist has ever done in the history of the business--retaining complete syndication, marketing, and trademark rights to his strip.



He is awed almost by his fame, and thinks of himself as simply a person who sits in his office in Iowa City and creates "Bloom County."

Last night's lecture by Berke Breathed, creator of the comic strip Bloom County, launched this season's series of speakers sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP) at the University of Massachusetts.

"The DVP is an organization funded and operated by the undergraduate students at UMass in order to stimulate thought and keep the University community sensitive to the world in which it exists," said David Falk, DVP treasurer.

DVP funding comes from the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF). This year's budget amounts to approximately $27,300, or $1.50 per student, said Mark Zuckerman, the program's co-chairperson.

With these allocated funds, the DVP also sponsors the Martin Luther King Week and the International Women's Week each year, which costs approximately $5,000 per event, Zuckerman said.

"Because of these added expenses, it is very difficult to get big name speakers to come to the University," he added.

The DVP has been in existence since 1959, presenting such diverse speakers as Art Buchwald, John Dean, Bob Woodward, Bruce Ritter, Robert Kline, Jane Fonda and Vincent Price. "Popular personalities such as Vincent Price and Robert Kline cost between $7,500 and $10,000," Zuckerman said.

The DVP committee meets early each semester to discuss several possibilities for future speakers. Committee members consult with several different agencies in the New York and Boston areas in acquiring various speakers, Zuckerman said.

Speakers scheduled for this semester include Attorney Richard Horrow, from Miami, who will speak on violence in sports Nov. 7. Seymour Hersh, author of the bestseller, The Price of Power, will critique Henry Kissinger and the Nixon administration on Nov. 17, and feminist Betty Friedan, co-founder of the National Organization of Women and author of The Feminine Mystique, will speak on her new novel and her changing attitudes towards the women's movement on Dec. 12.

The DVP is trying to get one more speaker for this semester's program but has not made any final decisions to this date.

Horrow and Friedan will both speak in the Student Union Ballroom and Hersh will speak in Room 101 of the Campus Center. All upcoming events are free of charge to the public.

The DVP is looking for interested students to help plan next semester's schedule within the next few weeks. Any questions concerning recruitment and/or events should be directed to the DVP office located in Room 415 of the Student Union.

The Boltwood Experience

Steven K. Geiger

Steel bars. Rows of hard beds. Strait jackets. Screaming. Urine. Seclusion. Irrationality. A dirty picture. Inhuman. I would imagine that many people have at one time or another shared with me these impressions as to what it is like in a "mental hospital", "loony bin" or "funny farm". Bits and pieces of movies, news stories and books combine to form such images in our minds. Also, childhood fear of the unusual, the unknown is expressed by rejecting, mythologizing, stereotyping. As adults, we begin to tear away the offensive and belittling stereotypes. Because the mentally and physically retarded are not accomodated in most of society, they have never been a part of my life; I have never really thought much about state schools. Aside from seeing a few negatively labeled "retarded" individuals in my grade school system, I never had any personal contact. Because our fiercely competitive market society emphasizes the young, rich and glamorous,--those images that sell--the aged, poor, and disabled are often pushed aside.

For three years here at UMass, I never paid much attention to those flyers around campus promoting a "Boltwood Project" at the Belchertown State School. My interest was finally stirred to action after a couple of friends shared with me their fascinating experiences in this program. I decided to give it a try and enter the world of the "institution". I went to an introductory meeting and then joined one of the many social interaction/exercise programs; "Special Olympics".

I was surprised that so many people (150 or so) had signed up as volunteers (with a two credit option). At the first initiation seminars we were introduced to the doctors, psychologists, lawyers, and resident workers of the school. After a few of these seminars, my group was ready to meet the people we would be working with. There were ten or twelve fellow students in the "Special Olympics" program, organized by two others. We were to work on a one-to-one relationship all together in the same room to allow interaction.

The first night, having arrived by bus, we proceeded toward one of the residential buildings. We were all a little nervous. What am I going to encounter? What will I say, how should I act? Indeed there was some "screaming", a sanitized odor, and some very different-looking people. We met our "clients". Many were in wheelchairs, many were not. I met John (not his real name). "Hi John, I'm Steve. It's good to meet you!" Does he understand? He looked at me, then away, then back at me. He began to walk around. I was to accompany him to the recreation room where all the others would be and we would begin our program.

We did exercises, threw balls to each other, talked with each other. Most people were able and willing to participate, but John seemed content to sit alone and observe. I didn't know whether he could understand my directions and suggestions at all, or he could understand but did not want to participate, or he could understand and was unable to participate due to lack of muscle coordination. I became a bit frustrated, even though it was only my first meeting. I knew that I shouldn't expect anything to change after only a few hours out of this persons' long life, but I was eager to create some understanding between us anyhow.

For our second session, a week later, we were going to walk to another building and join some of the other groups for a party. When I went to get John to come along, I was surprised by his reaction: He took my hand and started along. I felt that this was an indication of trust. At the party there were fifty or so people dancing, talking and smiling along with the music from the guitar players. John sat right down next to the musicians and rocked to the tunes while observing everyone else. As John was to act this way often, I took the opportunity to go around and meet the other people. Any doubts that I had about the value of the program were dispelled by the smiles and laughter around me. It was a warm feeling.

John being a slow walker, we trailed behind the others on our return to the main building. We were alone in the quiet night, walking hand-in-hand. I thought of how we were worlds apart and yet together in a simple bond of humanness. What could he be thinking? Is he thinking? How does he perceive things? What does it mean to be "retarded"? "Well, John, that was a fun evening wasn't it? The music was great and everyone was dancing . . ." John smiled briefly and then we continued in silence.

And so why was this program called "Special Olympics?" Because throwing a ball in a barrel can be an olympic feat for a person confined to a wheelchair and unable to control his/her muscles. Because knocking down a couple candlepins with a bowling ball can be an olympic feat for someone unused to any exercise, used to sitting in a room all day, and unable to go out to the town alleys. Because having a party with music and singing and friends to share can be an olympic feat for someone who must bear the oppression of a 24-hour communal living situation. Imagine what it would be like restricted to a dorm floor for twenty years!

We all have difficulty at times communicating; even with friends and family. We all have times when we are lonely. We may wonder at times what it is we are learning. If you join the Boltwood Project at Belchertown State School you will have the opportunity to learn about communicating as never before. You will have the chance to befriend someone who may be lonely. You will have the chance to learn about yourself. And that is a most important point: It is they who are teaching us.

Paranoia - how real is it?

Every year since I have been at UMass, there has been at least one reported rape case on campus. Every year the Collegian writes a lot of articles about rape and rape prevention. And every year people complain that there is too much time and talk spent on the issue of rape.

Miriam Zoll

Then, what usually happens, is that instead of talking about how we should all try to stop rape and other crimes of violence against women, people end up talking about how women "overreact" when they hear about a rape on campus. A lot of men complain that women become "too paranoid," and walk around thinking that every guy they see is a potential rapist. What does "too paranoid" mean, anyway?

If being afraid to walk alone at night, or always looking behind you to see if there is anyone following you is "paranoia," then most of the women I know at UMass, myself included, are paranoid. (By the way, Webster's Dictionary defines paranoia as being"characterized by oversuspiciousness...or delusions of persecution".)

I think that most women, either conciously or unconciously, live with a certain degree of fear every day. But I don't think women consider this fear as a "paranoia,"or "delusion of persecution," but rather, part of what it means to be female in our society.

It's hard not to be afraid when you keep hearing or reading about the increasing number of rapes, not necessarily on campus, but in the United States in general. Recent studies on rape suggest that over 50 per cent of all rapes are committed in the home, and that more often than not, the rapist knows his victim and plans the rape.

In the past,many people used to think that rape happened only late at night and in dark, isolated places. But women are now learning that rape can occur in the early evening, like the rape reported last week near Butterfield dormitory, or in public places.

Remember the New Bedford rape case last spring, when a 21 year old woman was gang-raped by five men in a bar while the bartender and some of the customers watched, and some even cheered? Or, how about the 13 year old girl in St. Louis,who waded into a fountain where children were playing and was raped for forty minutes by two youths, while several adults stood nearby and watched?

People used to think that whores or"sleazy women who asked for it" were the only women who got raped. Today any female,regardless of color, class or age, can be raped. In fact, the youngest rape victim ever recorded was a two-week old infant, and the oldest known rape victim was a ninety-three year old grandmother.

So, when you see young girls and women learning self-defense, listing only their initials in the phone books, or locking their doors when they're home alone during the day, they're not "overeacting." They're just trying to live as normally and safely as they can, without becoming"paranoid" in the truest sense of the word.

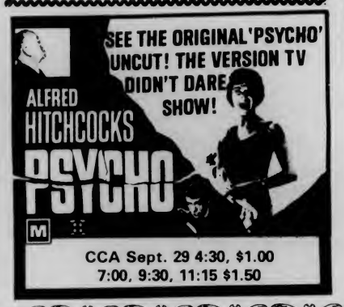
It's demonstration time!

To the Editor,

On Thursday, September 29th, at 12:30 p.m. in front of the Student Union, the university community will have the opportunity to protest university complicity in the arms race. All of this week and next, the second largest defense contractor is meeting on the 9th floor of the Campus Center. The United Technologies Corporation (UTC) is the leading supplier of jet engines and helicopters for the military, and is currently working on numerous military projects including the MX, Minuteman and Trident III missile systems as well as the Trident nuclear submarines.

Last year UTC was here on campus to work on what was rumored to be classified as defense related projects. Speculation increased when it was reported that UTC chairman Harry Gray and former UTC president, former Secretary of State and current UTC consultant Alexander Haig quietly arrived here at UMass to visit the chancellor and attend a UTC banquet. We from the coalition sponsoring the rally demand that all university business with UTC be terminated and that they leave campus. We also demand that all contracts that the university has with the defense department be made public so that the business of the university can be decided by us all.



This rally is a chance for students and other members of the university community to have a real impact on the university's role in the arms race. People from corporations such as United Technologies are extremely security conscious, and enough student protest will undoubtedly cause them to terminate their visits to this university. We must, beginning Thursday, show them that we are serious in our demands for peace. See you at the rally!

Jett and Ford improve their bad reputations

BY YANETT PENA
Collegian Staff

Long before the Go Gos "got the beat", a teenage all-girl band from L.A. was formed by infamous record producer Kim Fowley. That band was the Runaways.

Apart from the initial hype resulting in their raunchy jailbait image, the Runaways were never given the chance to make much of a public impact, even though they were as authentic a rock'n'roll band as their male counterparts. Mismanagement by Fowley as well as internal strife led to several member changes, and after a five album career, the "party" was over.

All was not lost however. One year later ex-head songwriter, leader and gum chewer Joan Jett laid off the booze and drugs, picked up her guitar, formed the Blackhearts and the rest became history. Little was heard from the rest of the band (o.k. singer Cherie Currie did cut an album with her sister and co-starred in two movies, but they were lousy anyway) until last year, when Lita Ford, former buxom blonde Runaways' lead guitarist, recorded with English punk band the Stepmothers.

Now both ladies have released new albums — a solo debut by Ford and the third album by Jett. But if you're looking to find similarities between the two, don't bother; whatever musical interests they once shared have long dispersed. While Jett stuck to the spunky "bad girl" image playing basic rock'n'roll riffs, Ford has adopted a sexier look (i.e., black leather outfits, fishnet stockings, thigh boots, etc...), and a harder rock sound.

Out for Blood is an impressive first album by Ford, considering how much her talent was stunted in the Runaways due to a lack of original material and limited vocal talent. On this album she emerges as a competent songwriter with a more-than-able voice (the singing lessons helped, of course).

The opening title track and others, including "On the Run", "(It's Just a) Feeling", and the album's powerhouse, "Black Widow" all prove two things: Ford's lyrics are not too memorable. They focus primarily on lost love, unwanted love — you get the picture; but this lady, who was featured in the August issue of Guitar Player, knows her instrument and is not afraid of a few blistered fingertips.

The reverse goes for Joan Jett. She may never be a guitar virtuoso, but there lies the difference between her and Ford; Ford is a more refined musician, whereas Jett is a tough, sweat-drenched performer. Her latest, Album, is the weakest of her three records, but it still contains that raw gutteral cry of bad vocal chords, singing about love and injustice, that makes Joan Jett what she is — a hardcore rock'n'roll fan.

The problem with Album is that it features too many anti-climactic songs. "I Love Playing with Fire", "Coney Island Whitefish", and even the single "Fake Friends", start out with a punch but end with a slap. They're not bad compositions, but they don't live up to their expectations.

What saves many of the songs are Jett's lyrics, where she is at her best either insulting someone, as in "Coney Island Whitefish"—

Scumbag, scumbag you don't leave well enough alone. Scumbag, scumbag, you're the biggest fool I've ever known or shouting obscenities on "Handyman"—

It's late at night, and I've been waitin'. I'm sick and tired of masturbatin'.

Album is an honest effort by Jett, but it's not enough to help her gain the respect and recognition she well deserves.

Peruvian women focus of lecture at Smith College

by DIANE LANE
Collegian Correspondent

Poverty and frustration are two causes of family violence and widespread depression in Latin America, according to Dr. Carmen Pimentel Sevilla, a Clinical Psychologist at the University of San Marcos in Lima, Peru, who spoke at Smith College Tuesdsay.

After ten years of research in the "barradias" (slums) of Lima, Peru, Sevilla has emerged with a portrait of Peruvian women and their families.

"The majority of Peruvian women are seen as having dependent personalities due in part to years of domination by men of their own social class," she said.

"This dominant/dependent relationship is complicated by the division of society through social classes. The dual domination, both of men over women, and of men and women by persons of upper class backgrounds leads women to a position of repression that is imposed outside their will," said Sevilla.

According to Sevilla, the system of ideas and attitudes that come from within the behavior of the individual and groups permits domination as if it were "NATURAL."

Sevilla's work in the barradias has led her to believe that the family violence which is prevalent in that society is based more on frustration born of poverty and years of tradition than on any inherent sexism.

In her role as a psychologist and teacher Sevilla has lived in the barradias among these communities for ten years. People come to her for help most frequently due to recommendations by the schools when a child is perceived as having behavioral and emotional problems.

Sevilla said she ususally finds that the problem is within the family structure and prefers to deal with both the mother and father, although usually the mother comes to the clinic alone. When the husband is not able to come to the clinic because of his work hours, Sevilla goes to the home.

"I go to them as a human being, not someone in authority." she said, "These people respond well to explanation and teaching."

In the case of battered women, Sevilla explains to them that they "receive" the abuse. Their basic assumptions and life experiences have not taught them that there is any alternative to this battering. Once it is reframed for them, she said that women are very willing to resist.

For the men, Sevilla said "machismo" is a defense against the helplessness that their poverty causes them to feel. "Life in the barradias is a one dimensional existence, living in shacks with no running water, no bathrooms in the home and as many as twelve people sharing one bedroom. They sleep in turns," she said.

Sevilla was brought to Smith by the Institute of Policy studies which sends Peruvian women to lecture at college campuses. She will continue her work in Lima upon her return.

"I work with the people to find solidarity with the poor," Sevilla said. "What is our task in this life? "We are only here for a short time."

Checklist for black voters in 1984 elections

By NORMAN HILL
Special to Black Affairs

We are one year away from the 1984 elections, yet the Presidential campaign is already in full swing. October brings with it the AFL-CIO's decision about which of the Democratic Party candidates will get the labor federation's endorsement.

It is also the month in which Jesse Jackson will decide whether to throw his hat into the ring and run in the Democratic primaries.

The forthcoming political year will pose important choices for black Americans, who more than likely will play a pivotal role in the selection of the Democratic Party's nominee for President, and in the ultimate outcome of the 1984 elections at the national, state, and local level.

The black vote will prove to be decisive in elections in the Midwest and South, areas with a high concentration of voting age blacks, which are essential to the success of the Democratic Party. The significance of the black vote is underscored in the following statistic: in 1980 there were more unregistered black voters than Ronald Reagan's margin of victory over President Carter in 12 states. These states — Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Kentucky, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Mississippi, New York, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia — accounted for a total of 138 electoral votes out of 538. In a somewhat closer election, as the 1984 race promises to be, this solid bloc of states will prove to be the difference in the outcome.

The obligation of black Americans to participate in the electoral process is clear. What today may be less clear is which candidates have earned black support.

What should black voters look for in assessing who from the current field of candidates best answers the needs of black Americans and all working and poor people? Several vital policy positions should be a part of every black voters issues checklist for evaluating candi- .es in 1984:

How does the candidate stand on the issue of jobs programs?

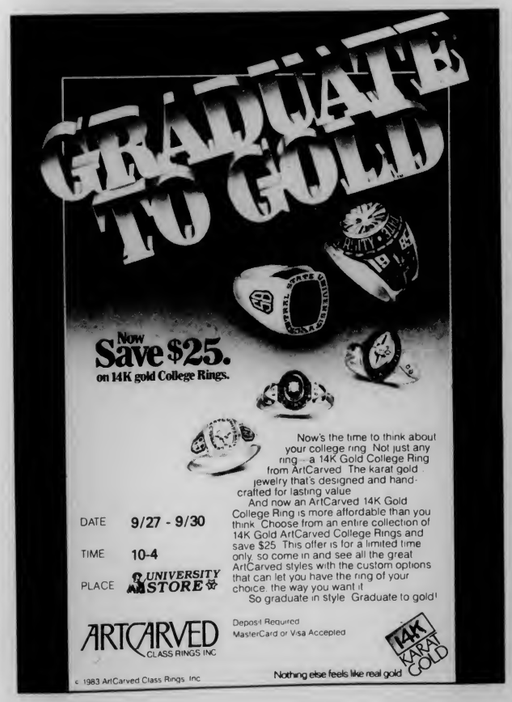
What is the candidate's position on industrial revitalization?

Does the candidate support protecting our nation's industries against unfair foreign competition?

Does the candidate have a strategy or program for reducing poverty?

What are the candidate's attitudes with regard to the labor movement?

Clearly, the above is not an exhaustive checklist. Black voters will also be focusing on such matters as a candidate's experience and electability. Yet the above checklist is a good yardstick by which to measure the many candidates competing for the black vote in Presidential primaries and in state and local races throughout the nation.



The 1984 Presidential campaign will be crucial for the black community. There is every indication that black voters will be voting in higher numbers than ever before. Many candidates will attempt to win black and white votes by resorting to slogans and rhetoric.

However, if black voters use their franchise wisely, as they have in the past, they will once again have an opportunity to reward their friends and punish their enemies. The above checklist can help in determining just who those friends and enemies are.

Soccer seeks revenge against Brown today

Susan Bird fights for the ball with a player from Plymouth State earlier in the season. The soccer team will take on Brown on Boyden field today at 3:00.

by ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

There will be one rough and aggressive match (at 3:00) today at Boyden field when the 4th ranked University of Massachusetts women's soccer team looks to keep an undefeated record (against 13th Brown University) and get a little revenge at the same time.

After being handed an "embarassing defeat", as Coach Kalekeni Banda called it, 3-0, on Brown's home turf last season, he said the team "won't let it happen again."

"The girls want to do a number in this game. They really want to do well."

The Minutewomen will have to do well without the services of top player Debbie Harackiewicz. The sophomore forward is out for at least the next two games because of a fractured nose suffered at the SUNY-Cortland tournament last weekend. Without Harackiewicz, UMass could run into some problems due to lack of bench strength. The Minutewomen will be relying on the experience of the team to lead them to their victory.

On one hand, Brown has 14 freshmen on the team. On the other hand, five or six of the returning players are All Americans according to Banda. But a team cannot rely on only a few experienced players.

UMass, on one hand, starts all of its returning players except for freshmen goalie Lisa Ellis. On the other hand, UMass will be in trouble if any of those starters get injured.

"It's going to be interesting," Banda said. "Our defense has to be at its best. We need to control the game. Last time they were controlling the game. We were hurrying and lost our composure.

"But maybe with our experience and their inexperience, maybe we can do something."

Two Brown players in particular, Banda noted, are to be watched, but not tagged. Umass will be keeping watch out of the corner of its eyes at midfielder Gretchen Orr and halfback Colleen Oday.

"We met the best players this weekend (at the tournament) and we didn't mark anyone. We forced them to play our game and we have the upper hand. I want to force them to mark us if possible."

Old UMass has last laugh, eee-I-eee-I-o

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

Some Hah-vad people can be so pretentious and you gotta love it when this elitist attitude comes back and makes them look stupid.

In the football preview of the UMass—Harvard game in the school newspaper the Harvard Crimson, the sports editor tried to make UMass look like Old MacDonald's Farm, noting that "a goat and two cows were among the spectators when the Harvard baseball team split a twinbill with the Minutemen in April," and that "Amherst is only slightly more exciting than Ithaca."

After he got the manure-slinging out of the way he began to show his football ignorance.

"The Harvard football team is ready to blow the world off its feet," he wrote. "If the Crimson score early this could be a laugher. It's hard to picture a UMass victory."

Please. Playing favorites is one thing but I doubt the Harvard football team, despite their 43-14 win over punching bag Columbia in their opening game, is about to blow the world off its feet. One win over a lousy team and this guy is ready for Nebraska.

The Crimson didn't score early and while the first half was definitely a laugher, UMass was doing all the laughing with a 21-0 lead. No, it wasn't hard to picture a UMass victory. It was in all the papers, a 21-7 win for UMass. It was even in the Harvard Crimson.

There may have been a goat and two cows among the spectators at the baseball game at UMass last spring, but wasn't there a writer gagging on his tie in the Hah-vad press box last week?

Sophomore tailback Frank Fay, who replaced Duckworth Grange as starting tailback, ran for 91 yards on 19 carries and one touchdown against Harvard before he left the game in the fourth quarter with an eye injury. He is expected to be ready for Rhode Island this Saturday at Alumni Stadium.

The UMass offensive line, whose competence was questioned after the 17-0 loss to Holy Cross, came away with a big game against Harvard. Mike Briggs broke into the starting tackle spot with a good game against Holy Cross and coach Bob Pickett sees the improvement in the trenches.

"We improved drastically in one week. We must continue this improvement," he said. "I feel the greatest improvement we showed was in our poise and intensity."

Homecoming is this Saturday against Rhode Island and scores of Alumni are expected to attend the game. The main attraction could be the Alumni Budweiser Beer Tent, sponsored by Alumni Affairs. The tent is located at the north end of the Stadium and will be serving cold brews throughout the day. Pay them a visit and see some friends who graduated. The tent is open to anyone 20 and over with an I.D.

Tennis rides hot streak smokes Springfield 8-1

By ARIEL FOWLER
Collegian Correspondent

It was a smoke show for the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team as they took an explosive eight to one victory over Springfield College (Monday) at NOPE.

The singles players handily defeated their opponents while the doubles teams closed in at the net forcing their opponents to play timid, defensive baseline doubles. UMass had good concentration, placement and consistency.

Number one singles player, Lil Sullivan used fine finesse and placement as she overcame Barbara Jaworski 6-2, 6-0. Freshman Ann Tauger spun out a 6-3, 6-1 victory at number two singles. Anne Marie Mackertich displayed patience and control as she shut out Megan McDowell 7-6, 6-2 in the number three position. As number four singles player, Diana Biagioli stroked her way to a 6-3, 6-0 win over Joanne Ruggerri, Trish Sullivan (5) swept past Chris Lopez 6-3, 6-1.

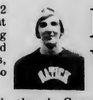
"I got it together and had more control over the ball in the second set", said Trish.

Karen Kranick's (6) combination of crackling serves and powerful ground-strokes led her to a 6-4, 6-1 victory over Ann Gilchrist.

In doubles action, Maureen Hanlon and Marie Trary (1) disposed of Holly and Lori Smith 6-3, 6-3, and the number two doubles team of Jill Nesgos and Laura Morgan breezed by with a 6-0, 6-3 win.

"Having never played together we did well", said Nesgos. "We were tentative in spots but had a positive attitude which led to offensive playing". Joyce Girasella and Lisa Corbett (3) played a good game of doubles but lost 4-6, 3-6 in a hard fought match.

"The team played well", said UMass Coach Pat Stewart. "I expected them to win".



They will continue working hard as they gear themselves up for a tough match today at New Hampshire.

It's hard to accept defeat after 132 years of winning

Russ Whinnem

It had been 132 years of domination. 132 years of winning, of not knowing what losing was like. In 25 challenges spanning almost 13½ decades, the Americans had never tasted the bitter side. Never, that is, until a small group of Australians chose to bury a very long tradition.

These Aussies had come to town with their secretive winged keel and a belief that this was a very special year. But it was supposed to end here, with only a belief. This was America's sport. It was America's championship. The name attached didn't read World Championship or World Cup. It read America's Cup. That said it all.

It was eight days ago and everything was according to schedule. A 3-1 series lead with one more win sending Australia home. It was a cinch. A couple of days and these pretenders to the throne would be gone.

Then came the comeback. Two consecutive and unexpected wins for the Aussies. Their boat was showing the awesome speed it was supposed to have, but still everything would be all right. So what if some papers were saying that Australia would be the favorite boat. The money, the Cup, was on the line and you knew skipper Dennis Conner's crew was just baiting the Aussies, toying with them until the pressure was on.

Now, with a 57 second lead and only nine of the 24.3 miles left, everything really was okay. The Cup would still stand in the American trophy case.

Something was starting to happen, though. Conner had noticed that Australia was picking up speed. He tried to compensate. He steered to the left, trying to grab a strong wind. Instead he found nothing but dead air and everything changed awfully quick. The Aussies were closer, even, and then waving good-bye.

It was a good-bye the Americans couldn't reciprocate. For once Australia got the break they needed, their lead just got bigger. Some would later say that Conner should have stayed in front of the Aussie boat, that he never should have made his cut. They say by doing that he would have caught the same wind current as his opponents and therefore been himself — uncatchable. Others say it was simply a great, clutch race.

Neither mattered as Australia pulled in towards their historical win. For if Conner's strategy had proved successful then he would have been a genius. That is the way it always has worked and always will work. What mattered now was that 132 years had been wiped away by a 41 second difference. Nothing is supposed to last forever, and a bunch of yachtsmen who were now the biggest thing in Australia since kangaroos had proved the point.

Lawyers to lock horns in UMass tenure dispute

By BROOKE STATES
Collegian Staff

Lawyers representing the University of Massachusetts administration will go to court today in Boston to argue against a reinstatement order of a UMass professor who was denied tenure in 1981.

Ann Mochon, now teaching at Tufts University, was granted reinstatement with back pay by the State Labor Relations Commission (SLRC) in July. The University administration is now challenging that order.

In a controversy spanning three years, Mochon was approved for tenure up to the administrative level. She received approval from the chair of the art department, the college personnel committee and the dean of the college of humanities and fine arts. The provost and chancellor then denied her request.

The Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) filed a grievance in May 1981 following the tenure rejection. In Sept. of that year, former Chancellor Henry Koffler denied the grievance and the UMass President David C. Knapp refused an administrative appeal in November.

MSP filed for arbitration with the SLRC in Jan. 1982. The case was tried in July and arbitrator Eric Schmertz ruled Mochon should be reinstated with back pay and new consideration. Earlier this month the administration moved to vacate the award.

Article XI of the MSP contract with the University states "Academic administrative officials may make a recommendation or decision counter to the original faculty recommendation only in exceptional circumstances and with compelling reasons in written detail." This is the key wording according to George Sulzner, acting president of the MSP.

The pattern has been that the courts uphold an arbitrator 99 percent of the time, he said. The University is challenging this opinion not so much because of the award itself, but because the arbitrator rejected a previous arbitrator's decision in a prior case, Sulzner said.

Administrative officials and professor Mochon could not be reached for comment.

In six years there have been five cases in arbitration that were decided in favor of the University. This is the first time that they have lost, he said.

Mass. State House approves controversial bill:

No registration, no money

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts House gave final approval Wednesday to a bill requiring college students to swear that they have registered for the military draft before they accept state scholarship aid.

On a voice vote, the House sent the measure to the state Senate.

Passage came immediately after the members voted 95-47 to reject an amendment offered by Rep. Thomas M. Gallagher, D-Boston.

Gallagher, who opposed the bill when it was heard in the Committee on Education, proposed to change the legislation so that students would become ineligible for state aid only after being convicted in court of failure to register.

"I have argued against this bill on two grounds — the Pentagon should not be allowed to set educational policy, and people should be punished only by a court of law," Gallagher said in a floor debate. "What I am offering is an amendment that would still give a person their day in court."

Rep. Walter A. DeFillipi, R-W. Springfield, the sponsor of the original bill, rose to criticize the amendment.

"I don't think we should encumber this bill with this kind of requirement," he said. "The purpose of this amendment is really to kill the bill."

The legislation as passed by the House states: "No scholarship or financial aid or student loan shall be awarded...to any student who has not registered with the selective service system of the armed forces of the United States."

The language is similar to a federal law that was declared unconstitutional this summer by a U.S. District Court on grounds that it violated a young man's rights to due process and freedom from self incrimination. The U.S. Supreme Court has suspended that court's judgment and plans to consider the issue during the fall term.

"The bill places responsibility on the young man to fulfill his obligation. The amendment would shift that responsibility onto the courts," said Rep. William D. Mullins, D-Ludlow. He also argued that a young man who defied the law could receive financial aid and graduate from college before his criminal case could be finished.

"You choose to reward the young man for violating the law," Mullins said to Gallagher.

"It is the court system that determines innocence or guilt, and it should remain so," Gallagher countered. "This is an irresponsible bill in that it tries to place the Board of Regents above the legal system in the determination of a legal matter."

Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, warned that DeFillipi's bill established a dangerous precedent by heaping administrative penalties on people who have not been convicted of a crime.

"A right to a trial and a right to be presumed innocent is a bedrock of our system," he said.

"Woman with answers" raps

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Women On Campus

In the couse of one 45 minute interview, Bonnie R. Strickland was asked advice by the chancellor, the acting provost, and the vice-chancellor for administration and finance.

Bonnie Strickland is not a woman with all the answers. But she is a woman many men and other women rely on for many answers.

Strickland has been the associate to the chancellor at the University of Massachusettts since last January. It is a position which calls for her to be a senior advisor to Duffey while the chancellor settles into the position he took a little over a year ago.

While Strickland freely admits the University needs more woman in power positions, she is quick to point out compared to other universities, UMass is one of the top in hiring women, especially in the administration.

"When you're at UMass you're anxious to do well, you always get the feeling you should be doing more (for women). But if you step outside...we have a very good record," she said.

Strickland said she is not treated any differently in her position than a man would be, or at least she said she "doesn't notice any difference," but she does admit there is a "subtle sexist campus based on past practices."

At UMass many people think "women have to prove themselves in a man's world...women are seen as secretaries when they are professors," she said.

Strickland defines herself as a "feminist" and a woman who owes a good deal of gratitude to women who came and struggled before her.

"Every woman who has had successes has had those dependent on women who have gone the route and paid the price. I'm vigilant about women's rights because of that," she said.

In the women's movement today there is "not an appreciation of what early feminists tried to do. There are myths about strong women." There is a "need to respect each other's abilities. There is a need so great for change. And especially there is a need for young women to know their history," she said.

Strickland's history includes being chair of the psychology department for five years and of being president of the division of clinical psychology of the American Psychological Association.

Born in Louisville, Kentucky and raised in Birmingham, Alabama, Strickland originally got her bachelors degree in health, physical education, and recreation. At the age of 16 she was nationally ranked as a tennis player.

When she went to Ohio State University in 1960 for her masters degree, she became interested in the field of psychology. She has been a faculty member, administrator and an advisor.

NICARAGUA DROWNINGS — Red Cross volunteers identify victims of a passenger and cargo boat accident Wednesday on a lake 30 miles southwest of Managua. More than 80 people drowned and burned in the accident.

Soviets say U.S. not trying

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet leader Yuri V. Andropov on Wednesday condemned what he called American "unwillingness to conduct serious talks of any kind" on arms control.

He dismissed the "so-called new move" by President Reagan to limit nuclear weapons in Europe as nothing essentially different from previous U.S. proposals.

The official news agency Tass carried excerpts of what it said was a statement Wednesday by Andropov containing the Kremlin leader's first reaction to Reagan's new offer.

Reagan told the United Nations on Monday that Washington was willing to forgo deployment of an unspecified number of the 572 Pershing 2 and cruise missiles NATO plans to start installing in Europe in December and to negotiate on reducing the number of planes able to carry nuclear weapons — if the Soviet Union reduced its medium range missile force.

He made the offer conditional on Soviet readiness to reduce its current force of an estimated 351 SS-20 missiles and other SS-4 and SS-5 missiles targeted on Western Europe.

And in his first comment on the South Korean airliner the Soviets shot down Sept. 1, Andropov reiterated previous Soviet declarations, insisting the plane was on a spy mission for the United States as a deliberate provocation.

Arms sale talks underway

PEKING (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said Wednesday that China and the United States have started talks that could result in the sale of U.S. arms, and that President Reagan and Premier Zhao Ziyang will exchange visits next year.

After discussions with top leader Deng Xiaoping, Zhao and Defense Minister Zhang Aiping, Weinberger told reporters in Peking: "On the basis of the work here, I am really confident that we have secured the basis for a continuing relationship that will add greatly to the ability of both countries to deter war and thereby increase the chances of peace."

He said Zhao will visit Washington in January and Reagan will come to China in April. Zhang also is to visit the United States but the time has not been arranged, Weinberger said.

After the news conference, Weinberger flew to Xian, the ancient capital in northwest China, to visit its famous "pottery army" — hundreds of litesize earthenware warriors and horses in battle array guarding the tomb of Emperor Qin Shi Huang. He ruled from 221 to 207 B.C. and built the 1,500-mile Great Wall to keep out barbarian invaders from the north.

Weinberger told the news conference in Peking discussions have begun on cooperation in military technology, including specific weapons systems for China, and will continue "with my personal participation."

The discussions included proposals for bolstering Chinese defenses against aircraft and tanks. He said other weapons systems were also discussed, but he did not elaborate.

U.N.: should troops leave?

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Syria's foreign minister told the United States and other Western nations Wednesday they should withdraw their peacekeeping troops from Lebanon because they are "posing a grave threat to security and peace" in the Middle East.

"They remind us of the colonialist expeditions through previous stages of the history of the region," Abdul Halim Khaddam said, referring to the 5,400-member force made up of U.S. Marines and troops from France, Italy and Britain.

In an address to the 38th U.N. General Assembly, Khaddam said nothing about withdrawing the estimated 50,000 Syrian troops from Lebanon, but insisted that Israeli troops withdraw unconditionally.

He said the May 17 Lebanese-Israeli troop withdrawal agreement, which the United States helped negotiate, violates Lebanese sovereignty and should be considered "null and void."

Khaddam blamed both Israel and the United States for the fighting and turmoil in Lebanon and accused Washington of taking sides in Lebanon's civil war.

Soviet ship keeps cargo

BOSTON (AP) — Longshoremen defied a federal court order and refused to unload the Soviet vessel Novomirirod, forcing the ship to sail away Wednesday with most of the 2,700 tons of plywood destined for this port still aboard.

Although port officials said the unloading had commenced shortly after the vessel arrived Monday, dockworkers quickly pulled back. They refused to have anything to do with the ship in protest of the shooting down of a Korean Airlines jet earlier this month with 269 passengers aboard.

U.S. District Judge Walter J. Skinner on Tuesday ordered the longshoremen to unload the vessel, according to terms in their contract.

The order had no apparent affect, but could lead to contempt citations. Skinner scheduled an evidentiary hearing for Thursday and another hearing Friday. A court clerk who declined to be identified said the longshoremen will be asked at the Friday hearing to show why they should not be held in contempt.

Pat Moscaritola of the Massachusetts Port Authority said the ship pulled out at 4:12 p.m. "They told us they were headed for Halifax," he said.

Moscaritola said there were no incidents and anti-Soviet protestors maintained their vigil outside the gates. He said the Boston port has been handling about nine Soviet ships a year out of about 550 vessels.

Officials of the International Longshoremen's Union claimed that any boycott was the decision of individual members.

Senator Kennedy leaps across "gender gap"

WASHINGTON — The Democratic Party's most prominent non-candidate, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, declared Wednesday it is time to "talk seriously" about nominating a woman for president or vice president.

Kennedy, who last year took himself out of the 1984 race, was the fourth democratic official to tell a meeting of the party's women leaders this week that the sex barrier to the nation's top two offices should fall.

The party's women, talking of 1984 as their year of power because of the "gender gap" confronting President Reagan, voted Wednesday to make "serious consideration" of a woman for the No. 2 spot one of their key demands for the coming year.

Earlier this week, Democratic National Committee Vice Chairman Lynn Cutler, Minnesota Lt. Gov. Marlene Johnson and Michigan Lt. Gov. Martha Griffiths called for a woman to be nominated for the vice president next year.

The senior senator from Massachusetts wasn't so specific. Rather than asking such a commitment from the all-male field of presidential contenders, he said "It is time for the Democratic Party to talk seriously about women candidates for president and vice president of the United States."

Mono virus suspected cause of rare cancer

BOSTON — The same virus that causes mononucleosis may also be responsible for a rare kind of brain cancer that has shown up recently among AIDS victims, a study says.

Doctors found the link between the Epstein-Barr virus and central nervous system lymphoma. The germ is also suspected of causing some other forms of cancer, including Burkitt's lymphoma and nasopharyngeal carcinoma.

Central nervous system lymphoma is so rare that only 25 cases have been reported in the last 25 years. However, recently the cancer has been seen among victims of AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

In the latest study, doctors found genetic material from the virus in the cancerous part of a victim's brain but not in healthy tissue. They said four other victims also showed signs of recent infection with the virus. None of the five had AIDS.

"Our results suggest induction of the lymphoma by Epstein-Barr virus," the doctors wrote.

United Tech unwelcome on campus

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate decided to show a defense contracting company it "is not welcome on campus" last night by passing a resolution to deny the company further access to the Campus Center complex.

In a 17-9 vote, the senate passed the resolution demanding "that the University disclose all contracts between the University and the U.S. Defense Department, so that the business of the University can be decided by the entire University community," and that "United Technologies Corporation be denied further privileges to use the Campus Center complex."

An hour-long debate, ranging over students' rights to deny access to the Campus Center, the U.S. defense budget, arms control, and relevancy of the motion, to student affairs at UMass preceded the vote.

"All we're doing is asking for a disclosure of what is going on at the University," said Paul Gosselin, chair of the senate public policy committee.

Former SGA President Jim Murphy said the senate was casting a vote for world peace, since the MX and Minuteman missiles produced by the company "are key components to a first-strike capacity."

"It's one thing to defend yourself, and another to generate the capacity to strike first," Murphy said.

But Senator Bill Collins called the measure "an empty resolution."

"I can almost guarantee you that United Technologies Corp. will be here whether we pass this resolution or not," he said.

The senate also endorsed last night a letter from Acting Student Attorney General Dakin Ferris to Dean of Students William F. Field which recommends establishment of academic honesty policies in all academic schools and colleges of the University (see related story).

In a related action, Joel Weissman, staff coordinator of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) presented a letter which appeals to faculty members to join with students in creating an academic grievance procedure at the University.

Weissman said at this time "there is no procedure for students to go through," when they have complaints over "changed grades, course load changes, tests on material not covered in class," and other grading and teaching disputes.

In other business last night, the senate completed the membership of the attorney general selection committee by appointing two representatives from the University judiciary to that committee.

Career seminar speakers say job outlook is bright

By JESSICA BARMACK
Collegian Correspondent

The School of Management's first attempt to give students the opportunity to meet and learn from members of the business community was made yesterday at the Hi-Tech Careers seminar at the University of Massachusetts.

Managers from several of the biggest companies in the area spoke at the "Preparing for Hi-Tech Careers in the 80's" seminar, the first of Three Executive Seminar series.

Panel members included Susan Cook, an IBM representative; Dr. Anne Nagumy, an International Data Corporation representative, and a recent professor in the UMass School of Management; John C. Rousseau, Data General Corporation representative; and John Numnelly, the regional manager of Amherst Associates.

"A hi-tech company offers learning experiences often untouched by a liberal arts education," he said.

Cook said there is "an insatiable appetite for electrical engineers and computer science majors" at IBM. "The business of technology is changing everything, distribution, technology, how we run the business."

Nagumy's company deals with software consulting. "Ours are state-of-the-art systems," she said. "We are challenged by sophisticated problems ranging from computer analysis to configuration management. Our employees are primarily technical computer majors but some managerial problems are so complex that M.B.A.'s (Master's in business administration) are essential. "At present, software," she said, is "very marketable."

Numnelly represented a small health care firm in Amherst.

"By necessity employees have more responsibility, first hand experience and more opportunities in a small business," he said.

"Health care businesses offer growth potential which is reflected by the growth of the business by 617 percent since 1965," he said. "This is because the government reimburses about 50 percent of health care expenditures."

"The demand for health care does not fluctuate with the economy," he said.

"There is a double opportunity for growth, for newcomers, because of a change in the government reimbursement system. Old employees are used to the old system, which means potential space for new management," he said.

Honesty: what's the best policy?

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

Academic honesty policies at the University of Massachusetts need to be clarified and in some cases established, to protect students from unjust punishment, said acting Student Attorney General Dakin Ferris.

Ferris said he asked the Student Senate last night to endorse a letter proposing changes in the policies he sent to Dean of Students William F. Field. Field was to have received the letter this morning, he said.

"The biggest problem with the disciplinary procedures for accused cheaters is that half the schools within the University don't have their own policies," Ferris said.

Currently, only five of the University's 10 academic schools and colleges have academic honesty policies, Ferris said. Those that do not, he said, are the Division of Continuing Education, the College of Food and Natural Resources, and the schools of Education, Physical Education, and Health Sciences.

Of the five schools that have set policies, two include clauses that say a professor may give an "F" to a student accused of cheating, and that this sanction is not appealable, Ferris said.

Ferris said this is "against the law, as well as the Student Code of Conduct." He said individual schools should have their own policies because the schools have jurisdiction, with respect to academic honesty, over students whose majors are in the schools.

Current policies are incomplete, since they leave out the procedural rights of students, Ferris said in a 70 page report to the Student Government Association (SGA). The report is the result of four months' research, and includes a true case study Ferris said exemplified the seriousness of the policies' inadequacies.

"Susan Doe," a pseudonym for a UMass student, was told by her professor that she was suspected of cheating. She protested, and was embarrassed when the class of nearly 100 students heard the accusation. The professor gave Susan an "F" for the test, and when she appealed it, he threatened to impose a higher sanction, Ferris said.

The threat was "tantamount to extortion," and was possibly in violation of the federal Privacy Act, he said. Any oral notification of charges risk violation of the federal act, Ferris said.

Some of the changes Ferris proposes are:

- That each college have its own academic honesty policy.
- That these policies be readily accessible and kept on file in Field's office.

Cops check out explosive case

University of Massachusetts police and Environmental Health and Safety (EH&S) confiscated assorted hazardous materials, including fireworks and a tube bomb, from a student's room in Field dormitory at 9:17 a.m. Tuesday.

Upon investigation, UMass police and EHS discovered assorted chemicals and explosives in the student's room. The police removed the materials from the residential area and the case is presently under investigation.

In other police action:

Police received a report of breaking and entering at 9:40 p.m. Saturday from a resident in John Quincy Adams dormitory. The complaintant reported that she had locked her door while she left her room for a short time. Upon returning, the complaintant discovered that her purse, containing $19 in cash, was missing. There apparently was no sign of forced entry, and police said the alleged thief has a key to the room. Police have advised the complaintant to have the lock changed.

Richard W. Pascale, 34, from Colrain, was charged with operating a motor vehicle without a license and having no inspection sticker Tuesday shortly before 4 p.m. Police said they observed Pascale's vehicle traveling north on President's Ave. and stopped him when they observed that his vehicle had no inspection sticker. The subject was then placed under arrest when it was discovered that he had no license.

Union Records to 'play them again' shortly

By CAROLINE SAMOILOFF
Collegian Correspondent

Because of a lack of funds, setbacks in inventory and "mismanagement" last semester, Union Records Unlimited (URU) has not yet opened. It's opening is now scheduled for October 10.

"Running a record store is an expensive business," said Jim Foley, new URU manager.

Last semester's manager neglected to reorder sufficient stock, making this semester's assets minimal and "left us some deficits to clean out," Foley said. The student-operated record store can only request funding equivalent to one-half its current stock. Since the stock is low, URU will not be able to request as much money as had been hoped, Foley said.

The budget proposal, which Foley said he expects will be passed and get things moving, must be submitted by Friday to have it passed next Wednesday, he said.

Albums this year are generally going to cost $6.20. "These prices are basically cheaper than in other area stores," Foley said. As for specials like last semester when top albums were sold for $5.99, "we will be having them, but less frequently," Foley said, noting sales volume did not pick up as much as expected. URU is planning to use the $5.99 special two or three times a week, at certain hours during the day, he said.

Foley said competition with the University Store is not a threat, but a new record store in downtown Amherst could do URU damage.

Although the store does have all the top 40 releases, the variety in the URU is limited. URU business manager Scott Schindler and Foley said they will be working on a larger, more varied stock for the near future.

URU, located between the Student Union Building and the Campus Center, once it opens, will be open 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday thru Friday.

FAC Senate to meet today

By MARY ANNE BEEN
Collegian Staff

It is expected that the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate, whose first meeting is scheduled for 3:30 p.m. today, will be fairly routine and orderly, according to Robert E. Jones, senate secretary.

"Most of what we do is routine, but necessary. Some find it dull while others find it very exciting," Jones said.

Jones was elected to the position of secretary on May 19 during the senate's last meeting of the spring semester. His term will last two years.

"My job is to coordinate the various committees and activities concerning the Faculty Senate, and to coordinate these efficiently. I am pleased that my colleagues have entrusted this job to me," Jones said.

The Senate frequently has nothing to do at the beginning of the fall semester, Jones said. He compares this with a student researching a term paper.

"A student has to have time to develop ideas and strategies for his or her paper," Jones said. "We experience the same--the academic year has a certain rhythm. Things pick up as the semester progresses."

One potentially controversial issue to be dealt with will be the General Education Curriculum proposal, although it is not expected that the Senate will deal with it until December at the earliest, Jones said.

"General Education was not voted down. The curriculum just couldn't be passed the way it was," Jones said. "The council will need time to come up with a proposal that will be the most agreeable with the Senate. Some want a drastic change, while others want to see just a few changes made from the original proposal."

Other plans include a possible change in the add/drop procedure. According to Jones, the Academic Matters Council wants to form a committee to rewrite the present procedure in an effort to "clear up the mess."

The job of secretary is a "full load, but I'm enjoying it," Jones said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

What is going down there?

It is a refreshing sight to see such enthusiasm demonstrated by the local community on behalf of the people of Latin America and their struggle for freedom from political and economic exploitation.

U.S. foreign policy makes must become aware of the growing concern for this region by the American people, as they were forced to realize the anti-war sentiment among the people during the Vietnam crisis. The Reagan Administration continues to ignore the demands of citizens and groups nationwide, and prefers to maintain personal contact with the leaders of multinational corporations instead. Certainly those power hungry individuals do not wish a toned-down American presence in Latin America; it would simply not be good for business. It seems obvious they will use their influence to further warp the Administration's policy in securing a more active U.S. role in the activities of these countries. Policy that enables multinationals to maintain a stranglehold on the politics and economics of almost all the lesser-developed-countries that are within the American sphere of influence will continue to be the result.

I write partially in reference to the Central America Teach-In held Sept. 15 on the UMass campus, where the audience heard the testimony of four seasoned "Latin Americanists." It amazed me that Peter Sarros and Col. Samuel Dickens would so blatantly ignore the obvious facts that were being told by Dr. Clements and Ms. Janet Shenk. Clements and Shenk spent time in El Salvador that was obviously well spent, evading the propaganda machine and finding sources that tell a horrifyingly different version than the press corps find concerning the misuse of power and funds, as well as the countless attacks on human rights. A lowered civilian body count does not suggest that the situation is getting better; any amount at all is too many. And yet, our representatives from Washington, D.C. seem to believe that women and children are equally dangerous to their cause.

"Women are potential factories to produce more guerrillas and children are seeds of the guerrillas who need to be destroyed", was what a fifteen-year-old army soldier had to say about government-sponsored drives in which he participated throughout the country.

How the people of El Salvador want to be governed is their choice and no other's. It is not a decision to be made in Washington, D.C. The United States government is portraying to the media an image of a true friend of the people of El Salvador, one that supports justice and human rights. And yet, those who look beyond the peaceful setting of San Salvador discover an even greater evil than the guerrillas, an even more destructive force that threatens the countryside, this being the United States and the oligarchy which is supported by American tax dollars.

To give support to the landed aristocracy only deepens the hatred of peasants who must work the fields of coffee, sugar cane, cotton and livestock that dominate the landscape. These exports do not feed the local population. Agrarian reform must be the goal if we are to continue aid to El Salvador. Our aid must not be solely hinged upon pro-American political ideas and economic opportunities, but must take into account what is right and wrong in terms of human dignity.

I am an exchange student from California State University at Chico and was impressed with the level of positive energy in the crowd that evening. Responding to what speakers have to say is a good way of showing support, or the lack of it. However, this went too far that evening. I suggest this because of the yells of support that came after one of the speakers told of the Sandinista military buildup. Is that really what they want or need; to be the arena for an East-West chess game in which the countries of Central America are merely pawns? The continued misuse of resources must be put to an end and measures taken to support the introduction of appropriate technology throughout all lesser-developed-countries. Providing large amounts of equipment, the sole purpose of which is to kill and destroy, does not encourage the peace process and may lead to further problems that we will not be able to control.

John Cusick is now a UMass student

Making funny sounds out of first and last initials. Pleasant, hazy memories of yesterday. Where best pals shared souls and families were so close that you almost forgot which ones were your real brothers and sisters.

Peedle. You know, the one who was sophisticated enough to ensure that I knew the "F"word, but had the guile to neglect telling me what it meant, or that I shouldn't say it in front of her Mom and Dad.

Why was it that her nicknames for everyone, especially me, stuck? Despite the fact that I hated it? Where did she get the ability to taunt my sensibilities and nurture my gullibility so adeptly? Only to erupt in a guffaw of snots and laughter, chief witness to the truth unfurled at my expense.

As a kid, I learned a lot from her laughter. How could I help it? It was forever sneaking out, and it was contagious as hell. Freely shared and unerring in its power to corrupt a gloomy moment. A healthy, happy way to highlight weaknesses and to laugh with others at yourself, and enjoy it.

In her older (two years doesn't seem that much older anymore) and wiser fashion Peedle continues to teach me new lessons with her laughter. She has changed, but her laughter lives on, unchanged.

I really didn't want to visit with Peedle this week. She looks much different than she used to, that's true. While they are beautiful, her scarves can't quite mask the starkness of her lack of hair. Makeup can hide the outermost signs of weakness and nausea, but there is no hiding the debilitating reality of radical chemotherapy.

When I first heard that Peedle had cancer, I though that I was too young to have another friend stolen at such a young age. I assumed death. In doing so I hastened to isolate myself from what I feared most. The pain of watching someone die. But a visit with Peedle was unavoidable, since she had moved to New England to receive treatment at one of the world's premier cancer institutes. The thought of sharing her pain, and dealing with my own, left me uncomfortable and queasy.

Thank God I heard her first. That laugh. A cross between Felix Unger's sinus problem and a delightfully unrestrained howl. A realization of the lighter side of life. Proof that even in dying, elements of living shine through clearly. Laughter. The sharing of true feelings. A timeless life process. An eternal extension of an open heart. You can't kill a heart that is laughing.

Academic grievance procedure needed

When a visitor travels to another country, upon reaching their destination they are asked for credentials. For the traveler, the credentials come in the form of a passport, visa, or other papers. The proper credentials can open doors and gain entrance for the traveler. In many ways undergraduate education performs the same function. For a substantial fee and four years of successful service the undergraduate receives credentials in the form of a degree and an undergraduate transcript. Like other credentials, these credentials too, can open doors.

Joel Weissman

The grade point average part of a student's credentials is extremely important. Many students are finding it necessary to return to school and seek advanced degrees in order to be employable. This combined with graduate schools reliance on GPA in making admissions decisions, means that grades are becoming increasingly important. In competitive programs, the difference of even 1/100 of a point in a grade point average can make the difference between being accepted or rejected. Rejection can mean the loss of subsequent tens of thousands of dollars in enhanced earning power that attendance at a prestigious institution will ultimately bring.

Students have practically no rights in the classroom. There is no Academic Bill of Rights as far as students are concerned. A professor has the latitude to change the requirements of a course in mid-stream adding papers, tests, reading materials, a professor does not have to test and grade on material gone over in class, a professor may change the criteria for grading at any time, a professor does not even have to provide a syllabus or even office hours. Of course, most professors never violate these basic issues of fairness but for the very few that do, students have very little recourse.

Some departments on campus utilize a very loose informal procedure:

1. Talk to your professor, if that doesn't work:
2. Appeal to the Head of the Department, if that doesn't work:
3. Appeal to the Ombudsperson, if that doesn't work you're out of luck.

As a grievance procedure this one is sorely lacking. The above procedure offers no protection for students. There is no time-factor involved. The grievance could drag on for months losing all but the most persistant of students. The procedure is not anonymous and thus most students would fear future reprisals. The procedure is so heavily weighted against the student that it would be laughable if it wasn't so pathetic. The burden of proof is upon the student (very seldom is there anything approaching an impartial investigation), and the entire decision making process is in the hands of the alledged offending professors, or colleagues of the professor. Lastly, without any rights for students in the classroom, any grievance procedure would be lacking. Without any rights for students there is nothing to protect and nothing to grieve against. Until the University administration and the faculty recognize the basic rights of students in the classroom any procedure will be faulty.

There are difficult issues that need to be addressed in constructing an equitable academic grievance procedure. Paramount among these issues is that of protection of academic freedom. But other schools have adopted fair academic grievance procedures without jeopardizing academic freedom.

If the system is designed to ensure that undergraduate students are victimized, and that their academic grievances are swept under the rug and denied any route towards resolution it could not be designed any better. But if the system is designed to ensure fairness and an atmosphere conducive to education, it is not working. How much longer will students have to wait for what amounts to little more than a measure of fairness? Not much longer if there is any justice at this University.

Joel Weissman is the Director of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy

It's small, but we call it home

Think fast! How much are you paying in rent this semester? If you reside on campus and are not an R.A. or a member of Chancellor Duffey's immediate family, chances are you've forked a hefty $621.00 over to Housing Services for the privilege and convenience of having a little corner of UMass to call your own.

Elizabeth Luciano

And unless your surname is Vanderbilt, Bloomingdale, or — God forbid — Reagan, that's more than a bite-sized chunk of your summer savings. $621 translates into 177 sweaty hours of lifeguarding, or 103 tense hours of typing. For $621, you could see approximately 248 first-run movies, dine 25 times at the Lord Jeffrey Inn, or (as friends who are well-versed in such matters tell me) purchase more than just a few ounces of first-rate Columbian gold. And I'm not talking precious metal, either.

So it's reasonable to expect more than a functional, closet-sized room with all the warmth and cheer of Attica Correctional Facility. It's logical to look forward to a few of those little "extras" that make dorm living just that much more pleasant. And frankly, if you're paying $621 just to have a place to park your butt for fifteen weeks, that place should be...well, perfect. Perfectly perfect.

Of course, perfection means different things to different people. I raised the question of the ideal collegiate abode with several floormates of mine and got some interesting responses.

Millie, a very chic dresser who usually looks like she stepped off the cover of Vogue, advocated added storage space for her sharp "threads."

"I think they should construct walk-in closets for everybody. Nice ones, with shoe trees and revolving suit racks and lights and turn on automatically when you open the door," her eyes sparkled, "like the lights in the refrigerator! Oh, and they should be cedar-lined closets, too. My Calvins will smell terrific."

"Perhaps the desks should be replaced." This sage counsel was courtesy of Samantha, the only "4.0" on the floor. "Seriously, who wants to study at a desk that looks like a laundry table? I'll bet everybody would work harder if there were old-fashioned roll-top desks with lots of tiny compartments for paper clips and Scotch tape and stuff like that. Antique oak desks."

"What about round water beds with fur bedspreads?" suggested Brad, the resident Casanova.

"Eurwwwwww, that's disgusting!" said Maureen, the resident prude. "Personally, I think they should improve lighting around here. Crystal chandeliers would be beautiful — except in Southwest. Track lighting would fit in better there. It's more modern."

"You've all made a monstrous oversight," announced Harrison, the floor's official party man. "Every room should be equipped with a bar. Why trek all the way to the Blue Wall when it's Miller Time? And since most of the freshmen are too young to make packie runs, it would be a nice gesture if those bars were fully stocked."

"An illegal gesture, but a nice one," agreed Samantha. She paused, then added, "Our renovations would raise the Housing bill by several thousands of dollars per semester."

"For that kind of money, we could transfer to a well-heeled college, like the one across town," commented Gareth.

"What? And leave the 'Zoo'?" shouted Harrison. "Are you crazy?"

"Never!" vowed Carolyn.

"I'm staying at least until graduation," said Samantha.

So it's UMass, for better or for worse, despite the dungeon-like dorm rooms. It's the only thing everybody on our floor agrees on, but it's enough to make cohabitatio well worthwhile.

Letters

The Collegian should get real

To the Editor,

If the Collegian can't do any better for "editorialists' than the obtusely right-wing "Mr. Stephen P. Barrett" or the airheaded and miasmic Rhonda Applebaum the "wonderful' generation which both represent has much more to worry about than apparent.

Vietnam is just a word to you because since 1965, when the counterculture began to create some of the most mind-bending music of the century (and would subsequently flower and die in the soap-operatic suds of roller-disco militarism) by 1975, the forces of conservatism sought ... squelch what gains were made in this fleeting renaissance of humanism.

The Collegian is a prime example of the conformity and conservatism that has been consciously produced in your generation. Everyday you run full page military recruitment ads, nonchalant "news" stories on ROTC, almost no world news, and feature a lot of right-wing tripe ... our letters to the editor. Ms. Applebaum recently ... that this generation realizes 'our country' needs its ... as jobs." The lack of sophistication and simplemindedness of such "perspective" is nearly as frightening as Mr. Stephen P. Barrett's ranting and raving over the Russians. One would think it were still only 1958! While the atomic clock is ominously ticking at a few minutes to midnight the college people of UMass have further regressed into an ever-extended adolescent dependency. Thanks to the "economic squeeze" caused by "our country's" defense bill, working-class people can no longer afford the luxury of a college education. Since people can also no longer "work their way through" college those who now attend do so by virtue of increased parental support. "Big defense economics" has resulted in much less independence for youth throughout society, never mind the effects of the "Solomon Ammendment"!

In 1968 the Collegian's world news was front page. While today's news may be too much for today's stressful college student, this is a pitiful excuse for the Collegian to ignore world events, while concentrating on lue in the small-minded but giant playpen of "ZooMass". While U.S. G.I.s are digging massive burial mounds in West Germany as "military exercises" UMass students are buying more sweatshirts.

Readers don't deserve this

To the Editor,

When a friend claimed that a high percentage of American college students cannot write, I refused to believe it. When an Arts Editor of the Collegian, Thursday, September 22, 1983, in the column Live Wire, writes: "Don't sulk just yet, though, 'cause WMUA and the Hanger (sic) One are, etc. . .", my friend's claim, without proving itself true as stated, cannot help but return to my attention. The aforementioned editor goes on with the column and refers to the "Hanger" One no less than three more times. The place under consideration is named after those large buildings where people usually store airplanes; moreover there is a small aircraft that the decorators stuck to the roof, for reasons that I dare not fathom, but clearly suggests some aerial nature. On the other hand, a hanger is an object that, among other things, can be used to hang clothes. The rest of the phrase I have just quoted reveals a level of vulgarity that, in my opinion, the readers of the self-proclaimed "New England's largest college daily" certainly do not desreve. Informal language can be used in journalism, but cautiously. Otherwise it may imply a lack of respect to the intelligence of the readers.

"Josh" coverage was fair

To the Editor,

I am very grateful for your objective coverage of Josh McDowell who spoke here last week. The article printed about McDowell accurately reported his opinions, background, and the response of the audience. Those who saw Josh now realize that all Christians are not alike and that it is fruitless to try to stereotype them. We in Campus Crusade for Christ applaud the Collegian for clarifying this.

Each night Josh spoke, the audience was asked to fill out comment cards. Approximately 85 percent of those cards returned were positive. We are especially pleased to see that UMass is coming to realize that being a Christian doesn't mean one always agrees with Jerry Falwell, nor does it imply a rigid political platform. The misconceptions that Christians have committed intellectual suicide, or that they live a life of self-sacrifice and empty religious rituals are diminishing.

Unlike some evangelists who use Jesus's name to hide a profit motive, Josh gave away books and tapes to those who couldn't afford them. We are grateful to the Collegian for not further fostering these misconceptions.

Orchard Hill is not so bad

To the Editor,

This letter is in response to Becky Lockwood's sarcastic column of September 22nd, "Orchard Hill Activities." Miss Lockwood is apparently displeased with the quality of life in the Orchard Hill Residential Area, but isn't necessarily going about improving it in the right way. The Dickinson House Council is currently working in collaboration with the Webster House Council and a special "Quality of Life" committee to quell just the sort of outbursts Lockwood describes to us so colorfully. Our current intention is to alleviate this antisocial behavior through judicial action and the provision of alternative social activities for the Hill-dwellers. It is our estimation that this manner of action will be more effective in remedying these less pleasant aspects of life on the hill than humerous letters that seemingly applaud them. They've been taken as a joke for too long already. Perhaps Miss Lockwood should seek a position on her House Council to help us in our efforts toward making Orchard Hill a better place to live. And Becky, why not give the hill another chance; its far too early to be passing the kind of judgement you have, and when the bowl wars die down in a week or so, we think you'll find Orchard Hill to be the pleasant and rewarding living atmosphere that we have.

Evita suffers for talent

EVITA
Tuesday, September 27
Fine Arts Center

By CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

On Tuesday evening, the Fine Arts Center presented the Tony Award winning Broadway hit, Evita, as performed by the National Broadway Touring Company.

Despite several major flaws within the script, the cast of Evita did a good job Tuesday night of overcoming those flaws and showing the full house a little more than just a "touch of star quality."

All the lead actors in the musical were good but there was only one who really shined, and in most scenes, managed to steal the show. Tim Bowman as Che, "a man who grew and saw" what Evita did to Argentina,, out-sang and out-acted the other members of the cast. Che in some scenes, played Evita's conscience, and in others, her critics. "How long do you think this pantomime can last?" he asks Evita. Che, in a clear and concise voice, told the audience about Evita, about the egotistical, vain and ambitious woman who stopped at nothing to attain the power she wanted. He tried to tell his people that, but in most scenes he was ignored or beaten by Juan Peron's police.

Unfortunately, the main problems with the show was the script itself. The author assumed the audience knew a lot about the history of Argentina and the story of Eva and Juan Peron. In many cases the plot was too confusing for one who didn't know the history. In the play, one finds out Eva died young, but no one tells the audience she died of cancer at 33. The audience finds out her body disappeared for 17 years, but the script doesn't bother to tell who took the body and what they did with it.

Slides were effectively used during many of the scenes on a big screen behind the stage showing the real Eva Peron as Argentina's first lady. They gave the audience an image of her life which just a set and actors could not do. The only problem was at times one didn't know whether to pay attention to the dancing or the slide show, both going on at the same time.

The most powerful scenes in Evita were those when the entire cast was together on stage, specifically the last scenes of Act I and Act II. In those scenes, Evita, Che Juan Peron and the "masses" tied the entire act together and made the viewer understand what was happening.

Florence Lacey as Evita gave a good performance, but not an outstanding one. She screeched a little too much when she was supposed to shout, but she did a good job of portraying Evita from a 15-year old to a 33-year old dying of cancer. Her best moments were in the final scene as she tried to tell her people "don't cry for me Argentina" on a radio broadcast. Throughout the show, though, Lacey made sure her audience knew that Evita never was and never could be a "real lady."

I had one small problem with the first scene where Evita changed onstage from a spirit telling her people not to cry for her to a 15-year old girl. There is a time and place for everything and a stage with a spotlight is not the place for an actor to change her wig. It could have easily have been done offstage. That way a hairdresser would have not had to come onstage and hold a mirror for Lacey.

Evita* at the FAC: Don't cry for me Massachusetts

Despite the poor script, I would recommend that you try to get in and see its final performance tonight. Just to catch a glimpse of one of Broadway's most enduring classics.

Live Wire
by Dave Chevan

As I preused the local rags this week in a vague attempt to inform the public of local weekend tuneage, I discovered a few heartening facts. There are more clubs with live music open this semester than there have been in several semesters, there are more local bands playing at local clubs, and there will be some really hot big league action headed our way in the next few weeks.

For example, tonight-now I know he's an old throwaway from the glitter rock period, but Joe Perry is Joe Perry, and some of the leads he played with Aerosmith will live eternally in the annuls of FM format airplay. Joe is going to relive some of the best three minutes of our youth at the Rusty Nail, but you'd best bring your earplugs, he's got one of the loudest sounds around.

Local groups tonight include Roger Saloom and the Stragglers at Sheehan's Cafe, and Tom McClung, the fine keyboard specialist for the New England Jazz Quartet at the Avenue, in Northampton.

Friday night offers still another opportunity to dig deep into the well of rock history, this time with Alvin Lee. Ten years after 10 Years After this bluesman will not quit. Alvin will be "Goin Home" at the Agora in Hartford. At the Fine Arts Center, the Iron Horse Coffeehouse presents pianist George Winston, Windham Hill's contemplative folk/jazz interpreter. Meanwhile, back at the Iron Horse, the World Music duo of Tim Moran and Tony Vacca will perform their form of folk-based music.

Saturday night delivers a variety of popular Out-of towners. Richard Thompson will be at the Salem Theater in Salem, the Stompers will be at the Rusty Nail and the Dark will envelope the Hangar One.

Upcoming concerts to put into your calendar include: the Phil Woods Quartet Oct. 2 at the Iron Horse, Violent Femmes Oct. 6 at the Hangar One, Buddy Guy and Junior Wells Oct. 6 at the Rusty Nail, and Hot Tuna with Bobby and the Midnites Nov. 3 at the Springfield Civic Center.

WMUA is back on the air and one of the fine programs they offer on Wednesday night is the Dadavision show. For anyone with an interest in offbeat American and World "art" music, these dj's offer this and more. I'm told they accept homemade tapes by local art musicians, so lets tune our radios to one of the last vestiges on the air. Blues fans should be made aware of Evening Pro Bluesica, a weekly live blues show Tuesday nights at the Separate Entrance in South Deerfield. Disregard the distance, the band is well worth the trip. A regular rhythm section is augmented by local blue horn players who jam for hours on some of the most classic tunes in the American blues literature.

That's the sound news, till next week, keep your ears to the ground, and listen for the hoofbeats...Pilgrim.

Devoto re-writes Magazine

HOWARD DEVOTO
Jerky Visions Of the Dream
(IRS LP)

By GERARD COSLOY
Collegian Staff

With the exception of Joy Division, I'm hard pressed to find a more literate and innovative UK band in recent times than Magazine; their 5 studio (and one live) LP's showcased a wide variety of patterns and styles, from the thrash salvo "Shot By Both Sides" to a more introspective piano centerpiece like "About The Weather." Magazine's breakup in 1981 was surprising, songwriter/vocalist Howard Devoto having yet to reach a creative peak — 'tho breaking up at that stage is definitely preferable to regurgitating the same form for commercial gain (Clash). Now Devoto's back, and it's even more surprising to hear how little he's changed.

Jerky Visions Of The Dream, the first solo effort from the Mancucian founder of both the Buzzcocks and Magazine, sounds more like Magazine LP no. 7 than any radical change in direction. The opening "Cold Imagination" burns hard, Devoto's shout of "hey, I'm freezing" built on by Dave Formula's (ex-Magazine, Visage) sweeping keyboard flourishes — more than a little like a re-write of Magazine's "The Light Pours Out Of Me" with an added spark....

.....so much like a new Magazine LP, Jerky Visions also includes contributions from the before mentioned Formula and bassist Barry Adamson (Magazine, Birthday Party). No complaints from this corner, I'm just puzzled as to exactly why Devoto killed off Magazine to begin with; "Some Will Pay (For What Others Will Pay to Avoid)" is as sharp and witty as any of Devoto's previous songs, his delicate delivery convincing me where some of the LP's studio-hack musicianship didn't. Suggestion: Not reforming Magazine, but maybe a tighter format, like a REAL BAND.

Howard Devoto will be making his first US appearance this week, Sept. 29th at the Paradise in Boston, Oct. 1st at Irving Plaza, NYC.

Boston's own Shittons will perform at the Blue Wall's James Dean Night Friday.

TODAY'S PUZZLE ANSWER

Thank goodness that thing in Newport is over

by JAY HOLZMAN
Collegian Staff

Ah, it's finally over.

After a summer of media hype and heavy coverage, the America's Cup can finally be laid to rest. There will be no more highlights on the news, no more interruptions of M*A*S*H, and no more pictures adorning the newspapers.

Although I am a patriotic American who just like anyone else was rooting for Liberty, you've got to admit that yacht racing is not America's number one spectator sport — even though the newspapers and television stations felt otherwise.

Channel 10 had five-hour coverage of the seventh and final race. I'm sure that hurt their ratings. Who can watch a boat race, anyway? In Australia the folks from down under caught all the racing action (or lack of it) at 3 a.m., but they were all drunk.

Although the America's Cup is significant due to 132 years of national tradition and American domination, it is also hard to relate to.

It's not like basketball, baseball, football, or any other sport where we can imitate our idols and improve our games. I have always had trouble polishing my yachting skills because I'm not a millionaire like Liberty Skipper Dennis Conner. I also have no access to a yacht. This is a sport where it is easy to feel alienated.

As many would agree, watching the America's Cup is also very boring. It is about as action packed as a senior citizen's shuffleboard tournament. It is about as exciting as watching grass grow or sitting through lectures.

One has to feel sorry for Dennis Conner and his crew. Imagine at his next cocktail party, "Nice to meet you. So you were the one who blew it."

To Conner's credit, he has taken the loss very well. He has offered no alibis or excuses and gave credit to the Aussies and their skipper, John Bertrand. The Aussies were favored this year, thanks to a superior boat and a (oh no!) secret keel.

As the Cup leaves the New York Yacht Club and heads for Australia, we can all breathe a sigh of relief. The media's saturated coverage is finally over and Boston's sportscasters who covered the race can return to their stations and show off their tans.

Just think. In 1987 when America tries to reclaim the Cup, we get to put up with this all over again. I'm going to enjoy my four-year vacation.

Collegian's NFL picks

The fifth week of the National Football League is here and here is the weekly installment of Collegian foresight into this weekend's NFL games. The Jets at Buffalo is the Monday night game.

LAST WEEK: All five of us lost on the San Diego-Cleveland upset and four of five lost on the Giants-Packers debacle last Monday. And Bill Shea isn't a traitor as he did pick the Patriots last week and this week. The writers had a very good week. Gerry deSimas went 10-4, and Kevin Deluca, Tony Betros and Scott Hood went 9-5 and Bill Shea went 8-5. We have spoken.

HOMECOMING Special: The special of the week is picking the UMass-URI game. Not a difficult choice for biased but realistic writers.

Men's tennis wins

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

STORRS, CT — The Minutemen of the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team picked up a big win by toppling the University of Connecticut 5-4 yesterday for their first win of the fall season.

"It was a good win for us," said a pleased head coach Bob Szlosek. "The kids really played well."

Kids was an ample term as this yound team had three UMass players picking up their first varsity wins, ever, at singles.

Dave Singer at number three singles, Andy Tazmany (5) and Paul Zaretsky (6), a freshman, all won their first singles match.

Top singles player Wayne Peterson struggled but won his match 7-6, 2-6, 7-6 over Craig Waddington. Earl Small (2) beat Jon Gibson in straight sets, 6-3, 6-3.

Singer also had to struggle to win but prevailed over Dave Cameron 7-6, 6-7, 6-4. Marc Weinstein (4) picked up the only loss for UMass in singles but Tazmany (5), Paul Zaretsky (6) won their matches.

Zaretsky and John Deklerk lost their doubles match while the other two were called due to darkness to make the 5-2 margin. UMass is now 1-3 on the year.

Minutewomen put the Bruins on hold

Defense carries the day for UMass, the nation's fourth ranked team

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

The Brown University women's soccer team has never defeated the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team at home since Kalekeni Banda has been coaching and the women kept the tradition going yesterday as they rolled over Brown 3-1, to raise their record to 3-0-2.

The Minutewomen played defensive ball leaving one hole which allowed Brown forward Ellen Bopp to score with 15:04 left in the first period.

"I think they played as well as they could have played against Brown," Banda said about his team which is fourth ranked in the nation. "It could have been a shutout but they made one mistake. But, they scored and came back which shows a good team so you've got to give them credit for that."

Ellen Taggart started things off for UMass when she took a pass from Chris Taggart and sailed the ball over the reach of Brown goaltender Alex Smith 11:03 into the first half.

The Minutewomen controlled the action in the first half and kept play in the Brown end. The team hustled hard while making strong passes and taking good shots on goal.

"They came out a little bit better today," Banda said. "They played exceptionally well. It was good to win this one."

After 2:24 went by on the clock, halfback Stacey Flionis gave UMass a safer lead. Mary Sztela, who Banda commended for her fine play, shot the ball to Flionis who snuck it through low into the corner of the net.

With one quick shot Bopp narrowed the gap to 2-1 before the first half ended.

UMass defense was solid throughout the first half which gave the UMass offense ample opportunities to score.

"The defense did a super job," Banda commented. "The offense did what they had to do. We're playing defensively and we're up 2-0. What can I say to them; they do their job."

In the second half the Minutewomen went looking for an insurance goal and it was not long before defender Lori Stukes got it. Stukes fired in a pass from Susan Bird 3:05 into the period to wrap up another victory for the women.

UMass will try to make Vermont (ninth ranked in New England) its next victim on Saturday. This time the Minutewomen will try to break tradition as they have never won a game at Vermont.

"The ride up does us in," Banda said. "Getting up at 7:00 (to travel) is tough."

"It's going to be touch and go, we're going to play very conservative and patient defense. We don't have to manpower it. We're struggling but I'm putting my money on them."

"Sloppy" spikers do the job-topple Holy Cross

By ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian Correspondent

WORCESTER — The University of Massachusetts volleyball team traveled to Holy Cross yesterday hoping to improve on their 11-3 record. The Crusaders proved to be a tough foe, but UMass headed home down Rt. 9 with another win.

The tall and strong Crusaders forced the match to go the full five games (3 out of 5 series).

UMass surged to an early lead with a well earned 15-11 victory in game one. Game 2 turned out to be a carbon copy of the first. Once again the final tally showed UMass 15, Holy Cross 11. UMass started having troubles in game 3.

"Tonight was not a real pretty show. We were just a little off all night," commented coach Elaine Sortino.

The Crusaders were in full command in game 3. Playing hard and capitalizing on every UMass mistake, led to a 15-7 win for Holy Cross.

Game four showed little improvement from UMass, as they lost again 15-12. This game was closer but UMass was still struggling.

"The new offenses we have been working on were not working. We are seeing 'new' errors we have not seen before, and the passing wasn't great tonight," Sortino said placidly.

Sortino also felt that their new practice format may have been a factor in last nights sloppy play.

"We have been stepping up on conditioning and working real hard this week. We have to be ready to play in the semis and finals of tournaments," Sortino explained.

Luckily the team was not too tired in game 5. The fifth and deciding game was won convincingly by UMass 15-9.

Although none of the spikers shone on this night, Sortino still found some bright spots. The coach cited Joanne Siler, Sally Maher and Ellen Deady for some good hustling plays.

"We still have some improvement, to do what we want to do. With growth, however, comes the pain," claimed Sortino.

Next on the agenda for the spikers is their own 16 team tournament this weekend. Hopefully for the 12-3 spikers the growing pains will cease by then.

Linksters finish low in NE

CONCORD — The University of Massachusetts men's golf team traveled to the New England Golf championships Monday and Tuesday and came home with a 24th place finish. It's not that UMass played poorly, rather they were in the company of a very competitive 43 team field.

UMass was led by sophomore Bill Meade who shot a 167 for the two days. Junior Tyler Shearer and freshman Curt Marion both shot 168. John Couig was three strokes behind at 171 to give the team a 674 total. This year's top player, James Ryan and last year's ace Brian Fitzgerald were unable to make the trip due to previous commitments.

"The course was in excellent shape and it was ideal fall weather," said coach Ed Vlach. However, the competition at the tournament such as this one was too much for the Minutemen. Central Connecticut, won the tournament with an impressive total of 612.

UMass travels to Williams today for a match. The Minutemen hope to have the entire squad with them.

Liz Sullivan leads the UMass women's tennis

By ARIEL FOWLER
Collegian Correspondent

Elizabeth (Lil) Sullivan, number one singles player and tri-captain for the University of Massachusetts tennis team is burning up the courts and experts this fall to be one of her best seasons yet.

Born and raised in Brooklyn, New York, the 21 year old exercise science major started competing at age nine in EL/TA (Eastern Lawn Tennis Association) tournaments and got an impressive ranking of eighth in the 12 and under division. She was also a member of the National Junior Tennis team.

"Here I developed a baseline game where I mixed up the pace and spin on my groundstrokes," said Sullivan. "I still play this way today but feel that my forehand and serve are my strongest strokes."

Moving to Seekonk Mass., Sullivan became well known as she played number one singles for Seekonk High and established an impressive 55-1 record in her 3 years of play. Her athletic talent also carried over into varisty cross-country and basketball.

The swift and graceful player has been pacing, slicing and stroking her way to victory for four years at UMass. In the fall of 1981, she was a semi-finalist in the New Englands tournament held at Yale. In the spring of '82 she was a finalist in the Seven Sisters tournament and a few weeks later traveled to the EAIAW Nationals tourney with the UMass team held in Greeley, Colorado.

Last fall, she made it to the quarterfinals in the MAIAW state tourney and helped her team place fifth overall in the Atlantic Ten Championships held at Penn State last spring.

This year she feels her teammates have depth, consistency and anticipates a good year ahead.

"Lil's playing extremely well, working hard and has improved since last spring. She's quicker, more alert and confident. I think this is going to be her season," said UMass coach Pat Stewart.

When not playing, Sullivan passes her fine qualities and abilities on to others through teaching tennis. In the summers of 1978 and 1979 she went to live and teach with her sister in New Mexico. All American Sports tennis camp welcomed her aboard at Deerfield, Mass. in 1981. This past summer she was the Head Pro at Touisset Point Community Club.

"I plan to work at a hospital or fitness center doing stress testing and cardiac rehabilitation upon graduation," said Sullivan, now a senior.

Minutemen begin YC title quest

Optimism abounds as URI comes in for a vital game

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

Are you a critic? Are you prone to harsh or captious judgment? Do you think Dennis Conner should be stripped of his citizenship?

If the answer to these questions is yes, and you saw the University of Massachusetts football team limp to a 17-0 loss to Holy Cross in the home opener two weeks ago, then you probably decided not to attend Alumni Stadium when the Minutement host the University of Rhode Island Rams at 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Are you an optimist? Do you think the goods of life overbalance the pain and evil? Do you like to party on Homecoming Day and watch a good football game? If the answer to these questions is yes then you probably will be somewhere in the vicinity of Alumni Stadium tomorrow when the Minutemen open the season within a season and the drive for post season play — the Yankee Conference season.

Okay, so the Minutemen got trampled on in the season opening 45-13 loss to the University of Toledo. And they were mistake prone the following week against Holy Cross at Alumni Stadium, but the Minutemen came back with a 21-7 road win last week against Harvard and the scramble for the Yankee Conference title is underway for the Minutemen.

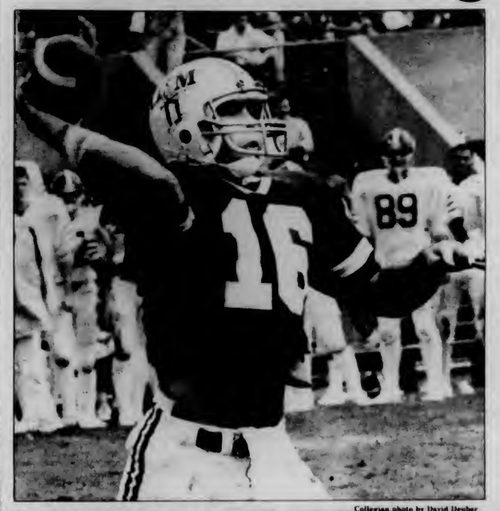
The critic sees an offensive line that doesn't do their job. They see a team that is mistake prone. They see a team that will fail.

The optimist sees a team starting with a clean slate, a team riding a one game win streak. He sees an improving young quarterback and an offensive line that is getting its act together. He sees an awesome defensive secondary that has become the strength of the team.

Of course, the head coach is also the head optimist.

"We improved drastically in one week," UMass coach Bob Pickett noted after the Harvard ...p. "We must continue this improvement. I feel the greatest improvement we showed was in our poise and intensity."

Improvement. A word that has been popping up every time the subject of this young team comes up. From a blowout at Toledo to a disappointing loss to Holy Cross to a confidence building win over Harvard, this team is moving in the right direction — up.



"I think this will be quite a football game," said Ram head coach Bob Griffin." I know this may be a bit early in the season, but I think this game could turn out to be the key to both of us for the Yankee Conference Championship."

The key to the championship indeed. The Yankee Conference has ended in a tie three of the last four years and the dreaded tie-breaker could come back to haunt both teams, as it did to Massachusetts in 1981 when Rhody tied UMass for the title and went to the NCAA Division 1-AA postseason playoffs due to regular season win over UMass.

The Minuteman defense could have its hands full with a Rams offense that has scored in its last 40 games. This year the offense is led by fullback Steve Gaizzi, who has rambled for five touchdowns already this year.

Quarterback Dave Wienke is lighting up the airways thus far, averaging 220 yards per game in the air. He and split end Jim Adams (7 catches 165 yards) and wide receiver Dameon Reilly (14 catches 297 yards) will test the UMass secondary led by Grady Fuller, (2 interceptions), Yankee Conference Co-Defensive Player-of-the-Week Jack Shay (1 interception) and

UMass-URI not the bitterest rivals

This is the second in an occasional series about UMass rivalries.

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Some rivalries just don't burn as bright as others. They are there but something seems to be missing. The players don't get as hyped up about the game and their opponents.

Maybe there isn't really a rivalry at all. Could this be the case with Saturday's Homecoming football clash between the University of Massachusetts and University of Rhode Island?

Well.....I don't think so. True, in the last twenty-four years UMass has defeated their Yankee Conference rivals from Kingston eighteen times.

But, it is the oldest rivalry in the Yankee Conference dating back to 1903. The record stands at 28-27-2 in favor of UMass.

But the thing about URI that irks so many UMass football fans is the way they snuck into the 1981 NCAA Div. I-AA playoffs just two short years ago. They got in at the expense of the Minutemen, who had a 6-3 record.

Both teams tied for the Yankee Conference title (with a 4-1 record) but the Rams got the bid due to their 16-10 win here in Amherst.

Saturday's game is a big game for the Minutemen. It's their first Yankee Conference game and coming off their big win over the Harvard Crimson, UMass has to be on a roll, ready for the game.

URI comes to Alumni Stadium 1-0 in the Yankee Conference (with a win over Maine) and is looking to stay in the hunt. But UMass, and especially the seniors, who were sophomores when the Rams stole their thunder in 1981 won't be looking for anything but a rout of the Rams.

The Saturday football game between the Minutemen and the Rams will be a heated one. One that may cripple someone's Yankee Conference title hopes. And maybe one that will add more fuel to the UM-URI football rivalry.

Battered kickers host Vermont as UMass opens '83 home slate

By TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

The busiest man this past weekend for the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team wasn't head coach Jeff Gettler or any of the players--it was the trainer. An order was placed for more crutches, bandages, and slings as UMass will limp to Boyden field to take on the University of Vermont in their home opener Saturday at 12 noon.

UMass captain Kevin Flynn will lead the 0-2-3 Minutemen soccer team in search of their first win against Vermont Saturday at noon at Boyden.

Three Minutemen will sit out the game against the Catamounts. Goalie Don Donahue ripped his groin muscle, and looks to be lost for the rest of the season. Defensive center back Frank Neffinger, always assigned to the best player on the opposing team, is out for three weeks with a separated shoulder. Defensive back Mike Runeare has broken blood vessels in his leg and is out for two weeks. When it rains, it pours.

Freshman Jamie Firmage will make his first division I start on this Homecoming Saturday. He will go up against a tough Vermont team that has always been tough against UMass in the past. Ironically, Vermont beat the Minutemen during their homecoming weekend last year, 3-1.

They're always a good opponent. It's always a battle," said coach Gettler, referring to Vermont, "They're a pretty physical team. We'll be real happy to be back at friendly Boyden."

Indeed, Boyden should be quite amiable to Gettler's club, as they were 4-1-2 last season. The smile extended on coach Gettler's face when he said that out of their remaining 14 games, 11 are at home. But do the many injuries worry Gettler?

"We are improved in every area, including the bench," said Gettler, "I'm not afraid to rely on depth."

Another reason for the open-arms welcome home is probably the tough 0-2-3 road trip the Minutemen just experienced. Four of the five games were against high-caliber schools — the only game that UMass could have doubts about is the New Hampshire game — a game in which they feel they should have won.

Coach Gettler, however, is confident that a victory over Vermont may be a good prelude to the football game on Saturday. "I'm not going to make any major changes. Most of the things we are doing are good things so something good is bound to happen soon."

Finally, Gettler would like to extend his personal invitation to attend the game; but realizing the pre-football game traditions here at UMass, he also suggests tailgating at the soccer game. Gettler would like to "get the weekend off on a winning foot."

Lots of weekend events for everyone

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

A bonfire, float parade and alumni reunions will highlight this weekend's homecoming, sponsored by the Greek Area and Office of Alumni Affairs at the University of Massachusetts.

The UMass Marching Band, football team and coach Bob Pickett will be among the spectators and participants at a bonfire set for 7 p.m. tonight at the Campus Pond.

"Bedtime Stories and Fairy Tales" is the theme for a parade through Amherst Saturday morning. Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs, the Three Little Pigs and Billy Goat's Gruff are several of the floats currently under construction by various sororities and fraternities, said Elizabeth MacDonald, Greek Affairs office intern. Dormitories as well as Greek houses may also enter floats in the parade and should report to parking lot 32 for assembly at 10 a.m.

The parade route will leave Haigis Mall at 11 a.m. and proceed down Massachusetts Ave. to North Pleasant Street through the center of town. The route then turns right onto Amity St., following it to University Drive and then proceeding on to the stadium.

The floats will be constructed of crepe paper on flat beds or trucks and will be staffed by characters in full costume.

Reunions for the classes of 1968, 1973 and 1978 will kick off before the football game, scheduled to begin at 1:30 p.m. A tent will be set up on the north side of the stadium for an alumni reception and a fee will be charged for the beer. Following the game, "Class of '83 Day" will be held in the parking lot, also on the north side of the stadium, which is open by invitation only.

About 2000 reunited and other alumni are expected to attend a reception from 4:30 to 8:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. There will be a cash bar there.

The Greek community is also sponsoring a Homecoming queen contest. A table on the Campus Center concourse this past week has displayed photographs of the candidates, one from each sorority, and has required a 1 cent donation for each vote. The money raised will go to the Amherst Survival Center.

A reception for alumni of the Greek system will take place from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. in the Hatch. Admission is $1.

Spikers host 16 team UMass Classic tourney at Boyden

By ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts (12-3) volleyball team is hosting their own invitational tournament this weekend, the UMass Classic. The twelve team tourney promises to be loaded with action and talent.

The top teams in New England will be squaring off in Boyden Gym beginning tonight at 6 p.m. UMass will have to play without the services of Kirsten Smith (sprained ankle) and possibly without Leslie Smith as well. Leslie is on a day to day basis with a dislocated shoulder.

"One major concern is getting Leslie back for some depth," declared head coach Elaine Sortino.

Depth could be a key issue for all the teams in the tournament. Each team must play three pool play matches, each consisting of the best two of three. The top teams from each of the four pools must return Saturday to play the semi-finals and finals as well.

"In practice, we will be working on conditioning for the upcoming tournaments," said Sortino. "We're not out of shape, we're just not use to reaching the semis and finals of the tourneys. It is all part of our adjustment."

UMass has drawn one of the toughest pools. They must face Cornell, C.W. Post and Holy Cross. Post recently defeated UMass, Holy Cross is division I and..."Cornell crushed us last year! That was our worst game last year," reflected assistant coach Sara Bonthius.

Other teams to look for this weekend are: New Haven, Springfield, West Point, New York Tech and Fairleigh Dickinson.

Alumni come back for more than just the football game

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

When they return to the home of the fighting Minutemen, University of Massachusetts alumni are usually treated to receptions, brunches, cocktail hours at the halftime tent and other what-have-you-been-doing-it's-so-good-to-see-you-again type events.

They came back for football, that is a fact. But somehow the conversation always seems to stray, especially during the tailgating parties and halftime shows, toward dorm life and past acquaintances and a desire to know what in hell has been going on at the beloved "Zoo" since they left.

Just about as many women as men seem to come back; football regardless, and at the alumni reception tomorrow afternoon at Memorial Hall, the filled room will be proof of point. At the information desk in the Campus Center Concourse, attendants will continually give out information to the alumni events, and persons walking away from the booths will be heard to remark how much the campus has changed since they had been away. Time, it seemed, that is equally as long to a graduate of '82 as to a graduate of '23.

They'll notice little things like how someone replaced all the letters on the "Murray D. Lincoln" campus center sign, which seemed to be so popular in dorm rooms. They'll walk around the campus center and wonder what happened to the little tomahawks painted on the poles of the Hatch. They'll be amazed, many of them, at how many students seem to be on campus, and noted humorous things, like how clean the Southwest area dorms seem to be, and how Washington Tower hasn't yet sunk into the earth as it was expected to back when Southwest was an experimental, temporary student housing.

Peter Cross, an '81 zoology major who now lives in San Antonio, Texas, sighed and looked at the leaves of the trees near the campus pond, slowly turning color, and remarked about the memories UMass football aroused in him.

"When I went here, the football team was good. Not the best in the world, but good, and it was a regular thing for me and my friends to go. We'd hit the game, then maybe go to the Blue Wall or over to my dorm, Pierpont, and party. This sounds kind of corny," he added, "but I came back here also to feel autumn, which we don't get much of in Texas. I also lived up in Orchard Hill, and it was really nice every morning to walk down to class and 'smell the fall morning."

Jocelyn Hack, '78 School of Public Health grad, mentioned, almost hesitantly, that it wasn't so much the football that attracted her, but the social atmosphere it created, and the fun of getting everyone on her Mary Lyons floor to go.

"The football team, I have to say, wasn't any particularly great attraction for me. What was fun was just getting out there and watching people watch each other."

Football, it is true, is the game of the day. Football, it is true, is also a good excuse for the day, too.

Faculty union starts petition against Knapp

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

In an effort to persuade University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp to drop plans to fight a reinstatement order of a UMass professor, the Massachusetts Society of Professors announced Thursday they will curculate a petition among faculty members.

Lawyers representing the University were scheduled to go to court Thursday to argue against a reinstatement order of a UMass professor who was denied tenure in 1981.

The court hearing was postponed.

The petition, which Faculty Senate members were asked to sign following Thursday's meeting, will be circulated throughout the entire faculty, said Linda Lockwood, representative of MSP to the Faculty Senate.

The professor denied tenure Ann Mochon, was granted a reinstatement with back pay by the State Labor Relations Commission (SLRC) in July.

Three years ago Mochon was approved for tenure from the chair of the art department, the college personnel committee and the dean of the college of humanities and fine arts. Then Chancellor Henry Koffler denied her request.

The MSP filed a grievance in May 1981 following the tenure rejection. In September of that year, Koffler denied the grievance and Knapp refused an administrative appeal in November.

MSP filed for arbitration with the SLRC in January 1982. In July an arbitrator ruled Mochon should be reinstated with back pay and new consideration. Earlier this month the administration moved to vacate the award.

UTC employees greeted with disapproval

Bearing signs reading "UTC out of UMass" and "Stop the MX Missile," approximately 200 University of Massachusetts students demonstrated Thursday to protest a defense contractor's conference on campus.

Following a 45 minute rally outside the Student Union Building, about 50 students continued up to the conference rooms on the ninth floor of the Campus Center to voice their concerns, but were denied permission to meet with representatives of United Technologies Corporation.

Students claimed UTC is the second largest defense contractor in the United States. They said they wanted to find out the purpose fo the corporation's conference, and voice their concerns over the nuclear arms race.

"We have a responsibility to try and educate them (UTC) too," said Kathy Smith, a graduate English student. "(We want to tell them) you have a stake in this as we do — you could die, you could bleed."

The protesters were confined to the area near the Campus Center lobby by building officials and Director of Public Safety Gerald O'Neill, who claimed the demonstrators were disrupting offices on the floor.

After an hour, with the crowd down to about 20 people, the protesters were permitted to picket quietly outside the conference rooms for a few minutes.

Campus Center employees told the crowd UTC officials were trying to obtain permission from their main office in Hart-

Friday afternoon means Blue Wall happy hour for many

by LISA MOSLEY
Collegian Staff

So far this week you've flunked a quiz, inadvertantly insulted your toughest professor, passed a rubber check to your landlord for the rent, and broken you roommate's brand new electric typewriter.

But don't worry, it's Friday. Time for the only thing that could possibly soothe all you troubles away. Happy hour.

Although there are five bars on campus, most students associate Friday afternoon happy hour with the Blue Wall. This phenomenon exists, according to Blue Wall floor supervisor Brian Sullivan, because "the Blue Wall has the best happy hour east of Mississippi."

To anyone who's ever waited in line outside the Wall on Friday afternoon, this isn't so far from being true.

Michael Brown, a senior marketing major and Blue Wall bouncer attributes the popularity of the Wall's happy hour to "a certain mystique about the Blue Wall." Said Brown, "The Blue Wall is the first place you want to go when you turn twenty."

Maybe it's the age of the crowd that lends that air of carefree abandon with just a touch of roudiness to a Wall happy hour.

Or maybe it's musician/comediene/MC Cliff Meyers' endless stream of oldies, bawdy ditties and jokes that spark the big party atmosphere.

Senior film studies major Andy Gordon calls it this way: "You blow a ton of money, listen to some vulger twit sing in a dark overcrowded sauna bath, drive shitfaced through Amherst and pass out by 7 p.m., but I wouldn't miss it for the world."

Registry issues 257 liquor licences

By RISA FREEMAN

Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts Registry of Motor Vehicles issued 257 Massachusetts State Liquor licenses in the Blue Wall at the University of Massachusetts Tuesday and Thursday.

Many students do not have the time or accessability to go to the registry in Northampton to obtain the card and officials agreed to bring equipment to campus "mainly to accomodate the students," Phillip J. Cavanaugh, associate director of Public Safety at UMass said. Cavanaugh added that it is a joint effort of the UMass Police Department, the Amherst Police Department, the Registry of Motor Vehicles and the Blue Wall.

Originally, the event was to take place both Tuesday and Thursday, from 9 a.m. to noon in the Blue Wall, and from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. in the Amherst Town Hall. Because of the successful turnout at the Blue Wall on Tuesday morning, and the minimal turnout at the Town Hall in the afternoon, officials decided to spend all day yesterday in the Blue Wall, Cavanaugh said.

"It's been very successful and we will probably do it again once a year if it is not abused," Miles Seaver, UMass Food Services manager, said.

Hannah Jelinek, 21, senior business major from New York said, "Coming here is the least they (registry officials) can do. Since the state wants us to have liquor licenses, they should come to us."

Greg White, 22, senior economics major from Pennsylvania said he never needed a liquor license before. "My Pennsylvania license has all the information on it and I don't see why I have to pay an extra $5 to drink in Massachusetts," White said. "It's a stupid idea that we have to go through and I'm doing it just to avoid future hassles," he added.

Student reactions to the accessability of registry officials was positive but many did not like the idea that they had to get a card in the first place.

Reagan given authority to keep Marines in Lebanon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate invoked the Vietnam-era War Powers Act for the first time yesterday and voted 54 to 46 to give President Reagan broad authority to keep 1,600 U.S. Marines in Lebanon for the next 18 months.

The joint resolution, approved by the Democratic House on Wednesday, gives specific approval to Reagan's policies in Lebanon. Reagan has said he will sign it.

The vote ends a month of frequently emotional debate triggered by the deaths of two Marines in Beirut on Aug. 29.

Although the outcome was not in doubt as the debate ended, Vice President George Bush held the gavel in the chamber in his role as constitutional president of the Senate in case his vote was needed to break a tie, underlying the importance of the vote to the administration.

In all, four Marines have been killed and more than 30 wounded as part of an international peacekeeping effort designed to end the fighting among religious factions in Lebanon and encourage the withdrawal of foreign forces, including Syrians and Israelis.

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee, a principal negotiator of the compromise agreement, said while he has "grave doubts" about the wisdom of keeping the troops in Lebanon, "The Marines are there...they are under fire. It would be a mistake of tragic proportions if Congress were to vote to withdraw them."

The resolution says the Marine deployment — plus troops from Great Britain, France and Italy — "better enables the government of Lebanon to establish its unity, independence and territorial integrity."

Critics of the resolution said it amounts to a blank check which could lead the United States into another Vietnam War.

They also said Reagan, not Congress, should invoke the 1973 War Powers Act, requiring that the troops be withdrawn in 60 days unless the House and Senate vote otherwise.

Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd Jr., leader of the opposition to the compromise resolution, said just before the vote: "Politics is the art of compromise. War is not."

BOG wrestles with crowding problem

By RALPH ROBERTS
Collegian Correspondent

The Campus Center at the University of Massachusetts is engaged in an overcrowding problem, according to Board of Governors (BOG) Chairman Mike Reilly.

Reilly said the biggest project the BOG has had, is finding a new home for the school radio station, WMUA, who has been recently "booted" from Marston Hall, in the Engineering department.

"We decided to move WMUA down to the 1st floor of the Campus Center, adjacent to the Collegian news office, and form a communications center," Reilly said.

For the past 18 months, the Campus Center has been locked in a "space war," where there simply aren't enough rooms to go around. "We have a list of groups waiting to get into this building," said Reilly.

The contract for WMUA to move into the Campus Center begins on Saturday. There are, however, four problems which have to be taken care of before WMUA can make the move.

In order for the move to take place, four offices including the Lesbian Union, Handicapped Students Collective, the Panhellenic Council (the main Fraternity and Sorority office), and the "Spectrum" literary magazine have to move out of their offices, according to Reilly. Now those four groups still have to find a home.

In addition to these actions, the BOG motioned to create a Space Use Task Force, comprised of four members of the Recognized Student Organization (RSO). Their essential task will be to make recommendations concerning space moves and policies to the BOG.

While the "space wars" continue, there is a line of groups that wish to receive office space in the Campus Center. Reilly said, in all fairness to the groups, the BOG was going to make sure that all present offices were taking full advantage of their "set-up," and "If a group is never around to service the students, we will begin action to dismiss them as quickly as possible."

In the meantime, some of the homeless groups' supplies are being stored in various areas including the Sylvan radio station, WSYC, and in the Text Book Annex.

ROTC members are treated equally

BY MARY-SHEILA LAUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

Women in the Reserved Officers Training Corps (ROTC) at the University of Massachusetts receive equal treatment in comparison with men, according to ROTC officers and cadets.

Staff Sergeant Jeannette Snyder of the Air Force ROTC said the same standards are set for both men and women.

"The only difference is women cadets do not have to cut their hair." This also applies to active duty, she said.

Operations Officer Major David G. Sim, said the Army ROTC also sets standards that apply equally to male and female cadets.

After graduation from college, cadets in both the Air Force and the Army choose a field in which to specialize. Women cadets in the Air Force are not restricted to specialize in any field, Snyder said. Many women specialize as engineers, pilots, or navigators.

In the Army, women may specialize in anything except combat arms, Sim said. There are, however, two subdivisions of field artillery in which women can specialize.

Cadet Steve Fritz, a junior journalism/history major, said women are an asset to the army ROTC.

"The women in the program have the capabilities to meet the same standards as the men, Fritz said. "Some of the women in UMass ROTC excel in what they are doing. It's the same as with the guys; some are better than you and some are not," he said.

Holly Linnehan, a senior history major, and Eileen Lento, a senior mechanical engineering major, both agree they have been treated fairly by fellow ROTC members.

"I have had a fantastic career as a cadet," Linnehan, a top cadet and Core Commander in the Air Force ROTC, said.

"I think men in this area are more sensitized to women's rights," Lento, Deputy Commander in the Air Force ROTC said. "This area is kept more politically aware than many other areas," she said.

Lento will be graduating from UMass in December. She has orders, effective in June, to continue her education at an undergraduate pilot training base in Columbus, Mississippi.

Sheila Ryan, a senior environmental science major and a graduate of army ROTC at UMass, said she enjoyed ROTC.

"I found the experience challenging. It built up my confidence and leadership skills," she said.

Area supermarket competition is hot

By DAVID MUNIZ
Collegian Staff

In the world of supermarkets, bigger is better. At least that's what the people at Super Stop and Shop on Route 9 in South Hadley are banking on. The mammoth marketplace, which opened last month, has drawn huge crowds of people who are curious to see just how super a super Stop and Shop is.

Is this new competition hurting other stores' business? "Originally it was bad," said Doug Fleury, Price Chopper shift manager. "They took 20 percent of our business away from us the first few weeks, but now it's much better. Business is only off about 10 percent," he said.

One way that Price Chopper combatted the opening of Super Stop and Shop was an ambitious price campaign.

"What we did was had customers try to find a price that was lower than ours on any item from any other store and then they would get the product free of charge," Fleury said. Price Chopper has since discontinued that approach, however, because "now that business is back we don't need it."

Most shoppers at both stores cited location, prices, and selection as their main reason for shopping where they do. They also stated a loyalty towards one particular store for no particular reason.

One shopper at Price Chopper, who works in the cheese department of Super Stop and Shop and declined to give her name, cited price as her reason for shopping at Price Chopper, "but the quality is better at Stop and Shop," she was quick to add.

Other Price Chopper shoppers cited their reasons for patronizing the store. Two women shopping in the produce department said, "It's closer, more convenient, and they have better vegies." A UMass student who lives in Southwest said, "It's closer." A shopper in the card department said, "The prices are lower."

At Stop and Shop shoppers cited selection and curiosity about the new store as their main reasons for shopping there. Two first year students from UMass, Diana Schlegel and Janet Risman, typified Stop and Shop shoppers' response. "It's big, and it has everything," they said.

Both stores are open 24 hours a day. Super Stop and Shop has a salad bar, pasta factory, bakery, florist, a furniture and housewares department, toys and a Barnes and Nobles Book Store. Patrons must have a courtesy card to cash checks there. Price Chopper features a card department, bakery and video game cassettes and an account with the store is not needed to cash checks.

But there is more competition to come. On Oct. 22, a natural food supermarket will hold its grand opening right down the street. Bread & Circus will be located in the Mountain Farms Mall.

Smart Shoppers — The competition is heavy between Price Chopper and newly opened Stop and Shop. Both supermarkets are sporting new departments and greater variety.

On a recent Wednesday night, both stores were doing a moderate amount of business. At Price Chopper, the majority of cars parked out in front of the store had UMass parking stickers on their left side windows, indicating a lot of business is generated by their proximity to the campus. The average age on that particular night, of both shoppers and employees, could be estimated at around 21 or so.

Super Stop and Shop had more of an older crowd, with families shopping together. The average age of shoppers at Super Stop and Shop could be estimated at around 25 and up.

Budweiser crew hitting colleges with Bud Revere

The Blue Wall was the host last night to a celebrity, of sorts. Bue Revere, a robot, and Budweiser beer's latest promotional tool hung aroung the Blue Wall, drank beer, and tried to pick up a date.

The three-month-old, computerized robot is one of four robots who tour the country promoting Budweiser beer.

According to Russell Worthington, the robot's operator, "There are four robots altogether, representing the states that they come from." He also said that each robot is dressed in their regional costume.

"In Florida, there's beach Bud. He's dressed as a beach bum. In Louisiana, there's Rhett Budweiser, like the character from "Gone With the Wind." In Texas, there's Sheriff Bud, and in Massachusetts, there's Bud Revere.

Over the summer, Bud was down on the Cape, entertaining at local bars. Revere has also been on NBC-TV, during football games' half-time shows. Worthington also asid that Revere can be seen at Sullivan Stadium in Foxboro in the parking lot whenever the Patriots are playing a home game.

Right now, the Bud crew is hitting the colleges. According to Worthington, "He was at Western New England College, and at North Adams State last week. Tonight he's at the Blue Wall, and tomorrow night, it's Poor Dick's, Time Out, and Plumley's." Bud Revere is truly a busy robot.

The robot can do a number of things. It drinks beer, talks, walks, and has a built-in stereo that plays Budweiser beer commercials. It also gives out lots of free Budweiser merchandise.

On the personal side, Revere, despite his hectic schedule, still manages to keep a relationship up with Bud Light. Some say it's serious.

Both seats open for SWAG co-president

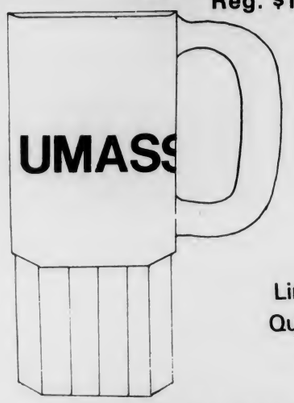
By ANDY WOLFF
Collegian Correspondent

The Southwest Area Government lost a co-president and $1,340 last night in its first meeting of the fall semester.

Fran Hegeler, re-elected last year along with Mike Bean, has stepped down from her post due to "unforseen academic commitments," according to her resignation message read by Bean last night.

The resignation opens up both seats for SWAG Co-President. A special in-house election is scheduled for next Thursday at which time Bean and Dave McCarthy will be running. Nominations are open to oppose the two.

The $1,340 was additional money allocated for the payment of an "instruction honoraria" for the Southwest Residential College. According to Treasurer Rosemarie Longo, the money would come out of the Student Action Trust Fund (SATF) used to help other organizations and fund group programs in the Southwest Area.



"Wherever the money goes, it must benefit the constituents," she said in her message introducing new members to the financial workings of SWAG.

Another measure to allocate $1,000 to WMUA for broadcasting UMass football and basketball games was tabled to the Finance Committee for further consideration.

Longo will be handling the $44,000 allocated to SWAG by the Student Government Association. That amount, broken down, will be used during the two semesters, and amounts to about $8.00 per Southwest resident. There are about 5,500 students living in Southwest.

ford so a meeting could be arranged.

But Robert Hogan, director of media operations for United Technologies, denied the office had been contacted.

"We haven't heard from anyone," he said.

Hogan said 30 UTC technical managers are at UMass for a two week "advanced technical studies program."

"The purpose of the program is to give them management training in emerging technologies," he said.

Although United Technologies makes "solid rocket engines that might end up in missiles," Hogan said, "we do not make Trident Submarines, and we certainly are not the prime contractor for the MX missile," as some of the protesters had charged.

Hogan said the company has "every intention of staying" at UMass for the rest of next week, despite the protests.

Another demonstration is planned for next week.

"MSP is outraged at this violation of this trust," Lockwood said.

The petition, signed by George T. Sulzner, acting (MSP) president states the MSP "cannot allow the administration to reserve to itself the 'right' to be arbitrary and capricious in personnel matters."

MSP is also considering a motion to censure Knapp in the Faculty Senate, according to the petition.

At the Senate meeting Lockwood asked Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey to respond to Knapp's actions and tell what Whitmore was planning to do about the situation.

Duffey said he was "not inclined to summarizing the perspective of President Knapp or his attorneys. They can do that themselves."

Duffey said he was "pleased the union is not challenging the administrative role in granting of tenure."

Knapp could not be reached for comment.

Lockwood said she thinks the petition will "have a lot of effect on Knapp," by showing him the faculty does not support his actions.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Senior Day Hijinx

This weekend, alumni from the Class of '83 are coming back for Homecoming Weekend. They are also returning to finally have their Senior Day, which was cancelled due to rain last spring. As if they had had enough problems through their four years — as first year students, they found that their main library, "The Tower," was closed. The next year they greeted the new season by being sent home due to a water shortage. University budget fights, the coming and going of three different Chancellors, and many other hardships certainly made their years here challenging ones.

This weekend more than a thousand alumni and friends from the class of '83 finally get to come and drink their beer and have a good time, amidst cries from those who paid $3.75 for Senior Day and only received one lousy beer mug. But that's a whole different story, and it's not their fault. It is unfortunate that only alumni can attend these festivities, but lack of funds and security have made the possibility of a larger event impossible at this time.

This raises some questions. For one thing, what happened to the cash everybody paid for those mugs (with the crooked UMass logo) in the first place? This money came out of the Student Activities Office and the SATF Trust Fund, and was supposed to be allocated by a student Senior Day Committee. Granted the money from the "blown" event might have been returned into some trust fund, to disappear forever.

But what of all those people who paid their money and get nothing in return? And what of the Student Activities Office, who neither contributed money for this weekend's "Class of 1983 Day," nor made any attempt of including those who paid as participants in the event? Luckily for the alumni, the Alumni Affairs "took the ball" and organized the event, otherwise nothing would have been done. Last year it was announced that those who paid would be rewarded for the cancellation by an even bigger event this year. This simply has not happened.

So for those of you who are returning as alumni from the Class of 1983, have a great time, and tell the rest of us what happened.

— The Editor —

Twenty, and I can't drink

Out-of-state students here at the University have to put up with a lot of things. We pay a higher bill. We hear our own home states constantly made fun of. Some of us can legally drink at home and come here to the Commonwealth and have to go dry.

And, of all things, we have to suffer with those New England Patriots.

But, we choose to tolerate these things in order to go to the school of our choice here in Amherst.

Gerry deSimas

However, there is one thing we should not have to stand for; those Massachusetts Liquor Identification cards are unfair and discriminatory to out-of-staters.

Why should residents of Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Jersey and other states that issue their residents photo ID's have to pay the state of Massachusetts another five dollars for the right to drink and buy alcohol in the Amherst area and the state? What is wrong with a valid out-of-state driver's photo ID?

Now, in fairness to whoever wrote this measure, out-of-staters who do not have a photo ID (for example, New Yorkers) ahould get a photo ID from the Mass. Liquor Commission. But for the rest it is a waste of money.

Doesn't the state of Massachusetts have something better to spend their money and time on than taking photo ID's for students who already possess a valid photo ID from their own home state?

One local paper said that several area drinking establishments and liquor stores will only accept a Mass. driver's license or the Mass. Liquor ID as proof of age.

Why do the area merchants, whose lifeblood are the students, seek to aggravate this minority? Even though out-of-staters are only 15 percent of the UMass population, they do buy in this area.

Doesn't everyone realize that no matter what kind of ID you possess, you still have to read the date on the ID to determine if the student is over 20?

This program is discriminatory to out-of-staters. Is there no civility for us? I would hate to hear the ruckus if the state tried to do this with Massachusetts residents.

Would area merchants deny Berke Breathed, creator of bloom county and a resident from Iowa, access to their establishment because he didn't have a valid Mass. Liquor ID? He was here this week—how could he have had a drink?

There is a solution. It is simple and doesn't cost a cent. Just simply check the dates on existing out-of-state ID's (gee, they accept my Connecticut ID in CT, NY and RI) and if they are not in good condition, don't accept them no matter if they are from Connecticut, Rhode Island, Illinois, or even Massachusetts.

If merchants did this, then there would be no need for us to waste the students' time and money, and the state's time and energy.

Why create more work when it's just not needed?

What is this "Resistance?"

To the Editor,

If you have been watching the Editorial page of the Collegian recently, you probably have noticed the recurring attacks upon the Student Senate, culminating in Wednesday's Editorial comic depicting Chris Sullivan (Speaker of the Student Senate) entering the Senate chambers in full battle gear. This comic, and the two preceding articles on the Senate and the Commuter Area Government are gross misrepresentations of the Senate, The Commuters, and the goals that these organizations are working towards. The theory that is proposed by the so-called "Resistance," although difficult to understand due to internal logical discrepancies, seems to be based upon certain general assumptions; implying that the Senate is controlled by a "Clique" which ignores the concerns of the "Average Student" and defends the rights of certain "special interest groups." Unfortunately, all three of the concepts advanced are inherently incorrect.

A "Clique" in usual terms, is a group of individuals, bound together politically, in order to advance the personal interests of the group in power. In order to have what is termed a "Clique" the members of this group must be generally concerned with enhancing the personal power of the individual and as a result the power of the group as a whole. Since the goals and objectives of the Student Senate are far from what can be considered "Personal interest" the term Clique cannot apply. The Senate is attempting to enhance student involvement within the University, defend and protect student rights, encourage social awareness, combat sexism, racism, anti-Semitism and oppression on campus, and provide the student with activities and events that will not only enhance the educational and cultural experience of students but also provide them with the necessary environment essential for political and institutional consciousness. These issues can hardly be termed "Self-interest."

The second point, one which I find insulting, is the concept of the Average Student. In the eyes of many "Resistors," the "Average Student" seeks only personal advancement, and personal gratification; s/he is shallow, narrow-minded, and politically ignorant. I find this idea insulting to myself and to the entire UMass population.

T.W. Rudolf, in his article, "All is not well in the S.G.A." makes certain charges about the Senate that are not based in reality. He implies that the elections are other than "fair and equitable." This assertion is incorrect. In the present system, any student who pays their student activities fee is eligible for election to the Senate, and there is nothing anyone can do to stop an individual from taking his/her seat once elected. The process is quite simple, a prospective student has only to fill out the standard nomination papers, submit them, and ask for people's vote in the elections. There is no mystery to this process, there is only a lack of participation on the part of students. What T.W. Rudolf does not seem to understand is that by painting the picture of the Senate as unresponsive, uncaring, and unapproachable, he is discouraging students from becoming involved. Ironically, he calls for democratization of the Senate, student involvement, and from becoming involved. Ironically, he calls for democratization of the Senate, student involvement, and "Responsibility" but only succeeds in alienating prospective applicants from the Senate. This problem is apparent in the fact that 1/3 of on-campus seats have received no candidates. The "resistance" is adding to this problem, not helping to solve it. Apparently, this was partly the effect of the Editorial comic in Wednesday's Collegian, which characterized the Senate as aggressive, violent, and unreasonable.

Another point that T.W. Rudolf makes is that the Senate supports issues that have "little or nothing to do with students on this campus." If one believes his assessment of the Average Student, then this charge may have some validity. However, I refuse to believe it.

If the "Resistance" has complaints about the current structure of the Senate, let them come to the weekly meetings, voice their concerns, and stand the test of truth in open debate and discussion. Let them win political adherents with arguments based in logic and reality, not accusation and speculation. Let them define their programs and propose new and innovative reform. However, let's not allow ourselves to digress into wild, irrational and untrue theories that misrepresent the Senate and characterize the average UMass student in such an insulting manner.

Before We Put You In Charge Of The World's Most Sophisticated Nuclear Equipment, We Put You Through The World's Most Sophisticated Nuclear Training.

It takes more than 16 months of intensive training to become a fully qualified officer in the Nuclear Navy. You begin with four months of leadership training. Then as a Navy officer you get a full year of graduate-level training unavailable anywhere else at any price.

Navy training is based on more than 1900 reactor-years of experience. Right now the Navy operates over half the nuclear reactors in America. And the Navy's nuclear equipment is the most sophisticated in the world. That's why your Navy training is and must be the most sophisticated in the world.

As an officer in the Nuclear Navy, you have decision-making authority immediately. You get important management responsibility fast. Because in the Navy, as your knowledge grows, so does your responsibility.

Your training and experience place you among the country's most qualified professionals. (No surprise that most of the men who operate the reactors in private industry started in the Nuclear Navy.)

It takes more time and more effort to become an officer in the Nuclear Navy. But the rewards are greater, too.

The rewards can begin as early as your junior year in college. Qualify, and the Navy will pay you approximately $1000/month while you finish school.

After four years, with regular promotions and salary increases, you can be earning as much as $40,500. That's on top of a benefits package that includes medical and dental care, and 30 days' vacation earned every year. More responsibility, more money, more future. So, if you're majoring in math, engineering or the physical sciences, and you want to know more about a future in nuclear power, fill in the coupon.

Today's Nuclear Navy is an opportunity like no other in the world.

Trailers by Andy Gordon

The Honorary Consul, discussed in last week's TRAILERS, has had it's title changed. The film, which stars Richard Gere and Michael Caine as a doctor and a diplomat, respectively, in love with the same woman, is now called Beyond the Limit. It opens today. Gere, meanwhile, is working on The Cotton Club, which Francis Ford Coppolla will direct, and Caine is in production for Only in Rio, a vacation comedy. Caine also stars in Columbia's Educating Rita, based on the London play, which also opens nationally today. They sure keep busy, God bless 'em.

Also opening today is Lawrence Kasdan's The Big Chill, about the reunion of a group of sixties radicals. Granted, it sounds exactly like Return of the Secaucus Seven, but that flick was great so what the heck. Kasdan (who directed Body Heat and wrote Raiders, Jedi and a slew of other big-time flicks) has ammassed a powerful cast, including Kevin Kline, Glenn Close, William Hurt, Jeff Goldblum, JoBeth Williams and Mary Kay Place. The group meets for a weekend on the sad occasion of a close friends suicide.

Some other potentially great pictures are being prepared for release this fall. Never Say Never Again, starring the real James Bond, Sean Connery, was postponed from a summer release so as not to compete with Roger Moore's latest dud (Okay, it wasn't that bad). Essentially a remake of Thunderball, the new film co-stars Rutger Hauer as Largo and Max Von Sydow as Blofeld. No Desmond Llewellyn though dammit. Another big star, Meryl Streep, has the title role in Silkwood a biography of the late Karen Silkwood. Mike Nichols directed and Kurt Russell and Cher co-star. Looks good.

On the other end of the intellectual spectrum, John Travolta and Olivia Newton John team up again as good-deed-doing ghosts. Silly.

That intense man, Dennis Hopper, shows up in several new films. In Francis Ford Coppolla's Rumble Fish he plays father to Matt Dillon and Mickey Rourke. Diane Lane, Diana Scarwid and Vinnie Spano also star in S.E. Hinton's greaser drama, which was shot in black and white. Hopper is also in the espionage actioner The Osterman Weekend, directed by Sam Peckinpah (so you know someone will get their head blown off). John Hurt and Burt Lancaster also star.

Taps alumni will be all over movie screens this fall. Tom Cruise plays a high-school football star in All The Right Moves, directed by cinematographer Michael Chapman. Craig T. Nelson plays Cruise's coach, hoping the boy's talent will get them both out of the dying Pennsylvania steel town. Sean Penn (who has like six projects in varying degrees of production) will be seen first in Louis Malle's Crackers. The comedy about a band of crooks also stars Donald Sutherland, Wallace Shawn and Jack Warden and was written by the author of Cutter's Way. Timothy Hutton's new film, Daniel, opened in Boston last week to generally unfavorable reviews. Look for it here sometime next month.

Local Best Bets: Good flicks everywhere. Amherst Cinema's got James Dean, the Academy of Music had Liquid Sky (Wicked fucked; go see it) and the malls have a bunch of new flicks, including The Big Chill.

Tonight the Campus Center Auditorium has the fantastic Dog Day Afternoon starring Al Pacino. Shown at 5:30, 8 and 10:30, admission is a mere buck. The film is sponsored by your favorite college daily (second favorite?).

TRAILERS Trivia: Everyone got last week's question correct. Dennis Taylor, Linda Barrett, Charles Jefferson and Ron Johnson are all characters from Fast Times at Ridgemont High. This week's question: What do the following films have in common: The Godfather, The Candidate, The Poseidon Adventure, Deliverance. The first correct answer will receive an 8x10 glossy of David Bowie sitting in a jeep with a Japanese guy.

While Al Pacino looks on, director Sidney Lumet sets up a shot for Dog Day Afternoon, which plays tonight at the CCA.

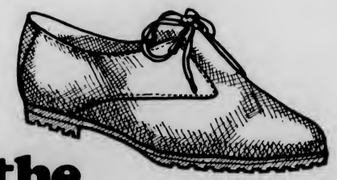
SOCIAL DISTORTION (13th Floor)
Mommy's Little Monster

By GERARD COSLOY
Collegian Staff

Once we've determined that punk's an uniquely American (anti-) art form--and I'm certain that plenty of people will worship the UK nonetheless--we can start arguing over which regional scene has made the biggest impact. Personal verdicts run as follows: Boston (Girls, La Peste)--too obscure. Akron (Devo, Pere Ubu)--too quirky. New York (Television, James White, Lydia Lunch)--too junked out, too pretentious, and too depressing to inspire. Los Angeles and San Francisco would be my personal choices, pioneers like the Germs or Negative Trend still cutting hard today, modern exponents like the Toiling Midgets or 45 Grave still pointing skyward.



The Avengers of SF (disbanded in 1980) were more hopeful than most, sparse attacks like "We Are The One" and "I Believe In Me" carrying the message, "so what if we're gonna die..let's TRY ANYWAY." The new compilation LP, Avengers (their Steve Jones-produced EP, plus unreleased live material) is gripping in its refusal to retreat into nihilistic rambling. When vocalist Penelope Houston tears through "Second to None," you get the feeling that for the Avengers, punk was no cheap joke, but maybe a death warrant that they could rip in half.

LA's X came out of the same '77/'78 scene as the Avengers, and for a while at least, the two bands sounded pretty similar; X's 1979 debut LP, Los Angeles serves as a fair complement to Avengers, albeit a tamer one. But where a band like the Avengers split, or where '77 vets like Black Flag have merely gotten HARDER, X have expanded on their initial hardcore energy. LP's Wild Gift and 1982's Under The Big Black Sun showed remarkable lyrical growth, the dual vocal/songwriting team of bassist John Doe and wife Exene Cervenka changing themes in mid-stream; tales of desperation shelved for the virtues of marriage. The new X LP goes even farther, Doe's songs sounding more like Hank Williams than Darby Crash...no spare change in "The New World," guitars that sound like trains in "Make The Music Go Bang." "I Must Not Think Bad Thoughts" draws a thin line between American military involvement overseas and the tunnelvision of "new Music" 1983, "The facts we hate: You'll never hear us. I hear the radio is finally gonna play the new music, you know, the British Invasion. But what about the Minutemen, Flesh Eaters, DOA, Big Boys and Black Flag?....Woody Guthrie sang about b-e-e-t-s not b-e-a-t-s. I must not think bad thoughts...". All in all, a 4th strong LP for X, and a timely band with timeless sentiment...too good to continue being ignored.

Now for the less responsible side of things. LA's Social Distortion differ from X and the Avengers in that they're part of a newer West Coast breed, speed and anger ranking above overall world view. Like CH3, Social Distortion blend hardcore velocity with well-placed pop hooks. Unlike cheerful suburban kids CH3, Social D. don't always smile; they're the suburban brats who slash your tires and piss on the front stoop. Mommy's Little Monster isn't as much tyupical hardcore anti-parent/anti-society as it is a unique slice So. CA damage (imagine Greg Brady tieing up Mike & Carol, pouring gasoline over them, etc.). The blood spilled on the first Germs LP keep on seeping onto new bands; the Angry Samoans and Suicidal Tendencies have been stained, Social Distortion have been drenched.

Black Affairs

John Grace, 19, had been at Middlebury College in Vermont when he began receiving racist notes

Racism continues on American t.v.

By RHONDA SWAM
Collegian Staff

The television medium of the United States has always had a somewhat unfavorable relationship with the members of its black community. In the beginning the problem was the lack of black representation in the media. However, as the years advanced and a few blacks were given the recognition that they had previously been denied, another problem arose.

Blacks were not allowed to portray anything but subservient and otherwise sereotypical roles on television shows. Naturally, these roles did little else but perpetuate the myths of black inferiority and ignorance.

Today, in 1983, little has changed. Black actors and actresses are finding it increasingly more difficult to find work, and the work that they are able to find hardly allows them to portray intelligent, educated individuals.

The NAACP has recently announced their disapproval and protest of two major networks' new fall series, claiming that the television shows are racist and depict blacks as being inferior to whites.

The two series under attack are ABC's "Just Our Luck" and "Webster." "Just Our Luck" is a comedy about a black genie and his white master, a weather forecaster. The NAACP charges that this sitcom reinforces the black slave-white master stereotype and instills the myth of white supremacy and black inferiority.

Commentary

"Webster is the story of a little black boy whose parents died, leaving him in the care of his white godparent. The NAACP charges that this story is racist in that the young boy's role model is white whereas he needs a black role model especially for self-identity.

ABC denies the charges and states that they are unsubstantiated. However, considering the history of the media as it pertains to blacks, these charges should come as no surprise.

The only show on television with a black majority of cast members is CBS's "The Jeffersons." "The Jeffersons" is a sitcom about a black man, his small family and neighbors.

American steel threatened

by NORMAN HILL
Special to Black Affairs

In the recent years, America's steel industry has been deeply affected by a prolonged recession and unfair foreign competition. As a result of these disturbing trends, hundreds of thousands of steelworkers — a large proportion of them black workers — have lost their means of earning a living.

The leaders of the steel industry have argued that the decline in steel requires both workers and management to sacrifice in order to reduce expenses and thus become more competitive in the international marketplace.

Steelworkeres have responded to these calls for austerity and have taken substantial reductions in wages and benefits in return for the promise of continued employment. The leadership of the United Steelworkers of America, USWA, has played an important role in serving to protect the jobs of its members in what are immensely difficult times for the industry.

For blacks, who make up a large proportion of the membership of the steel industry's workforce, the issues involved in the dispute between the Steelworkers union and U.S. Steel go to the heart of the future of black progress in this country.

Black workers recognize that the trade union movement plays an important role in protecting the jobs of its members and insuring equal pay irrespective of race, color, or national origin.

Yastrzemski set to take final swing

RUSS WHINNEM

My roommate, Dennis, was once told that the Carl Yastrezemski poster in our room should be lowered down the wall. It looked somewhat off balance as highly positioned as it was. He calmly chose his reply. "I want him as close to God as possible....."

It will all be over soon. Just a few more days. That's what 23 years has come down to, a few more days, a few more games. First it will be two more, then one, then only a couple more at bats. The man will exit the dugout one last time towards the on deck circle. He will take a couple of cuts, maybe grab a little pine tar, and then assume the familiar Yaz slouch as he kneels, watching and waiting for his last hurrah.

When Carl Yastrezemski goes to bat for the last time this weekend it will be special. And the Captain will do something special. Won't he? He will give us one more thrill, one more memory. Maybe it will be the opposite field single, maybe it will be the long double to center or off the Green Monster that ties the game. Or maybe just maybe, he will be dared one last time to catch up to a rising fastball and he will leave the pitch in the right field bullpen.

It will be over then. He will undoubtedly be forced out of the dugout for a long, emotional set of bows. Then, the records, the plateaus that the man reached won't mean that much. What will matter is the man himself. The team, the fans, the city, the league, will be saying goodbye to the rare but yet classic type of ballplayer.

There are milestones — the at bats, the number of games, the consecutive years of getting at least 100 hits. There will be the 3000 hits and 400 home runs. All those will live in the books forever. But more importantly, the moments and the characteristics will live longer.

They will be good and bad, but mostly great. The catch in the '67 World Series. The throw to get Reggie in the '75 Playoffs. The dirt piling incident on a called third strike also in '75. How about the countless moments of playing in pain, the broken ribs in '80 and how he wouldn't come out, how he drove in a run on his next at bat.

And the emotional pain. The World Series losses, the Yankee loss in '78, when he had his shot at saving his team but couldn't do it. He still faced the press though, while many of his teammates hid.

Facing the press. Perhaps this is where the most revealing side of Yaz came out. He is a star without a stars mouth. Seemingly uncomfortable in the spotlight, he is proud but fantastically modest. Choosing his words nervously and slowly, he always came out with the classy response. And that says everything about the man.

Hopefully, the final day will be handled just as classy. Hopefully, there will be no Tony C. night atrocities by the organization. Hopefully, Haywood and Buddy, and Jean will remember just how much Yaz meant long before they knew what power really was. For it will be the biggest day in Boston sports since another pretty significant figure, John Havlicek, bid adieu.

After, the crowd will eventually die down and in the clubhouse, the famed number 8 will be placed on a hook for the final time. For the generations who have seen him play, there will be the memories.

For the generations who will not, there will be the legend.

As cliches go,"practice makes perfect" is one of the most overworked. For University of Massachusetts field hockey coach Pam Hixon, however, there is still some life left in the phrase.

Judging from the results of yesterday's contest with the friars of Providence College, practice does make perfect. "In practice, we spent time making sure people were at the right place at the right time," Hixon said, "and we accomplished what we set out to do."

The final score of yesterday's contest was 4 to 1, in favor of the Minutewomen. This win ups UMass' record to 5-0-1. The Friars fell to a even 3-3.

The first goal was scored at 24:45 in the first half. Forward Pam Moryl passed the ball in front of the goal, and forward Sue Packard swept it past the Friar goalie.

Two minutes later, this combination went to work again, except the roles were reversed. Packard passed the ball to Moryl in front of the goal, and she found the net.

Providence College broke the shut-out at 17:27 in the first half. On a corner play, PC link Liz Noble scored on a pass from forward Jackie Gladu. "Patti (Shea) had an obstructed view at that time," Hixon said. "That was unfortunate, because things like that will happen, but it is definitely no excuse."

Forward Patti Smith made the score 3-1 with a goal at 10:43. After a flurry of shots on goal, Smith took a rebound off the goalie pads and found the back of the net.

"We worked on touching the ball around the net, and working in and around the keeper," Hixon said. "Patti's goal and Sue's first goal worked on that principle."

UMass put the icing on the cake at 24:22 in the first half. Packard, this time unassisted, and working from the right side of the goal, foung PC goalie out of position, and flicked the ball into the opposite corner of the net.

"Sue played exceptionally well," Hixon said. "We moved well. We were ready for this game. We created opportunities, and really followed through on them."

UMass clearly dominated this match: the Minutewomen outshot PC 40-5, and outnumbered the Friars on corners by 28-6.

"Now that we have our offense on track, we need to work on some pressure defense," Hixon said. "We're keep the backs back a bit further than usual."

When the Minutewomen face Springfield College tomorrow, all aspects of the UMass game will be tested. Hixon said this matchup is traditionally a rivalry.

"We will be playing at the same speed we played North Carolina," Hixon said. "I am sure, though, that they will try to slow us down. A game like this always brings out the best in each player," Hixon said.

Tomorrow's game will be played on the turf at Springfield College at 11 a.m.

Women's tennis routed, 8-1

By RICHARD BRUNELLI
Collegian correspondent

DURHAM, NH — There was no fun for the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team late Wednesday night. The netwomen returned from the University of New Hampshire with an 8-1 loss handed to them.

Coach Pat Stewart could not rely on the usually strong play of first singles player Elizabeth Sullivan who lost 6-0, 6-0. Despite the lopsided score, Sullivan played good tennis.

"It was fun to watch," Stewart said, "no matter who won the points you wanted to clap at the end."

Likewise, the score of Anne Tauger's match was not indicative of the play. She was defeated by a 6-1, 6-1.

In other singles action, Anne-Marie MacKertiich (3) went down 6-2, 6-4 in a match that lasted well over two hours. Diane Biagioli (4) was downed 6-3, 6-0. And number five singles player Pat Sullivan lost 6-1, 6-3.

The bright spot of the day, however, occured in the number six singles match of Karen Orlowski a 6-3, 6-0 winner.

In doubles play the number one team of Jillian Nesgos and Marie Hanlon were nipped 7-5, 7-5, Marie Leary and Lisa Corbett were defeated 6-1, 6-3 in the second doubles match, and Laura Morgan and Karen Kranick were routed 6-0, 6-0 in third doubles match.

Cross country to travel

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's cross-country teams will be on the road this weekend, battling some of the top teams in the Northeast.

The men will be at the University of New Hampshire today for a 3 p.m. start in a race that promises to be a "best of the rest" affair. That is because Providence College is expected to waltz away with the top honors.

UMass runner John Pannacione, fourth at the BC meet, has been suffering from a touch of the flu this week and may or may not run.

The UMass women's team will be "goin down to Jersey" to participate in the Rutgers Invitational. Coach Julie LaFreniere has been seeing a lot of steady improvement from her team and has been pointing towards this meet as an opportunity for them to show their stuff.

Grads rap future plan for UMass

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate claims the University Planning Council created by Chancellor Joseph D. Duffy's proposed Long Range Plan is not representative enough of the entire University community.

A motion passed at Thursday's senate meeting states the planning council should be "composed of members more representative of those affected by adoption of the goals and objectives of the long range plan."

According to the motion, the planning council should have as members the deans of all nine schools, and representatives from both Housing Services and the Physical Plant, so that all University departments will be equally represented.

The motion states the two chancellor appointees may be dropped, and that there should be two graduate student representatives decided by the graduate senate. The chancellor's original plan called for one graduate student to be picked from two candidates chosen by the senate.

The Planning Council should be an "apex" body with special "working groups" under it, the motion states. These working groups would be entitled "evaluation criteria, allocation of resources, and space."

The working groups, each of which would have one graduate student, would examine their particular areas and report back to the council with their findings and recommendations.

Although the Long Range Plan is a philosophical statement and not a "blueprint", the senate believes it should attack the planning council first and comment on specific details of the chancellor's plan at a later date, senate president Sanjiv Dugal said.

Some of the concerns of the plan the senate did not act on are the problem of graduate stipends for teaching and research and the on and off campus housing situations.

The senate also decided to change the way it publicizes the graduate Forum speaker program in order to combat low attendance rates. The senate will now distribute fliers to all graduate students rather than have departmental advisors submit the names of two interested persons, as done in the past.

The first forum this year will be at 7 p.m. Oct. 23 in Memorial Hall when Dr. Leon Tabah, director of the United Nations Population Division will speak.

New dean appointed by Duffy

By JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

Dennis L. Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs for the University of Massachusetts said he will announce this week that Larry G. Benedict was appointed dean of academic support services on September 15. Benedict will continue with the same duties he has had since April, 1982, when he was named acting dean of academic support services.

Madson recommended Benedict for acting dean when Deidre A. Ling left that post to take the job of acting assistant chancellor.

While acting dean, Benedict was also associate vice chancellor for student affairs.

Madson said a search for a permanent dean was initiated, but he decided to ask Benedict to take the job permanently because, he said, such an appointment would give the University a "sense of permanent leadership."

"Larry would be able to follow the agendas he had started," Madson said. "This kind of leadership is important to the University."

Madson gave no reason for the delay in the announcement.

Benedict's responsibilities as associate vice chancellor for student affairs will be divided among people within the department. He will still retain his title, and he will act primarily in an advisory role, Madson said.

Benedict outlined his primary responsibility as dean of academic support services as "enrollment management," which is all it takes to "get students here and keep them here until the time they graduate."

This task entails the bringing together of related services such as admissions and financial aid, all the way to career development and job placement, Bendict said.

He said Ling began the concept of enrollment management and "I wanted to sound it out as a mission."

"I wanted to bring it to the conscience of the University and let everyone know what the concept really means."

Benedict cited as one of his primary goals the reducing of red tape students have to go through, which, he said, may involve changing some policies.

"These are little things students don't see, but they make life a lot easier," Benedict said.

"The bottom line is better services for students," he said. "I have a supportive staff, and I am receiving help from all over. It is a joy working here."

But, he added, it is not strictly up to the people in Whitmore; students also have a role in enrollment management.

"You get out of the University what you put into it," Benedict said. "Our size is one of the things that makes this University so great. We need to make it better for other people, too."

Violence protested at Worcester rally

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER — About six hundred demonstrators joined together to protest violence against women at a rally here Friday night. The rally was followed by a candlelight march through the streets filled with chants for an end to violence against women.

Called "Take Back the Night," the rally and march coincided with three similar events around the state echoing the message that society will no longer tolerate violence against women.

"Let's have no more silence, no more violence. Women Unite, Lets take back the night," said emcee Kathy Alexander from the Everywomen's Center at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

After giving a short speech Alexander introduced a host of other speakers including women activists and crime victims.

"Women have not been taught to be assertive and this is a condition that enables men to violate women and keep them on this pedestal," said Pamela Lampert of the National Organization of Women.

"Every 18 seconds a woman is battered, and every three minutes a woman is raped. We must end this yolk of bondage of a patriarchical society which keeps women as the victim."

—Pamela Lampert National Organization of Women

"Every 18 seconds a woman is battered, and every three minutes a women is raped. We must end this yolk of bondage of a patriarchical society which keeps women as the victim," she said.

A rape victim talked about the importance of speaking out instead of hiding feelings.

"I felt shame and guilt but now I can talk about it openly, and what is left of the anger I put into energy to combat violence against women. We have a right to demand that we can live without the fear of violence," she said.

After the speeches, chanting "Women United We'll Never Be Defeated," the participants of all ages began the march through Worcester carrying candles and wielding banners.

"I am only interested in making the streets safe at night and I will do anything to help solve the problem of violence," said Jane Mcdowell Ford of Worcester.

Asked why she was marching, she replied, "I am afraid of the night".

Kathy Alexander said this common fear of the night by women forms the title of Take Back the Night, in hopes that one day people will be able to be safe and free at any time and anywhere.

Other chants were: "Fight Back! Fight Back! No More Violence and Attacks," and "What Do We Want? Safety!.....When Do We Want It? Now!"

White House blocking vote to remove Watt

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Democrats are seeking a quick floor vote this week on a resolution urging the dismissal of Interior Secretary James Watt, but Reagan administation allies, mindful that the measure could pass by a comfortable margin, are searching for ways to block or delay the vote.

"We're ready to vote on Mr. Watt. But the administration doesn't want a vote," said Senate Democratic leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia. He is author of the "sense of the Senate" resolution calling on President Reagan to request Watt's resignation "without delay."

Byrd has indicated he'll take the first opportunity to press for adoption of his measure, which labels as "insensitive and insulting" Watt's characterizaton of appointees to an advisory commission as "a black, ... a woman, two Jews and a cripple."

That chance could come within the next few days, as Congress works for another week before taking a one-week Columbus Day recess. Also up in the Senate this week is legislation to designate a new holiday to honor slain civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr., a bill that could be filibustered by a small band of conservatives.

Meanwhile, work will continue in both chambers on major spending bills for the fiscal year that began Saturday.

The White House said last week that Interior Secretary Watt was expected to stay on and that President Reagan considered the matter "closed."

But the furor over Watt's remarks continued to rage on Capitol Hill, and GOP leaders concede that Byrd's resolution would likely pass — action that could prove an embarrassment to the Reagan administration.

GLENN BOOED — Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, gestures during a speech at the National Organization for Women's conference in Washington Sunday. Glenn was booed by the audience for saying "I think we all loafed on the ERA. We didn't work hard enough. The opposition outworked and out hustled us."

Reagan gets revised aid plan for Nicaragua

WASHINGTON AP President Reagan has won at least a reprieve in Congress for the CIA's embattle "covert" aid to Nicaraguan counter-revolutionaries.

The Senate Intelligence Committee has accepted a slightly revised aid plan and the House may shy away from a head-on flight to stop it.

The administration's recent success has buoyed some Reagan backers who now believe Congress will let the program continue for the foreseeable future.

Meanwhile, the CIA-backed "contras" - or counter-revolutionaries - have stepped up attacks against Nicaraguan towns near the Honduran border and against ecomomic targets deep inside the country. The leftist Nicaraguan government claims to have beaten back the attacks.

By taking no action before the 1983 fiscal year ended Friday, Congress allowed funding for the covert action to continue. Proposals to end it are expected to re-emerge later this month, but their chances appear doubtful.

The House, which voted 228-195 on July 28 to kill the program, is scheduled to consider the cut-off proposal again in about two weeks as part of the 1984 intelligence authorization bill. The Senate never took up the House-passed bill to kill the program and is expected to back continued covert action while insisting on tighter budgetary controls.

Druse grab province

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Druse leader Walid Jumblatt set up a council to administer Chouf province, and an adviser to President Amin Gemayel on Sunday accused Jumblatt's Syrian backers of plotting to split Lebanon into separate states.

Christian militiamen, meanwhile, freed about 200 Druse women and children after several weeks' captivity.

Jumblatt on Saturday announced he was forming an eight-man "civil administration committee" to run the day-to-day affairs of Chouf province "in the emergency circumstances ... until the return of central government institutions."

He told reporters in his Chouf mountain home at Mouktara that the committee would later act as a "pressure block" for the Druse in the central government's management of social, economic and administrative affairs.

Farouk Jaber, a political adviser to Gemayel, told reporters after emergency government meetings Sunday that Syria was using Jumblatt to partition Lebanon into cantons, or separate states.

Aquino's mourners come out against Marcos

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Wearing yellow T-shirts with portraits of Benigno Aquino, about 300 Filipinos jogged 3½ miles in a demonstration against President Ferdinand E. Marcos Sunday, clapping, chanting and flashing hand signals to "fight."

Butz Aquino, brother of the assassinated opposition leader, led the jog, the first of a scheduled weekly jaunt called "ROAR" — Run for Aquino and for Resignation — a reference to mounting opposition calls for Marcos to quit.

The brother accused the regime of shooting his brother, a charge the president has denied.

Businessmen, students, office employees and their relatives ran. They flashed "L" signs with thumb and index finger, the first letter of the Philippine word "Laban," which means "Fight" and was also the name of Aquino's political party.

Some of the traffic policemen along the route flashed back the "L" sign.

Policeman faces charges in Combat Zone shooting

BOSTON — A hospitalized Milford police officer faces arraignment this week on charges he shot a legislative aide to death in a seedy section of town, and his police chief says the officer will be suspended.

Officer John J. Jenks, 31, was being held under police guard this weekend at Massachusetts General Hospital while he recovers from a gunshot wound to the left hand suffered the night the aide was killed, according to Deputy Superintendent Jack Barry of the Boston police.

"It's quite a shock to me," said Milford Police Chief Donald Small, who took over the force last July. "He told me Friday morning that somebody tried to rob him and he was shot in the struggle."

Small said Jenks, who is single, was on a week's vacation at the time of the shooting Thursday night. Boston police obtained a warrant in Boston Municipal Court and arrested Jenks on Saturday, charging him with murdering Stephen H. Byrne, 29, of Arlington in the city's adult entertainment district, Barry said.

"Stephen was a fine young man and he would never have gone to the Combat Zone on his own," said Rep. John Cusack of Arlington, who was with the victim earlier in the evening. "There can be no question that he was forced to go there and then killed by an assailant who robbed him."

Cotylenol may have caused Pennsylvania man's death

LEWISBURG, Pa. — A 34-year-old man with a heart murmur died after taking Co-Tylenol, prompting local police to ask store owners statewide Sunday to withdraw the cold medicine from their shelves.

But authorities said Sunday afternoon they had no evidence linking the death to the cold tablets, and they said the recall was voluntary and precautionary.

"It's a recommendation, that's all it is," said Harold Erdley, a dispatcher with the Union County Department of Emergency Services.

"They had a fairly young person die yesterday (Saturday). The only thing we know about any recent past medical history is that the person took Co-Tylenol," Erdley said.

One year ago, seven people died in the Chicago area after taking cyanide-laced Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules. The person responsible has not been found.

ARIZONA COPTER CRASH — Rescue workers inspect the wreckage of an Arizona Department of Public Safety helicopter which crashed in Marana Sunday morning, killing two officers who had been rescuing flood victims.

Helicopter crashes during Arizona flood rescue

TUCSON, Ariz. — Eight-foot-deep floodwaters surged through southern Arizona on Sunday, stranding hundreds of people on rooftops and leaving nine dead or missing, including two crewmen killed in a helicopter crash during a rescue mission for a mother and baby.

More rain pelted the state Sunday, the day after helicopters plucked stranded residents from rooftops in Tucson and the hard-hit mining town of Clifton.

Gov. Bruce Babbitt, who has declared a statewide emergency, flew over southern Arizona on Sunday to survey the swirling floods that have driven hundreds from their homes.

More than half of Clifton was swept away by floodwaters from the San Francisco River, authorities said. Just under 6 inches of rain fell there during a 36-hour period, the National Weather Service said Sunday.

Gay discrimination bill faces opposition in Senate

BOSTON — The race against the clock in Massachusetts Senate will determine the fate of emotionally charged legislation to ban discrimination against homosexuals, a proponent says.

The legislation that would make illegal discrimination on the basis of sexual preference in housing, employment and credit is on the Massachusetts Senate's agenda today. But the senator carrying the bill — Sen. George Bachrach, D-Watertown — is anticipating opponents' attempts to delay debate and he said he is uncertain when action will take place.

Carter's momentos will be auctioned in fundraiser

NEW YORK- A jet that flew Jimmy Carter to the Mideast and chairs that the former president built from trees in his backyard are being offered for sale this week at a fund-draising auction for the Carter Library.

Carter will be on hand when his signed hickory chairs go on the auction block in New York along with more than 300 other items, including gifts from the former president's famous friends.

The four Shaker-style chairs are expected to bring from $25,000 to $1 million for the proposed $25 million Carter Presidential Library and Carter Center of Emory University in Atlanta. Construction of the library and academic center, where Carter will work several days a week, is to begin after the new year.

Democrats could have female running mate

WASHINGTON — Six of the Democratic presidential candidates embraced the idea of having a feminist woman as their running mate in 1984 as they bid Sunday for the endorsement of the National Organization for Women, the country's largest feminist group.

None of the six actually promised to add a woman to the national ticket if he wins the party's nomination in San Francisco next summer. But all told the more than 2,000 delegates gathered for NOW's annual convention that they could consider it seriously.

NOW President Judy Goldsmith announced Friday that the board of directors of the 250,000-member group would endorse a presidential candidate before the first of the year and that they would press the contenders to add a woman to the ticket.

Management school receives grant for exchange program with China

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Correspondent

Graduate students from the University of Massachusetts School of Management can now study business and trade relations between the United States and China, thanks to a grant from the U.S. Department of Education.

The purpose of the program is "to further stimulate cooperative trade between the U.S. and China," explained Professor Bertil Liander, director of graduate studies for the School of Management.

UMass was selected from 1000 applicants for the grant, and "was ranked as the third most-deserving of the 22 other institutions judged eligible," Liander said. "I believe that right now this University has the largest exchange of this kind," added he.

The program will start with symposiums at the University this spring, followed by a two-week visit to Peking in the summer. There, students will attend briefings at the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade, with additional briefings at its Research Institue and the U.S. Embassy, Liander said.

The students will end their stay in the central Chinese city of Xien, where they will be met by Professor Fred Drake, of the UMass History department. The purpose of this stop will be to study the diverse culture and society of China, Liander said.

Individual applicants must be graduate students, have taken Chinese-related courses and have expressed career interest in U.S.-Chinese business relations.

The school of Management is electing 10 students from the applications and who will be granted $2000 to cover travel and other expenses while in China, Liander said.

"Hopefully, this program will lead to another situation of U.S. trade with China," he said. "China has an immense population and economy, and we should try to increase our share of trade with them while Germany and other industrial nations are, also."

The University has also welcomed three Chinese students to study at the School of Management.

Cultural differences are already noticable, Liander said.

These students "had little concept of checks or charge accounts since they come from a largely cash society," he said.

Liander said if all goes smoothly, the U.S. Department of Education may renew this grant the following year.

Women's Forum

Women's Forum is a weekly listing of upcoming events relating to women's issues. Notices should be sent to the Women's editor care of the Collegian, 113 Campus Center, before the Friday preceding the event.

The University of Massachusetts defines harassment as "a form of violence; it consists of verbal and/or written invasion/violation of an individual's rights and may be racial, sexual, or personal in nature and may be expressed through graffiti, obscene telephone calls, or other means."

There are legal channels available to persons harassed. One is the Sexual Harassment Grievance Procedure. For more information on this and other procedures contact the Ombuds office 545-0867.

Tuesday — The Women's Issues Team will meet at 4 p.m. in room 804 of the Campus Center.

Southwest snack bar re-opening very soon

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Correspondent

Hungry Southwest students will soon welcome the re-opening of the newly-renovated Hampden Snack Bar.

The snack bar, located below Southwest Munchies Store opened Sept. 13 with shortened hours and a smaller menu. A few minor problems with "shop drawings," which tell the construction workers where to put service lines, plumbing and cabinetry, have delayed the full opening, said Marie Cappadona, director of Food Services.

Cappadona said Food Service equipment was scheduled to arrive Friday and the snack bar should be in full operation early this month.

Since the building opened 18 years ago, no real improvements had been made and with $20,000 available through the department budget for renovations, "we realized we could improve the efficiency of the serving area", Cappadona said.

Many chairs were broken, needing replacement and the back corner of the room was dimly lit, she said.

The dining area now has new wooden tables and chairs and a raised, carpeted area with booths and cushioned seats, giving it more of a soda shop look. There is also a juke box and a newly painted mural of students around campus.

The snack bar will feature omelets, sandwiches, chicken nuggets, franks, hamburgers, salads, ice cream and new, fresh-batter onion rings. "I love them, I hope everyone else does," Cappadona said.

With the Dining Commons closing at 7 p.m., the pleasant interior will provide a nice, late-night study spot for Southwest students than it has in the past, she said.

Operating hours are from 8 a.m. to 12 p.m.

There will be a formal Grand Opening in mid-October, with an entertainment night, prizes and a contest to rename the snackbar, Cappadona said.

"Everyone down there is very enthusiastic," she said.

Students will guard campus buildings

By KEN B. COLE
Collegian Correspondent

Because of thefts and acts of vandalism at the Fine Arts Center at the University of Massachusetts, a student security system has been established to guard the building.

In order to lower the number of thefts, the Fine Arts Center and the academic buildings are trying to raise funds to pay work study students to act as security guards.

According to Carol Radzik, student security coordinator, a student run security system proved successful last year at Herter Hall.

"I think having security there at the building cut down on vandalism. It allowed the janitors to do their jobs as opposed to patrolling the building," Radzik said.

But Radzik said some of this year's security programs may be stalled because not enough work study students are available to fill security positions.

Any interested work study recipients may pick up applications at the Department of Public Safety in room 104 Dickinson, beginning October 10.

According to UMass Department of Public Safety records, more than 40 criminal incidents occurred at the Fine Arts Center last year. The total cost involved for acts of larceny and vandalism was $3,225.

MacRostie said students pay directly for such thefts because "everything that is stolen comes out of the academic program budget."

Collective offers counseling

The Lesbian and Gay Men's Counseling Collective begins its fall hours today. The collective offers peer counseling and referrals. Those interested should stop by the office in room 433 of the Student Union or leave a message at 545-2645 or 545-0684.

Magazine needs writing

Betelgeuse, the science fiction magazine at the University of Massachusetts, is looking for literary and artistic material associated with science fiction and fantasy. All submissions should be dropped off in room 166 of the Campus Center by December 1.

SGA Senator Elections

will be held on Wed. 10/5 and Thurs. 10/6 in the DC's for on-campus residents and in front of the Hatch for Commuters and Greeks.

Not all seats are being campaigned for! If interested, attend the Senate meetings on Wednesday nights.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Lebanon — a dangerous place

For quite some time, most anti-war groups have concentrated on the U.S. position in El Salvador. I never really understood why at first because of my ignorance, and to a certain extent I still do not. However, the reason I do not understand now is no longer ignorance. The reason the efforts of the members of the peace movement are somewhat missing the point is, in a word, Lebanon. Why are we not fighting to get the U.S. troops out of Lebanon rather than the advisors out of El Salvador?

Tricia A. Yacavone

While I realize that U.S. involvement in Vietnam began with the "harmless" installation of advisors, has the U.S. not gone that dangerous step further in Lebanon where there are actually troops of U.S. Marines? Americans have died and have been wounded in Lebanon. And in El Salvador? Are not more Americans in danger of losing their lives in Lebanon than in El Salvador?

In a recent issue of USA Today, there were five major headline stories dealing with issues in Lebanon. One of these stories dealt with Marine Corps Commandant Gen. Paul X. Kelley, who referred to the troops in Lebanon as those "who were sent to Vietnam." And just how closely he thought the two experiences were similiar was driven home when he called this mistake a "Freudian slip."

Another story read, "The 41-year-old battleship New Jersey is now in the Mediterranean presumably heading for duty off Lebanon, the Navy said." And the escalation does not end here for, as USA Today also reported, "since the fighting began the American force has grown from 3000-plus men with five navy ships to more than 16,000 men and 14 warships." And President Reagan, in another story, was quoted as saying "his entire Middle East peace plan will fail if Lebanon's government falls." Furthermore, Reagan thinks the sole responsibility for these troops should lay in his lap, or at least his and Secretary of State George Shultz's.

Fortunately, Congress was trying to bring Reagan back to sanity by voting to refuse to fund Marines in Lebanon unless Reagan invoked the 1973 War Powers Act. The War Powers Act passed the House and the Senate last week. The Act allows Congress authority over the troops in Lebanon, will revoke a compromise between Reagan and congressional leaders which allows the Marines to stay in Lebanon at least 18 months.

Shultz and Reagan want to supercede the democracy of the nation and chide Congress for action. Reagan was quoted as saying, "I think those people who have advocated such things (as the invocation of the 1973 War Powers Act)...are very shortsighted. Meanwhile, Shultz insisted that saving face is more important than losing the lives our countrymen. "What we are doing in Lebanon is right, (but) the minute some trouble arises, we turn our tails and beat it--think that sends a gigantic message around the world." Saving face? Is that not an eerie echo of what we heard about Vietnam?

In conclusion, I insist the parallels between U.S. involvement in Lebanon and Vietnam far outweigh those parallels that exist in El Salvador. Yet many people continue rallying for the U.S. to get out of Central and South America, while ignoring what is the more demanding issue at stake. U.S. involvement in the affairs of El Salvador and other nations south of our border is wrong and should be stopped. However, we as political and social activists should draw our attention to the problems in the Middle East where we have already lost some of our people. If we are worried about another Vietnam, the threat is in the East, not in the South.

Grad politics — secret affairs?

We believe that the attempts to organize a graduate student teachers union are not proceeding with the informed knowledge or consent of a majority of graduate students.

The primary source of information on the proposed union has been notices mailed to graduate students by the newly formed Graduate Teachers' Organization (GTO). These notices have been signed by Graduate Student Senate officers and presumably, published using student funds. The notices arrogantly assume unquestioned acceptance of unionization.

Graduate Student Forum

The principal evidence cited that the majority of graduate students favor unionization, is the result of a referendum question placed on the ballots for the graduate student election, held late last spring. The referendum question did not use the word 'union', several response catagories were given, and voter turnout was only about 8 percent due to inadequate publicity. Subsequently, a notice was distributed to graduate students stating that union organizing was proceeding with the approval of 82 percent of the voters. The actual support of the initiative is clearly open to question.

Published information on unionizing efforts has been singularly uninformative, and dwells primarily on changing the legal status of TA/TO (teaching assistant) positions, and on wages. Although real income has indeed decreased for graduate teachers, salary is only one issue. Others include the following:

— Will changing the status of graduate teachers to state employees eliminate their present tax exempt status or tuition waivers?

— Will increasing salaries decrease the number of TA/TO positions?

— Fractional TA positions distribute limited funds and tuition waivers among a greater number of graduate students. Will these be affected?

— Who will decide who is granted TA/TO positions — departments or the union?

— Will the length of TA/TO terms be set by the union or at the department level, based on the many variables involved?

— How much will union dues be, what will they be used for, and what will they not be used for?

— Will union membership be mandatory?

— To whom will the union be accountable? Students? The Graduate Student Senate? The University? The Massachusetts Teachers Association (MTA)?

— Why was it decided to affiliate the Graduate Student Organization with the MTA?

— What type and how much local control will there be?

— By precisely what mechanism will acceptance of the union be approved, and conversely, how will union disbandment be accomplished if deemed necessary by a majority of graduate students?

The union organizers, to our knowledge, have publicly addressed none of the above issues. Efforts to gain information on proposed union rules and bylaws by our elected graduate student senators proved futile. In light of the apparent lack of interest that union organizers have for the opinions of graduate students in general, we have the following suggestions:

1) The Graduate Student Senate is probably the best organization to settle grievances and to negotiate graduate teacher policies and salaries. It is an organization already in place with substantial funding. Senate Officers who think the Senate must always be impotent in such matters should resign and be replaced by more competent leaders.

2) Further attempts to organize graduate students using graduate student funds must cease. A complete set of proposed union rules and bylaws should be published and all relevant issues publicly addressed and debated before the Senate allows such funds to be spent.

3) All further graduate student elections must be well publicized in advance, including the proposed wording of referendum questions.

4) Complete results of graduate student elections must be published, including the fraction of eligible students actually voting.

5) Officers of the Graduate Student Senate should be forbidden by the rules of their office to spend student monies without the consent of the Senate, except in cases of emergency.

Unionization of graduate students may or may not be in the best interests of ourselves or of the undergraduates whom we help teach. It is certain, however, that union organizers must not continue their efforts in the secrecy which currently shrouds them.

Native Americans are scarce

To the Editor,

On behalf of the American Indian Student Association I would like to express thanks to members of the faculty and administration and all others whose help made the pow-wow at the campus pond a success. One point made in the Collegian's coverage of the event bears correction. There are between twenty and thirty American Indians at the University, not 290 to 300. It is our hope that more Indians will choose to attend the University. I would like to add that the Indians I spoke with who traveled here to participate in the pow-wow were pleased with the event and the UMass community. We regret that the event was held on Yom Kippur and apologize to those students who could not attend. Since we plan to make this an annual event we will avoid such conflicts in the future. On Wednesday, Oct. 5 at 1:00 p.m. in the SUB, and at 8:00 p.m. in the Hampden D.C., Southwest, we will be hosting AIM spokesperson John Trudell. All are welcome.

Foreign Policy — Right On

To the Editor,

In my years at the University of Massachusetts I have yet to see printed in the Collegian any opinions in support of Reagan's policies in Central America. All this paper seems to be interested in is bringing down Reagan's foreign policies, with liberal ideals that in no way constitutes reality. People cannot help themselves from drawing analogies with Vietnam. Vietnam was fought in a far-off corner of the world that most Americans knew nothing about, and could care even less. Central America is just on the other side of the Gulf of Mexico, not the far side of the Pacific Ocean. Central America should not be looked at as another Vietnam but considered as a 1980's version of Cuba in the early 1960's. The area of Central America is being backed by Cuba and Russia. Having these leftists operate so close and in increasing numbers is a major concern to the safety of the United States. If Central America falls into Soviet control, how far behind could Mexico be from the same result?

So let's see, that would leave an unfriendly government on our southern border for the first time in one hundred and forty years. America's defense has always been based on the isolation that the vast oceans have given us. The United States would for the first time put troops on our own border for defense. It is very easy to see that letting Central America fall into Soviet hands could cost the United States more later than it will now. With this in mind Americans should back Reagan's policies before it's too late.

Business Career for the Mathematically Skilled
Actuarial Career Day
Wednesday, October 5, 1983, 3 p.m.
Rm 1634 - Graduate Research Tower
Actuaries are executives in the insurance industry professionally trained in the science of mathematical probability. They use mathematical skills to define, model, analyze and solve complex business and social problems, and to design financially sound insurance and pension programs. They serve in both technical and managerial positions. The career requires very strong verbal and mathematical skills. Come to the Career Day to meet and talk with actuaries from major New England Insurance Companies, and to find out more about the career and the Actuarial Science Program at the University.

Now's the time to act. Because the NSA Professional Qualification Test (PQT) will be given on campuses throughout the nation on November 12th.

Successfully competing on this test qualifies you for consideration by the National Security Agency. NSA is currently seeking top graduating students to meet the challenges of its important communications security and foreign intelligence production missions.

If you qualify on the PQT, you will be contacted regarding an interview with an NSA representative. He or she will discuss the specific role you can play within such fields as data systems, language, information science, communications, and management.

So pick up a PQT bulletin at your college placement office. Fill out the registration form and mail it by October 22 nd, in order to take the test on November 12 th. There is no registration fee.

Graduates with a Bachelors or Masters Degree in Electronic Engineering, Computer Science or a Slavic, Near Eastern or Far Eastern language, may sign up for an interview without taking the PQT.

All NSA career positions require U.S. citizenship, a thorough background investigation, and a medical review.

It's time for Bob and Doug to "take off"

STRANGE BREW (Polygram)
Doug and Bob McKenzie

By ED BEEN
Collegian Staff

When I first saw Bob and Doug McKenzie (a.k.a. Dave Thomas and Rick Moranis) on the now defunct Second City Television late night comedy show, I have to admit I was an immediate fan. But with the release of the soundtrack from their summer movie Strange Brew, it is apparent that the gag is wearing extremely thin.

The beer guzzling duo from the Great White North seem bent on seeing how many times they can say "Take off, you hoser," and "I didn't do it, you knob," in the course of one album. It's funny for a couple minutes, but an entire record?

I did not see Strange Brew this summer (who did?), but from the album, I gather the plot revolves around some power hungry beer baron and his attempt to take over the world by putting a mind control drug in beer. I still can't figure out how Max Von Sydow was persuaded to appear as the evil Brewmeister Smith.

The main problem with this soundtrack (the McKenzies insist it isn't their second album) is that many of the routines are visual, and totally get lost on vinyl. When the brothers are explaining the difference between movies and television, something that is obviously a sight gag, it simply does not work.

In fairness, there are a few bright spots on the album. The track "Shakespeare Horked Our Script" in which the brothers debate on who took what from whom, "Just because he was from England, he got the credit," is funny. When Bob and Doug come up against the Brewmeister's robots, who look just like the stormtroopers from Star Wars, Bob tries to talk his way out by saying "Give in to the Dark side, you Knob." Pretty hilarious, huh? One nice touch is Mel Blanc as the voice of the hoseheads' father, and a positive point for this album is the truly entertaining liner notes, they are the funniest thing of this whole project.

But liner notes do not an album make. Thomas and Moranis have entertained me for years with their incredible impersonations of Bob Hope, Woody Allen, Bing Crosby, and the list goes on. The McKenzie Brothers are a good act, but one that has run its course. This album proves that it is time for the hosers to retire, and for the talented Thomas and Moranis to move on, so like goodbye, eh?

Everyone's favorite hoseheads, Bob and Doug McKenzie clown around on the set of Strange Brew.

Rams slip and slide by Minutemen

Jim Simeone is dragged down into the mud in Saturday's 13-3 Homecoming loss to the University of Rhode Island. The rain, heavy in the second half, made the field a mess.

Wienke leads Rams, UMass defense plays well in downpour

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts football team was able to run the ball "reasonably well" according to head coach Bob Pickett. Unfortunately, the Minutemen could not do too much of anything else and dropped a 13-3 Homecoming decision to Yankee Conference rival University of Rhode Island in monsoon conditions at Alumni Stadium.

Dave Wienke, 14 of 32 with two interceptions, and the passing of the Ram offense was the deciding factor that gave URI their second win over UMass in the last three years.

The UMass defense played well, stopping the Rams who were threatening three times, but it wasn't enough.

The biggest factor in the game was the weather. It was raining lightly at the start and as the second half progressed, it began to rain heavier and it made the field a muddy mess.

"The weather caused us to throw more," said a pleased URI head coach Bob Griffin. "Neither team could do the job running. They would need the big play."

And that's just what URI used to hand the Minutemen their third loss in four games.

The Rams drove to the game's first score on a ten play 64 yard drive highlighted by the running of Steve Caizzi (before the field conditions deteriorated) who gained 39 yards on the drive. Caizzi scored off a handoff from Wienke who was hit immediately afterwards by Kevin Brown. The extra point attempt was wide and URI led 6-0.

UMass pulled to within three on a George Papoutsidis 41 yard field goal in the second quarter. The key in that drive was a spectacular onehanded 28 yard catch by flanker Kevin Jackson.

Other than that, UMass could not put together a sustained drive. Massachusetts lost the ball five times. URI, on the other hand was able to move the ball through the air but a superb effort by the Minutemen defensive corp kept UMass in the hunt. Troy Turner picked off a Wienke pass in the end zone to kill one drive in the third quarter.

"Two tough defensive football teams went head to head on a tough day," said Pickett.

"It was a tough day for either team to move the ball," remarked Griffin.

The Minutemen's best chance to pull even in the second half slipped away after Rich Jenkins fumbled after a 19 yard run. The game then became a battle of the punters. UMass' Chris Wood punted 10 times for a 32.6 average while URI's Mike Cassidy punted eight times. Caizzi also quick kicked once to liven things up.

"Chris Wood did a good job playing," complimented Pickett. Wood also intercepted a Wienke pass.

Jim Simeone had a tough day (10 for 23) behind the helm and threw four interceptions. But the key interception was late in the fourth quarter when Guy Carbone picked off a pass intended for Bob Simeone (4 catches for 48) who had slipped in the mud.

It gave the Rams the ball on the UMass 26 and two plays later Wienke hit Damian Reilly with a 31 yard touchdown strike. With Paul Stringfellow's extra point, URI's 13-6 lead was insurmountable with 2:19 left in the game.

The Rams move to 2-0 in the Yankee Conference, 3-1 overall. Massachusetts dropped to 0-1 in the conference and 1-3 overall.

A dedicated 6,831 braved the rain on Homecoming to watch the game and there may have been at least half that number outside in the parking lot partying.

UMass soccer endures

Women topples Vermont, 2-1

BURLINGTON, VT. — Once again the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team did what they do best: win. Despite struggling with injury and illness, the Minutewomen have been coming up with wins as in Saturday's 2-1 victory over the University of Vermont.

UMass came from a 1-1 tie with the Catamounts early in the second half to take the lead and hold on to the win. Stacey Flionis scored the winning goal for UMass.

"I thought they played an excellent game," Coach Kalekeni Banda said of his team which has never won a game in Vermont. "We came to win. The jinx is broken and it's just a relief. It was very good to win up there."

Ellen Taggart, who has been a standout offensively for UMass this season, started the team off in the first half. She was assisted by sister Chris Taggart.

The rest of the half showed an even battle between the two teams. UMass was a little overwhelmed by Vermont at the start and had a few problems in the midfield but contained the Catamounts until the first half buzzer sounded.

Michelin Sortnor put the UMass victory celebration off temporarily when she scored early in the second half. The Minutewomen slowed the game to their pace and Flionis, assisted by Nadia Komarowski, wrapped up a sweet victory for UMass.

Although rain poured all day over the campus, the weather in Vermont was hot and the Minutewomen starters had to play almost constantly. Only two substitutes were on the bench. Forward Debbie Harackiewicz is still out with a fractured nose and halfback Lori Stukes played sick. Banda commended freshman Michelle Rodney and sophomore Komarowski for their play.

"We showed we had a little character," Banda said. "We didn't lose our composure and scored an easy goal. It gives us more momentum against UConn."

The Minutewomen are ranked second in New England behind UConn and will do battle with the Huskies tomorrow at Boyden field with a 3:00 start.

"It will be one of the toughest games of the year. Our next goal is to play respectably against UConn, whether we win or lose. It will be a good game to have a lot of people come out to see. We hope to have a lot of people out there to give us a boost."

Vermont capitalizes in 3-1 win

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

Despite coming home from a winless five-game road trip and seeing friendly Boyden field again, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team's luck could not change as it dropped its record to 0-3-3 after losing to the University of Vermont, 3-1 in the rain, on Saturday.

Goal production is the major problem for the Minutemen. The team got 28 shots off on the Vermont goalkeeper and could only muster one goal while Vermont put three of its 11 shots in.

"They can't put the ball in the net," a very disappointed Coach Jeff Gettler said. "The other team played in the same conditions so it was 50-50."

The rain poured down on the two teams in the first period and Gettler did not want to blame the lack of scoring power on the weather and mud-slicked field. Whenever the Minutemen did kick out one of their 28 shots, the Vermont defense was there sliding and diving in the mud to put the lid on any Minuteman attack. If UMass got past the defense, it had to contend with the aggressive Vermont goaltender who was hard to beat.

Doug Nedde scored first for Vermont half way through the first half. Dave Grose and Steve Ellis added two more in the last five minutes of the half.

With 15 minutes left in the game, Kayvan Khatami kept Vermont from shutting out UMass. Simon Ostrov assisted on the only Minuteman goal.

The schedule for UMass does not get any easier in the upcoming weeks and the team will try to take one game at a time in an effort to steer themselves onto the winning track.

The Minutemen will host Yale on Wednesday with a 3:00 p.m. start. The weekend will bring three teams to the campus for the UMass Invitational. It will run from noon to 3:00 on both Saturday and Sunday with St. Joseph's, Rutgers and North Adams State competing.

Spikers make it to semi-finals in UM Classic

By ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team didn't have much fun this weekend. The UMass Classic proved to be a disappointment this year.

The team was able to make it to the semi finals of the 16 team tournament, but that was all.

"We are all a little disappointed. We had higher expectations but some of our starters struggled and due to injuries (Leslie and Kirsten Smith) we could not substitute. There was no one on the bench," said head coach Elaine Sortino.

UMass was placed in the toughest pool in the tournament. Their first opponent was powerful C.W. Post. Things started off bleakly as UMass slid to a 15-3 loss in the first game. The next two games of the best two out of three series may have been the highlight of the weekend. UMass came on strong, fought off the adversity and beat Post in successive games 15-10, 15-10.

"We came out of the grave against Post. It was significant because 2 starters are out and we are lacking depth but we are still coming up with the wins," stated Sortino.

The next foe, Cornell, proved to be too tough for UMass. Following a convincing 15-11 victory in the first game, UMass dropped the next two contests 15-9, 15-10.

The final pool match was a breeze for the Minutewomen. Holy Cross, a Division I school, was no problem for the spikers, as they trounced the Crusaders 15-7 and 15-8.

In the semi finals, UMass faced New Haven but fell rather easily, losing in straight games 15-10, 15-3.

"We couldn't get anything going against New Haven. I don't know why," a confused Sortino confessed.

The champions on this weekend turned out to be New York Tech. The senior ladden team headed home undefeated after a tough match in the Finals versus West Point.

There is no rest for Sortino's injured corps, but they are still looking to improve on their 14-5 record.

The Minutewomen's next match is tomorrow night at Valley rival Mt. Holyoke. The South Hadley team is a Division 3 team that was ranked seventh in the nation last year.

Cape Verdean President Strengthens Connections

by Rob Teixeira
Nummo Correspondent

Cape Verdean president in Boston photo by Ed Cohen

The first U.S. visit by a Cape Verdean president since the Cape Verde Islands gained independence in 1975, was held at M.I.T. in Boston on September 28.

Aristides Pereira, President of the Republic of Cape Verde (the Cape Verde Islands), in what was labeled a "Presidential Address" to the greater Boston Cape Verdean community, said, "I am overwhelmed by the presence of so many Cape Verdeans here...I feel right at home."

Pereira is in the United States on an eleven-day visit to establish closer links to the tightly-knit U.S. Cape Verdean community, and to develop friendlier relations with the U.S. government. He has addressed the United Nations General Assembly, visited the various U.S. Cape Verdean communities, met with the World Bank President and met with President Reagan.

In his address Pereira spoke of the need for more channels of communication and exchange between the two countries. He said, "Cape Verdean Americans don't need an invitation to visit your people in the Islands." He also said that such visits and the establishment of small-scale Cape Verdean business investments will help develop "closer links that will benefit our two nations." He continued, "We encourage the building of private, voluntary, nongovernmental institutional networks."

On foreign policy, Pereira repeated his country's stand on non-alignment. "Our foreign policy follows a strict policy of non-alignment and mutual cooperation and respect among nations." He pointed out that his country was the host country for negotiations between Apartheid South Africa and Angola concerning South African aggression.

At a reception after the address, a member of the Cape Verdean Embassy staff approached a group of UMass/Amherst Cape Verdean students who had come to see the Pereira. The staff member offered to develop connections between the Embassy and Cape Verdean students in America. Many of the students took the offer to heart. One student replied, "To make these types of official contacts with my homeland can only strengthen Cape Verdean culture and unity."

The Cape Verde Islands are 200 miles off the coast of Senegal, West Africa. In 1462 the Portuguese arrived and formed Europe's first African colony. Subsequently, it became a center for the Atlantic Slave Trade. The Portuguese began to intermarry with the indigenous African population, creating the so-called creole ethnicity, the dominant ethnic group in the Cape Verde Islands today.

In the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, many Cape Verdeans emigrated to Southeastern Massachusetts, in particular the New Bedford area, to be indentured servants on whaling and fishing expeditions. They also emigrated to places like Senegal, Holland and Brazil to escape harsh drought and economic conditions from 500 years of Portuguese Colonial rule.

Pereira thanked the vast support given by Cape Verdean Americans to the hurricane-stricken island of Brava. He said, "The people of Brava thank you for you support after the hurricane disaster." Pereira challenged Cape Verdean Americans to become more politically active. He said that if Cape Verdean Americans become more politically active or visible, it will help create more "positive relations between our two countries."

The Roots of Black Classical Music

by Ed Cohen and
Chet Davis

When discussing Black Classical Music, or what the music industry calls Jazz, there is a need to discuss its history. Black Classical Music is created from African-American tradition and uses highly sophisticated African musical elements in its form.

Its history in America can be traced back to the first African people brought to America for the purpose of forced slave labor. The African people brought with them a rich culture, of which music formed only a part. The slave owners used great cruelty to destroy this culture in an attempt to destroy the African identity. Slaves were forbidden to make or own instruments of African culture such as drums, and for the most part, were forbidden to practice African cultural art forms.

Several outlets for musical expression were work songs, shouts, and hollers during periods of labor; music and dance during recreation periods; and religious music during periods of worship.

The spirituals were African cultural songs adapted to the religious lifestyles of the North American culture. From the spirituals, which often took on double meanings with religious and socio-political contexts (such as the struggle from bondage), gospel music developed.

From the music of the time - spirituals, gospel, work songs, shouts and hollers, - the Blues developed. The Blues reflected the struggles of life for African-American people, and became expressions of personal and institutional relationships within a hostile environment.

The fusion of Blues and Ragtime with brass band music and syncopated dance music resulted in what could be called Black Classical Music. This fusion was considered to have been centered in New Orleans, especially in the Storyville District. Storyville was the red light district. Often the musicians could only find work in the bordellos and barrooms of Storyville. It was here that musicians such as Kid Ory, King Oliver and Louis Armstrong, played and developed the music.

As the musicians left New Orleans and moved northward and westward, settling in such places as St. Louis, Kansas City, New York, and Chicago, the music spread even further. At this point, the movement was accelerated with the closing of Storyville by the U.S. Navy in 1917 and the movement of Black people northward in search of jobs and less oppression.

As the music was spreading and developing, creating a major influence in the cultural life of America, other aspects of African-American culture were also creating an impact. The minstrel shows of the plantation system was adopted by the mainstream culture and often portrayed Black people as caricatures of real life people. In most of these shows, Black characters were portrayed by whites using burnt cork to darken their skin. From the minstrel shows came vaudeville, a forerunner of much of what became Broadway.

During the years that Black Classical Music was being refined and redefined, it went through various changes, labeled by the music industry by such terms as the "Swing Era" with its Big Band beat, and the "Bebop Era" with its fast complication of melody, rhythm and harmony. The music kept on expanding and growing as new concepts and techniques were introduced.

Many times, individuals through their creative artistry advanced the music. Names such as Fletcher Henderson and Jimmie Lunceford, two great bandleaders, as well as Duke Ellington and Count Basie helped to create "Swing." Other individuals such as Charlie Parker, Dizzie Gillespie, and Max Roach helped to create "Bop." Another great innovator who helped to create today's sound was John Coltrane, the great saxaphone player.

Many musicians and vocalists who perform what the music industry calls "Jazz," do not like the term because it is reflective of the early beginnings in the barrooms and brothels and tends to stereotype these artists in a derogatory way.

Black Classical Music is only part of the African-American musical tradition which includes such titles as Blues, Funk, Soul, Gospel, Spirituals and Avante Garde. As part of the African-American musical experience, Black Classical Music has deeply affected the cultural reality of America, and can be heard on all of the communications networks which utilize music as part of their formats.

The future of Black Classical Music lies with the people who support this dynamic art form: for as long as people support the music, culturally and economically, it will never die.

Movin' into Jazz and Blues

ZAPP III

by Richard Thorpe
Nummo Correspondent

ZAPP, four letters which together mean good home grown funk. This ten-member band from the land of funk, Dayton, Ohio, which also spawned the groups SLAVE and DAYTON, has released one foot-stompin', listenable album. Zapp III, their latest effort, is an intersting blend of funk sprinkled with jazz and blues flavor.

Led by the incomparable Roger Troutman, Zapp, which consists primarily of the Troutman brothers, Roger, Lester, Larry and Zapp (his real name), moves from a dance groove on side one to a mellow groove on side two. Although in the past ZAPP was content to stick with danceable funk, this record finds them delving into the realm of urban blues and jazz.

"Play Some Blues" and "Tut-Tut" provide ample proof. "Play Some Blues" has a strong driving rhythm, countered by a strong horn section and bluesy harmonica. "Tut-Tut" allows the band to play more relaxedly and gives Roger a chance to solo. His breaks on this and other songs are so similar to George Benson that he is frequently mistaken for the latter.

Aside from these two songs, a couple of dance tunes, "Heartbreaker" and "I Can Make You Dance" should do well in clubs and on the radio. "We Need the Buck" comments on the economic woes of Blacks today, and "Spend My Whole Life" is a ballad.

The only disappointments on the album are that a supposedly "live" version of "Doo Wa Ditty" was included and a second ballad was not. The "Doo Wa Ditty" exerpt is just a tease, and it seems a shame not to include another ballad on this LP from a group that sings as well as it plays.

Overall this six-song set from ZAPP shows a lot of musical growth and maturity. It shows their versatility and range. Be sure to look out for this group in the future.

We asked students to respond to the question: Do you think Third World organizations are relevant to our campus existence?

Stacey Bond:"I feel as though that it is important because of the Black to White ratio. They (the organizations) give us a chance to be together, and I feel that if you know where you came from then you will have a better sense of where you are going."

Maynel Campos and Leslie Dephillipes: Yes, as Third World students in the UMass campus, it's a way of keeping in touch with events happening for Third World students, plus knowing for a fact that we do exist on campus. Even though we are on a predominantly White campus, the Third World organizations give us the opportunity to feel united."

John Bradley: "No, I feel at times Third World organizations tend to look at the student's color and put it before the needs of the student."

The Woman and the Image of Eva Peron

by Brenda Ling
Nummo Staff

EVITA, the Tony-winning Broadway musical, toured UMass last week, playing two nights to packed, enthusiastic audiences. EVITA stages the short life of Eva Peron (1911-1952). She was Argentina's First Lady from 1946 to 1952 as wife of President Juan Peron. Tim Rice and Andrew Lloyd Webber (of Jesus Christ Superstar fame) wrote the musical, and their interpretation of the repressive Peronist dictatorship describes Eva's life in Argentinian society as a paradox of saint and sinner, madonna and whore.

EVITA traces through Eva Duarte's young adult life as cabaret singer and prostitute to her meeting the politically aspiring Juan Peron. Power of statehood captures and wraps her in a binding mystique: "We are adored! Statesmanship (sic) is more than entertaining peasants and throwing kisses!" From her buoyed position as First Lady Eva is able to entrance the masses, from which she herself has come, by reminding them of her background and by asssuring them that she is a representative of Peron's love for them. On behalf of Peron she appeals to the working class, "He supports you, loves you, understands you; if not, how could he love me?" At the same time, her vicious ambitions fuel her political drive: "One thing I'll say for me, no one else can fill it (this role) like I can...let's get this show on the road."

The musical's form well mirrors this conflicting reality. With few props, an angular scaffolding is the stringent yet thin platform from which Eva entreats her masses. Straight-backed chairs describe the presence of tensions, and the bare stage in general reminds all of the strained Argentinian political climate.

More personally, Eva's costumes continue to reflect her changing roles, her changing consciousnesses. At the outset, the free-flowing Eva wears free-flowing flowery dresses. Later, to match her emotional pleas as First Lady on the political platform, she wears a billowy, pure-white gown to impress upon the public her honesty, sincerity and genuine feeling of their pains. This glossy appearance contrasts sharply with the unadorned background of angular lines, but by the end of her life she wears simple, straight, tailored black suits.

Most exposing on the set is the continual backdrop of black and white photographs behind the stage action. The pictures alternate scenes of poverty with scenes of military pomp, scenes of peoples' misery with scenes of beautiful Eva. This stark visual evidence delivers the anti-Peronist rebuke of Eva's madonna image.

The musical score is unimpressive, overwhelmingly tonic, dotted sparsely by a Latino beat. Of the orchestration, only blaring brass add to the staunchly military overtones. Eva's (Florence Leary's) voice tends to taper off, seeming almost brittle, while Che's (Tim Bowman's) insistent shouting/singing expresses the peoples' frustration, but nearly drives it into the ground.

Those who cannot believe this opinion of an acclaimed musical to be valid may be right; perhaps full appreciation of the production is impossible from a fifth-ring seat, but the composers' intent to expose the contradictions of Eva Peron's life and of Argentina's social history, is both undeniable and well achieved.

Conference eyes monthly spurts of drunk driving

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — Police, Mass. Department of Public Safety officials, former Boston Celtics star Dave Cowens and Gov. Michael S. Dukakis convened here Monday to address the problem of drinking and driving in the month during which most alcohol related fatalities occur.

Because of changing weather conditions, athletic events and the large number of students in the state during the winter month, October traditionally has more alcohol related highway deaths than any other month, said Mass. Department of Public Safety Secretary Charles Barry. While statewide statistics were not available, UMass Department of Public Safety figures for 1982 show more than twice the monthly average of arrests for driving while intoxicated were made a year ago this month.

Dukakis, addressing college media from across the state, said "road blocks will be targeted around college campuses" to combat the problem. Recent measures in the five college area showed students were aware of the dangers of driving drun, he said.

Dukakis said he visited the Northampton state police barracks over the Labor Day weekend when area road blocks were set up to deter holiday celebrants from driving drunk and to catch those who were. Police records showed "it's the adults doing it again and again," he said.

"There has been great cooperation from young people in the five college area," Dukakis said. "That's very significant — it's not just a young people's problem."

Fifty-five thousand people will die on United States highways this year, half of them in alcohol-related accidents, Barry said. Fifty percent of those victims will be in the 17 to 25 age group, he said.

Registry of Motor Vehicle statistics show 185 Mass. drivers were cited for alcohol-related accidents in 1982, a decline of 69 since 1981. Of those drivers, 26.5 percent and 22.4 percent were 19 and under in 1982 and 1981 respectively; 28.1 and 36.6 percent were between the ages of 20 and 24 in those years.

Dukakis noted that while the legal drinking age "by itself is not a defense to this kind of statistic," if a bill to raise that age to 21 were introduced, he "would not veto that bill." Dukakis twice vetoed the bill to raise the age to 20, but now said, "That age is about right."

Lt. Tom Kennedy of the State Police cited "the excellent programs at colleges" as major contributors to alcohol awareness in students.

"More and more college students are attending awareness programs," he said. "The major problems is the problem drinker...70 percent of repeat offenders have had freqent infractions of laws."

Dukakis said stringent state drunk driving laws have led to the decrease in alcohol-related accidents.

"An automobile is every bit as much a lethal weapon as a handgun and will be treated as such," he said. "We had people day after day, week after week, who just didn't know a car was a lethal weapon. The legislature made a very deliberate decision with chronic offenders — the penal system would operate. Judges have no discretion.

"We have one of the toughest drunk driving laws in the nation — if people do this, they are going to be dealt with very, very severely," he said.

Bill will protect gay freedom

By CAMDEN PIERCE
Collegian Correspondent

As a bill designed to protect homosexuals against discrimination makes its way through the Massachusetts Senate, members of the University of Massachusetts gay community maintain a guarded optimism for the success of the measure.

The bill, sponsored by Sen. George Bachrach, D-Watertown, passed the House last Monday by a vote of 75-71, and is now being reconsidered by the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

Bruce Crow, a member of the People's Gay Alliance, was optimistic about the bill's chances in the Senate.

"I think it has a better chance to pass through the Senate than people gave it to get through the House, and (Governor Michael S.) Dukakis says he will sign it," he said.

The legislature "has been working up to this for a long time," and the Massachusetts Gay Political Caucus has been lobbying intensely for a bill over the past few months. Crow said. He said a bill protecting homosexuals against discrimination in employment was proposed earlier this summer but was defeated in part because a Democratic caucus taking place that week siphoned needed votes from the House floor.

The measure offers more extensive protection of gay rights than the bill killed over the summer. According to Crow, the bill under consideration "cover credit and jobs and housing," while the earlier bill only protected against job discrimination.

The bill is designed to give people who feel they have been discriminated against an opportunity to redress the wrongs they have suffered, Crow said.

"Without this law the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination can't take individual cases on the basis of sexual orientation," he said, adding that passage of the bill would mean, "you can be openly gay and nobody can do anything to you."

A member of the Lesbian Union named Linda said, "I think it's important to the gay community for something like that to be passed. It's definitely a big step (towards basic rights), because only one other state (Wisconsin) has such legislation."

Mindy Chateauvert, a commuter senator and member of the People's Gay Alliance, said the bill is "an excellent start" to acheiving equal rights on a national level.

"Massachusetts is a forerunner in anti-discrimination laws," she said. With the passage of the bill, she said she hopes "other state legislatures begin to see the need," for anti-discrimination legislation.

A member of the Lesbian Union expressed anger and frustration about "(gays) being denied basic rights as human beings just because our sexual orientation is different."

"This country is a long way from what is free," she said. "I don't feel free because I'm not protected." The progress of the gay movement, she said, has often been "one step forward, and two steps back." If this bill passes, "it will be like two steps forward and not losing any ground," she said.

Murderer will be ninth to die

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court by a single vote Monday refused to block Wednesday's scheduled execution of convicted Texas murderer James David Autry.

The action cleared the way for Autry to become only the ninth U.S. prison inmate to be executed since the high court reinstated the death penalty as a constitutional punishment in 1976.

The justices, by a 5-4 vote, rejected an emergency request aimed at postponing the execution until lawyers for Autry could file a formal appeal. The court denied Autry's first formal appeal last year.

Voting to clear the way for Autry's execution were Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justices Byron R. White, Lewis F. Powell, William H. Rehnquist and Sandra Day O'Connor.

Voting to spare his life, at least temporarily, were Justices John Paul Stevens, William J. Brennan, Thurgood Marshall and Harry A. Blackmun.

Autry, 28, was convicted and sentenced to die by lethal injection for the April 20, 1980 shooting death of Shirley Drouet, 43, a Port Arthur convenience store clerk, Also fatally gunned down during the store robbery was Joseph Broussard.

Autry's Oct. 9, 1980 conviction was upheld by the Texas courts, and left intact by the Supreme Court last year.

He then attacked the validity on grounds that a "critical" potential witness who would have testified in his behalf did not because the trial judge would not grant the would-be witness immunity from prosecution.

A federal trial judge and the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals previously rejected that argument.

Marines on alert during truce

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Gunmen fired mortars and rocket grenades at Lebanese army positions Monday forcing Marines deployed nearby to scamper into bunkers and foxholes on maximum alert for the first time in a week-old truce.

In another flare-up later in the day, army tanks fired at Shiite Moslem militia positions in a southern slum after the Shiites fired mortar rounds and rocket grenades toward the Christian-populated area of Ain Rummeneh.

President Amin Gemayel called an emergency Cabinet session, saying procedural disputes have stymied his efforts to convene a national reconciliation conference among Lebanon's feuding sects. The delay has threatened to further unravel the civil war truce that began Sept. 26.

Marine spokesman Warrant Officer Charles Rowe said about 30 Marines of Charlie Company went on"condition one," when Lebanese army positions just south of Beirut international airport came under fire at midmorning. The shooting stopped after 30 minutes, Rowe said, but it was unclear who was responsible.

It was the first time the Marines serving with the multinational force patrolling Beirut went into their maximum state of alert since the cease-fire took effect.

Several hours afterward, Ain Rummaneh residents said the Lebanese army began firing tank cannon in attempts to stop Shiite gunmen in the nearby Shiya slum from shooting mortars and grenades at Christian targets.

Army sources said fighting started after Shiite fighters allied with Druse militiamen in army positions.

Lemon law listed as least lenient

BOSTON — Car manufacturers must buy back or replace "lemons" — seriously defective new cars — under a new law that officials said Monday is the toughest in the nation.

The law, signed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, takes effect Jan. 1, and applies to cars bought after that date. Massachusetts is now the 19th state in the country with a "lemon law."

"The consumer's desire for quality for his or her money...is going to carry back through to manufacturers," the governor said. "American consumers want quality in their automobiles and will take nothing less."

Consumer Affairs Secretary Paula Gold said the new statute is the strongest by virtue of several key provisions.

"In our state, arbitration is binding on the manufacturer and not on the consumer," she said. "In this state, if you're not satisfied with the replacement vehicle you can ultimately get your money back.

"Overall, ours is the toughest," she said.

In signing the law, Dukakis was flanked by more than a dozen legislators, consumer activists and car dealer representatives.

Moral Majority meets Mass. liberal

LYNCHBURG, Va. — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, one of the country's best-known liberals, walked into the lion's den of conservatism, preaching his own brand of politics at a fundamentalist Baptist college Monday as guest of the Rev. Jerry Falwell.

For Kennedy, it was an opportunity to speak to some of the "10 million voters who will never agree with us," said an aide.

For Falwell, founder and chairman of the Moral Majority, it meant sharing the platform with a man he has criticized in fund-raising appeals as an "ultraliberal." Falwell includes Kennedy on his list of "freezeniks," who he claims weaken America by supporting a nuclear freeze.

For just one night, at least, the name-calling seemed likely to stop.

Falwell dispatched his private plane to pick up Kennedy and a few close aides, arranged a private dinner in his home and promised a full house for the senator's speech at Liberty Baptist College, which Falwell also founded.

Groups to standardize animal rights

BOSTON - Researchers working to protect the welfare of both humans and animals must reach a consensus on standards for using animals in medical experiments, several conference participants said Monday.

"There are people who feel that any use of animals for research is morally and ethically wrong," said Dr. Frankilin M. Loew, dean of the Tufts University School of Veterinary Medicine and chairman of the Institute of Laboratory Animal Resources at the National Academy of Sciences.

"At the other end of the spectrum there are some researchers who say, 'I'm a scientist so whatever I do is OK; I wear a white coat so don't question me.'

"Most views fall somewhere in the middle ground," he said, "but as long as some on each side view it as a completely black-and-white issue, we'll get nowhere. What we're trying to do here is build a consensus that we can work from."

"The Gender Gap" closes for ERA

BOSTON — Approximately 800 men and women polled had similar views on the Equal Rights Amendment, abortion and child care but differed on gun control, drunk driving and capital punishment.

The University of Massachusetts at Boston telephoned 401 women and 391 men in a poll called "The Gender Gap." Professional interviewers conducted the survey between January and March. Each Massachusetts household with a working telephone had a random chance to be called.

"Overall, the data support the contention that women are more sensitive to life issues and the values they embody," said Padraig O'Malley, a senior policy analyst at the school.

But when it came to economic standards, the results showed "women are invariably worse off no matter what criterion is employed," O'Malley said.

"The degree of inequality is palpable," he said. "The advances of the last decade would appear to be more imaginary than real in many important respects."

On policy issues, 57 percent of the women said they wanted more effort to fight drunken driving rather than other crimes, while only 37 percent of the men favored such a focus.

Women fit into engineering life with SWE aid

By KAREN BEERNTSEN
Collegian Correspondent

Four years ago if a woman entered an engineering class she would have stood out because she was a woman.

But the number of women engineers has increased dramatically in the past few years, enabling women to fit into engineering classes without standing out, said Nancy Hellman, assistant dean of Engineering.

Women in engineering now account for about a fifth of approximately 2,500 students in engineering classes, Hellman said.

Hellman advises the Society of Women Engineers (SWE), a support group for women which helps them to adjust to the engineering school. The group has planned a variety of activities ranging from guest speakers, fundraisers, and a career day in November.

Hellman, who has been advisor to the group for a year, has started new programs to direct women with their education and to make them aware of their chances of finding a job after graduation.

One program started this year for that purpose is the College Industry Committee for Women. The Committee has contacted seven corportations and plans to develop seminars in which representatives from the companies will speak about preparing resumes and other job search hints, she said.

Another project of SWE is to provide a means of contacting employed engineering graduates through an alumni directory. It will "allow students network with alumni that are working," she said.

It is important for students to know what an engineering job entails so they can prepare for it, she said.

Hellman said women she advises told her some faculty members do not know exactly how to deal with women in their classes.

"Woman students are not as accepted by some faculty. They (faculty) are not comfortable having women in classes," she said.

Jeanne Hakkila, the president of SWE, said she felt "comfortable" and "easily accepted," in her engineering classes. Even though most of her classmates are men, she said, it did not matter to them that she was a woman.

Select Board accepts by-law unanimously

By JULIA MAYCOCK
Collegian Correspondent

The Amherst Select Board Monday unanimously endorsed an article for the Town Meeting calling for a by-law which would make it possible to prosecute voyeurs.

Formerly peeping toms could only be prosecuted for trespassing or disorderly conduct. If this article is approved at the Town Meeting on Oct. 24 any person who invades the privacy of another by "peeping into property or spying" can be penalized by a maximum fine of $200 for each violation.

However, the amendment stated that nothing in the by-law should be interpreted as to limit the right of a police officer to perform official duties.

The amendment was proposed by Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia after a series of 23 peeping tom incidents in a central Amherst neighborhood over the past 20 months.

On Sept. 19, Barbara McGlynn, spokesman for a neighborhood committee, asked Town Manager Barry Del Castilho to investigate the actions of the police department. McGlynn charged the police with gross negligence concerning its treatment of victims of the incidents.

Del Castilho commended the police department in a prepared statement on September 26. McGlynn is planning to file charges of sex discrimination against Del Castilho with the Amherst Citizens Review Commission.

The commission has no legal power but acts as an impartial jury and can make recommendations to Attorney General Francis Bellotti's office in Boston.

"Del Castilho commended the police without doing any kind of investigating and that sort of puts it on his head," McGlynn said.

The Select Board also endorsed an article which would authorize the board to accept gifts for a two-mile extension in the public transit service provided to the Cushman area of town to reach the Mill Hollow Apartments.

Realtor Dennison H. Jones, owner of the Mill Hollow Apartments, has offered to subsidize the town funded transit system with a gift of $3447 to pay for bus service to the apartments housing about 100 University of Massachusetts students.

Police charge five with DWI, two with larceny

By GREG BROWN

A 17-year-old Amherst woman fractured her elbow and possibly bruised a kidney after jumping out of a moving car on Belchertown Road this weekend, Amherst police said.

Laura McDowell was found at the side of the road at 1 a.m. Sunday by police and was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital where she is in satisfactory condition. Police said she apparently had a quarrel with her boyfriend who was driving the car.

Nineteen accidents were reported by the Amherst police this weekend, with few injuries resulting.

Seven cars were involved in a chain-reaction collision on Phillips Street Saturday night, but no one was hurt and none of the cars received substantial damage, police said. The cars rear-ended each other while trying to stop, police said, and the accident was caused by wet roads

Three people were admitted to the UMass Infirmary after an accident on South Pleasant St. at the entrance to East Hadley Road. At 12:40 a.m. Sunday, Brian Haley, 18, of Concord, was cited for failure to grant the right of way to Benjamin Levy, 20, of Belmont. Their cars collided, and Haley and two passengers were injured. They were Cheryl Murphy, 409 Pleasant St., and Michelle Laingham, of 1361 Brittany Manor.

Police said they made 10 arrest this weekend, five of them for driving while intoxicated (DWI). They were:

Thomas P. Carroll, 23, of Waltham, was stopped by the Speed and Alcohol Patrol (SAP) and charged with DWI at 1:40 a.m. Sunday after he nearly struck an officer directing traffic at the scene of an accident at North Pleasant and Fearing Streets.

Patricia L. Nally, 21, of Kingston, RI, was stopped on North Pleasant St. at 8:40 Saturday night.

Joseph J. Michalkiewicz, 27, of Ellington, Conn. was arrested and charged for driving under the influence at 10 p.m. Saturday.

At midnight Saturday night, Mark S. Libman, 20, of Randolph, was stopped at College St. for the same reason.

Barry Nevel, 23, of Avon, was stopped for erratic operation, and charged with DWI on Southeast St.

In other police action, two Amherst College students were arrested at 6:20 p.m. Friday for larceny over $100. Jefferey Tidd and Kevin Walker, both 18, were apprehended at James Hall after they allegedly stole a case of wine from Spirit Haus.

James Lavery, 22, of Foxboro, was arrested and charged with malicious destruction of property after he tore up a lawn at Brandywine Apts. with his car.

Lisa Washington, 18, of Roxbury was injured at 3:20 p.m. Saturday when her car collided with a car driven by Richard Devoe, 18, of Barrington, RI. Also injured was Robert Gelnar, from the University of Rhode Island, who was a passenger in Devoe's car.

Assaults and disturbances among police action

By MARY ANNE BEEN
Collegian Staff

A fight in the Campus Center concourse Saturday night involving at least 10 people resulted in the arrest of three men for disorderly conduct and assault and battery, University of Massachusetts police said.

Arrested after the fight were Robert K. Mackey, 27, and Daniel P. Judge, 22, both of Holyoke, and Vincent T. Todd, 23, of Braintree. Todd was also charged with possession of marijuana, police said.

According to police, a large brawl broke out shortly before 8 p.m. Saturday, and the Coffee Shop was ordered to close its doors for a half-hour, until order was restored. Police said a fourth participant was placed in protective custody and later released, and medical help was provided for the injured.

In other police action:

Four men were arrested shortly before 5:30 a.m. Sunday after police responded to a complaint of disturbance of the peace from residents of Moore House dormitory. According to police, Michael J. Lafrance, 21, Glenn A. Smith, 21, James R. Durling and Daniel Gibbons, all of Stoughton, were shouting obscenities while leaving the dorm lobby. The subjects were also reported to have entered a student's room without permission and pulled a knife on the student.

Five unknown males were told to leave John Quincy Adams dormitory shortly after 11 p.m. Saturday in a case of alleged assault and battery, according to police. The five males entered a student's room and began harrassing the complaintant, and one of the males bit the complaintant in the back, police said. The victim was taken to the UMass Infirmary. The case is under investigation.

At 8:37 Sunday morning police responded to a report of assault and battery from a resident in John Quincy Adams dormitory. According to the complaintant, a male entered her room and assaulted her. The complaintant was able to identify the assailant. Police issued the alleged assailant a trespass notice to stay off campus and gave the victim her options as to what action to take against the suspect.

David W. Liedich, 19, of Southbury, Connecticut, was charged with possession of LSD, transporting alcohol while being under legal drinking age and running a red light. Shortly before 1 a.m. Saturday, police observed Liedich operating his motor vehicle erratically on Massachusetts Ave. Police stopped Liedich after he went through a flashing red light and arrested him.

Shortly after 6:30 Monday morning police responded to a call of vandalism at the ROTC building on campus. Someone had allegedly painted the building with derogatory statements and threats denouncing ROTC. There are no suspects. The case is under investigation. University Physical Plant workers were seen repairing the damage at 10:30 a.m. Monday.

How the law works

If arrested:

- You will be detained by the police and read your rights.
- Your car will be towed away.
- You will be taken in a police cruiser to the police station.
- You will be asked to take a Breathalyzer test. If you refuse, your license will be automatically suspended for 90 days.
- If the test registers over .05, you will be held but there will be no presumption that you were driving under the influence.
- If the test registers .10 or over you will be held and there will be a presumption that you were driving under the influence.
- You will be kept in the police lockup until you are bailed out.

If convicted:

1st Offense —

- You may be fined $100 to $1,000.
- You may be sentenced up to 2 years in jail.
- Your license will be revoked for one year

or

You may be placed on probation which will require that you attend an alcohol education program, pay a $480 fee and have your license suspended for 30 days.

2nd Offense —

- You may be fined $300 to $1,000.
- You will serve a mandatory 7 days in jail, and the judge may sentence you to up to 2 years

or

You may be placed on probation in lieu of a jail term which will require that you be confined for at least 14 days in a residential alcohol treatment program, and pay a $370 fee.

- Your license will be revoked for 2 years.

3rd or Subsequent Offenses —

- You may be fined $500 to $1,000.
- You will serve a mandatory 60-day jail term, and the judge may sentence you to up to 2 years.
- Your license will be revoked for 5 years.

UMass professor seeks sure cure for fatal disease

By LYNN PERKINS
Collegian Correspondent

A University of Massachusetts zoology professor has received a grant to further his research on a parasitic disease which affects 200 to 300 million people a year.

Professor Gerald C. Coles received the $53,385 grant in August from the National Institute of Health (NIH). Coles will spend two weeks in Kenya, Africa in January to oversee research on the disease.

"The outcome of the research is practical; it does effect the lives of millions of people," Coles said.

Coles said his project will be the first systematic study of the drug resistance in human schistosomiasis, a major disease that dehabilitates and sometimes kills humans. There are drugs to cure the disease, but this is not 100 percent effective.

Coles' research will be a cooperative effort between the United States and Kenya. The one-year NIH grant will be used by Coles, George Kinoti, dean of the faculty of science at Nairobi University, and John Bruce at the University of Lowell.

Coles has been with the UMass-Amherst faculty since 1981. He recieved his Ph.D. from the University of Cambridge, England, and has done other zoological research at the University of Copenhagen, Makere University in Uganda, and the University of Cambridge.

MASSPIRG begins acid rain fight

The Acid Rain Task Force of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MASSPIRG) was successful in their efforts of Thursday and Friday to obtain enough signatures to place an acid rain resolution on the fall Amherst Town Meeting agenda.

The resolution calls for an immediate cap on sulfur emmissions within the state which contribute 20 percent to 30 percent of the acid rain found within Massachusetts.

People interested in contacting or joining the MASSPIRG Acid Rain Task Force is invited to a meeting at 7:30 p.m., Tuesday in room 423B in the Student Union.

DVP and Hillel sponsor "orphan"

Paul Cowan, former president of CBS-TV and author of An Orphan in History, will speak at 7:30 p.m. in room 163 of the Campus Center on Tuesday, October 4.

The speech, sponsored by the Distinguished Visitor's Program and B'nai B'rith Hillel, is entitled "An Orphan in History: The Journey Back to My Jewish Roots."

Kick the habit today with UHS

For just a small fee, the University Health services and the Valley Health Plan are offering two multi-session smoking cessation programs this fall. The programs instruct smokers how to employ practical quitting techniques and offer information and group support. 60 percent to 90 percent of the participants in the program succeed in 'kicking the habit.' The session for the Northampton/Florence area begins Tuesday, Oct. 4. The Amherst session begins Wednesday, Oct. 5. To register, call Health Education, University Health Services, at 549-2671, extension 181.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Registration causes racism

Editors note: This is the first in a three part series on student rights and the Solomon amendment.

As many of you may remember, the Selective Service Act that passed just a few short years ago, was submitted along with some rhetoric assuring us that this Act was not in preparation for the draft. Though many questioned the constitutionality of this Act, the Supreme Court did not have the same inclinations. Registration, they held, was not unconstitutional on the grounds of sex discrimination because women were not "equally situated".

They were not equally situated because the registration was the prelude to a draft and then to armed combat; an event that only men (by law) are allowed to participate in. Well, isn't that great reasoning. Yet, regardless of the logic the Supreme Court used, they did affirm something we have been saying all along: registration is the first step towards institution of a draft.

Dakin N. Ferris

The point however, that I wish to make on the draft and registration (now that we know a registration leads to a draft) is concerning the racist forms that it takes on. Not many realize that 65 percent of the U.S. deaths in Vietnam were third world peoples. Sixty-five percent. Or that todays "all volunteer Army is 33 percent Black, nearly three times the proportion of Blacks in society." These facts should tell you two things; that the all volunteer army is in fact a "poverty draft" and that for those minorities unfortunately involved in military conflicts, they will be placed immediately on the front lines. They will be the first to die and only then to be remembered by their government in the dehumanizing form of death statistics or "body counts". This is blatantly, undeniably racist. It has been a practice in many wars and by the same token, institutionalized. But I don't need facts. I spent three years in the Marines and saw it first hand. I stood under the wing of jets loaded with nuclear weapons bound for Iran. I saw the numerous effects of U.S. military intervention in Third World countries and I shuddered. I also saw black and third world peoples so violently abused, both physically and psychologically, that it would make your stomach take a temporary leave of absence.

With so few Third World officers, the enlisted minority is told to "be all that he can be" when he is disproportionately sanctioned and placed in stockades, etc. How can someone be all they can be when "all they can be is a soldier." And after the stockade, minorities often end up with some form of less than honorable discharge. This further decreases any opportunities they might have in the outside world. No, there is no talking to me about the institutionalized racism in the military. When you've seen brain matter squished out of someone's head your gut reaction becomes your conscience. When you've run a brig where few whites are ever anything but visitors, you are left with one irrevocable conclusion; military Third World peoples are treated as lower than the lowest. But my point is yet to come. The latest threat to oppressed peoples is being done through the Department of Education. By tying registration to financial aid the Department of Defense (DOD) is accomplishing two very scary things. First, they are ensuring that only those who can't afford to go to college are going to be affected (and we all know who that is). And secondly, the DOD is also using other government agencies as enforcement arms. Not only would this set an amazing precedent but as we move closer to an Orwellian type 1984 scenario, Big Brother will become a distinct reality.

That is why yesterday had been declared a national day of protest against the Solomon amendment (Oct. 3rd). There were no large rallies, no leaflets, no take-overs. If there was, how many would come? How many would raise a hand to protest and fight this form of institutional racism? Instead I'm just going to ask you to think about this...please, for just one minute — think about war. Think about who is the first to go, and how legislators are much more willing to start something when it is an easy solution to the problem of poverty and unemployment; when they know their sons and daughters would never be affected. And think about how these Solomon type bills affect all but one class. I could go on, but I really want to take the next few minutes to go think...

DWI: the message hits home

A friend of mine was a little bummed out recently when he had to walk to the police station at 3 a.m. to pick up a friend who had been arrested for drunken driving. I couldn't blame him — I'd be ticked too if a friend of mine was stupid enough to drive when they'd had a few too many. But that wasn't the point.

"He didn't even do it," my friend told me as I looked on in amazement and tried to figure out how the police would arrest someone for drunken driving if he hadn't seemed to be driving — well, drunk. "He had backed up to this guy's house to put a keg in the back of his car and the cop saw him driving off the sidewalk and pulled him over."

Anne McCrory

"But he must have been drunk or they wouldn't have arrested him," I pointed out. "Didn't they give him a breathalizer?"

"Well, yeah, they did. But still, he shouldn't have been stopped. He would've been fine if that cop hadn't seen him pulling out."

Maybe, I thought, and maybe not.

It's funny how many of us can relate incidents where that car we were in brushed the median srip, crossed over the double lines in the road or "almost" hit someone head on. Most of us have the sense to relate these incidents with horror, to realize we might not always be so lucky, even when daredevil driving, cutting through a football field or across the Fine Arts Center seems funny in retrospect.

A lot of us can recall driving with someone at one time or another who admits "I really shouldn't be driving right now." But because we are sitting next to the driver in our own oblivion, thankful we're not the one behind the wheel, we might just watch the road a little more carefully and view the familiar landmarks sailing by, somehow confident we'll make it home. And usually, we do. But not always.

Since 1981, 16 people in the Amherst area have died in alcohol and speed related accidents; 12 of them were UMass students. Students who, like most of us, took that one evening for granted ... and ended up in the morgue.

At a press conference Monday in Boston, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis lobbied for the support of college media in promoting his campaign against drunken driving. A variety of reasons, including the influx of students into the state, fewer daylight hours, the season's first freezes and football games make October the month with the highest highway fatality rate attributable to drunken driving. That's this month, folks.

The Duke's words were efffective as he recited statistics and explained strategies like road blocks to combat the problem. But somehow, to many of us, no matter how many stats we hear, the concept still seems distant, something that happens to somebody else's family, friend, neighbor, acquaintance. It's not something you connect with driving home with that friend who is perhaps a little less than straight.

People do talk about it however, and take it for the tragedy it is. "Five of my best friends were killed my senior year in high school," one student sitting behind me at the conference was saying before it began.

"Some guy I knew got killed too," the woman next to her said. "I think everybody knows someone who's been killed by a drunk driver."

And the chances are good that a lot of people have. Maybe it makes them think twice before getting behind the wheel of a car when they've been drinking. Maybe they'll decide once a month they won't get quite as wasted and will be responsible for driving the gang home. Maybe then they won't need a painful memory to make them law-abiding citizens.

Maybe the Governor's own memory of his only brother, comatose for four months before dying after being struck be an alleged drunk driver, will be enough.

Letters

Profits derided as illusionary

To the Editor,

In his Sept. 26 column, Brooke States quotes a "radical" named Scott Nearing to the effect that he bought German bonds before World War I for $800, and that the bonds were valued at $60,000 after the war. "Here were war profits on a fantastic scale..I put the bonds in the fireplace and reduced them to ashes."

Mr. Nearing is obviously an extraordinary magician — or perhaps an out and out liar. As everyone who has ever read a history book knows, German bonds were essentially valueless after WWI. Conceivably the bonds may have been worth 60,000 marks after the war — perhaps enough for a ride on the Berlin Unterbahn.

It is hard to see how Mr. States could believe such a ridiculous fairy tale.

National Guard helps out

To the Editor,

Perhaps Peggy Conant, in her recent letter decrying the September 21st National Guard presence on campus, could show a bit more tolerance. Maybe this letter will broaden her understanding. In her protestation of the inequities of draft registration, she might realize that the Guard is "all volunteer." In fact, it is the direct descendent of the colonial militia in which every able-bodied man served within his community. In some of the most advanced nations today, this system is elaborated into universal military service to include most all women and men as a duty of citizenship. Israel, Switzerland, and Denmark are examples. And, there is no draft, no being torn from one's community or schooling for years at a time (an inconvenience which must certainly be at the root of much resentment toward registration).

The results are a minimal standing armed force (everybody's trained) and a greater sense of social unity as well as a more realistic appreciation of defense needs. An invading armed force can never destroy the defense force without fighting the trained and locally organized armed citizen...a formidable task! Think about it. And, assuming you agree that some sort of national defense system is desirable, would you support such an all-embracing alternative to the draft as other democracies possess?

Joe Perry at the Rusty Nail: "Hey, where's the beer?"

Perry - Always a rocker but not always rollin'

JOE PERRY PROJECT
Thursday, September 29
Rusty Nail

By YANETT PENA
Collegian Staff

"Joe, Joe, Joe", chanted the crowd at the Rusty Nail as the lights went out, and the last of an AC/DC record was heard blaring from the speakers. The band (who was an hour late) took the stage, and an old Aerosmith favorite, "Train Kept' A Rollin'," began wailing from Joe Perry's guitar.

After a year and a half hiatus, Perry was ready to go out there and "break some strings," and he did just that on almost every song, having to keep changing guitars. The set mostly consisted of material from his latest album, Once A Rocker, Always A Rocker, including a remake of "Bang a Gong," the single "Women In Chains" (no, it's not about good ol' S&M), and "Black Velvet Pants." The audience, who was predominately male and moderately small in size, reacted enthusiastically to the new songs.

"Always a Rocker" Perry, however, was not at his best. Although he maintained that cool charismatic presence, his guitar playing was sloppy and uninventive. He produced a lot of flashy sounds using his tremolo bar, but it lacked substance. To counterbalance this, he was more animated than usual, and this man of few words even talked to his audience. At one point in the show, he quietly thanked the crowd for helping him blow six of his speakers, then claimed, "I smell Victory."

A friend of mine told me later that "Joe had the best lines," and wished Perry would have put down his guitar and kept on talking. Well, let's not exaggerate. While the guy had unconventional charm, he also played some good rock'n'roll, he just didn't play it as well as he could.

The rest of the band lacked tightness, but the lead singer, a blonde kinky-haired and hyper fellow dressed in black leather garb, was a successful frontman. Although his vocal delivery was barely above loud screeching.

And back in the dressing room, Perry sat calmly and admitted it was only a fair performance. Later he asked, "Hey, where's the beer?"

College Daze off-focus

MAKING COLLEGE PAY OFF
By Adele Scheele, Ph.D.
Ballantine Books, 209 pages, $2.95

HOW TO SURVIVE YOUR COLLEGE DAZE
By G. Brown
New View Press, 134 pages, $5.95

By CHRISTINE MARINI
Collegian Staff

Every fall, for obvious reasons, books claiming to hold the secrets of college success glut the market. Some may be helpful; most, unfortunately, are no more than a mixture of the author's personal reminiscences and some stale warnings from a 1957 rulebook.

One wonders at times how he managed it if he followed his own advice as written in this off-focus book. The chapter on "Dorm Pranks" (yes, there is such a chapter) includes the finer points of how to short-sheet a bed or unload a fire extinguisher. To sum it up, any college manual that begins with the line "Assuming you picked up this book because you are preparing to go to college, you probably feel like wetting your pants" emphatically does not need to be added to anyone's reading list.

Making College Pay Off, by Adele Scheele, may not tell you anything that a good advisor couldn't, but at least Scheele doesn't assume that her readers are immature and unable to cope with real life. Indeed, the focus of her book is not college itself, but instead on how one's schooling can foster, and not hinder, a satisfying career after college.

Making College Pay Off is not as mercenary as it sounds. Scheele encourages her readers to work toward success, but her definition of it has more to do with personal contentment than material prosperity. Scheele urges students to get involved in their classes and to explore extra-curricular activities in order to find and develope their strengths.

If none of this sounds very revolutionary to you, it's probably because you've heard it all before. It is Scheele's insistence that students take on active responsibility for their lives that is the most exciting aspect of Making College Pay Off. The self- at least as important as the degree one earns.

One of the many neato illustrations from How To Survive Your College Daze. Can you relate to this situation?

Nicksilver : It ain't nothin' but the blues

NICKSILVER (Formerly Quicksilver Messenger Service)
Monday, September 26
Toad's Place, New Haven

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

Quicksilver? Weren't they one of those late-sixties psychadelic bands from San Francisco along with the Dead, the Airplane, Janis' and Country Joe? I thought they split up a long time ago. Is this another of these trendy reunion concerts we've been hearing so much about lately? Yup, that's right. Does this mean they played all their fab hits so you could dance just like you never did in Golden Gate Park?

Wrong. This may be true of other bands but of Quicksilver not so. Now renamed Nicksilver (For guitarist Nick Gravanitis and lead vocalist Nick Hopkins) they have returned to their roots and become just another bar blues and boogie band ala Z.Z. Top. Which is not to say that they weren't good, just different from what I expected.

The new ensemble featured (as did the old), the lead guitar vibrato/distortion of John Cippolina, truly one of the five best guitarists who can still run around the stage after seventeen years. Playing regular and slide obbligatos on his guitars, smoke coming out from the top of his fret board where his cigarette was perched, Cippolina had misplaced his slide so he played the whole night with his cigarette lighter.

Also playing was Greg Elmore, the original drummer Al Stahaly of Spirit, Graventits who played in Janis Joplin's later bands, and Merle Saunders who often plays with Jerry Garcia. But a good band great music does not make. OK, they were good, but I had hoped that if they had once been at the forefront of the sixties sound perhaps they could adapt their sound in a way that would reflect something new. It's kind of a waste to see Cippolina playing the same old leads that fifty thousand other guitarist could play equally as well. What about the whammy bar?

I would recommend going to go see Nicksilver if they come to the Bluewall for a Blues at the Bluewall show, but it ain't nothin' but the blues.

Toad's Place however, is a wicked nice club. I would say that it would be worth it to go down there to see some of the bands they're bringing (ie. Hot Tuna) as an alternative to the Springfield Show.

Soccer faces first-ranked UConn

Minutewomen to rely on defense in toughest game of the year

SUSAN BIRD fights for the ball in last week's game against Brown. Today the Minutewomen have their hands full as they face first ranked Connecticut at 3:00 p.m. at Boyden field.

It will be one of the toughest games of the year for the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team as they host the University of Connecticut, the number one ranked team in the nation, this afternoon at 3 p.m. at Boyden.

Kalekeni Banda's troops, ranked second in New England, and fourth nationally, are undefeated at 4-0-2 but come into today's confrontation with virtually no depth.

The Minutewomen, who start a unique lineup of five defenders, three halfbacks and two forwards, will only have threeplayers on the bench, Nadia Komarowski, Michelle Rodney and backup goalie Jeanne Paul.

"We will have to play respectable defense," said Banda. "It's early in the season for us and this will be a testing ground for us."

However, UMass will have to do the job without forward Debbie Harackiewicz who has been sidelined with a broken nose. Rodeney will be slowed off the bench by a bruised foot.

UConn, also top ranked in New England, comes in a full squad of 25. Coach Len Tsantiris has some top rate players both up front and in the back.

Tara Buckley and Cathy Shankweiler are UConn's top scorers. Missy Morrone, the daughter of UConn men's coach Joe Morrone, leads the midfield and either Laura Skaza or Susan O'Hara will be in goal for the Huskies.

The Huskies bring a 7-0-1 record into the game including a impressive 3-1 win over defending National champion North Carolina.

"Everyone is pointing towards us. Everyone wants to knock you off your pedestal," UConn coach Tsantirtis said last week.

The Minutewomen have the personnel and a plan to hopefully do just that. Banda and UMass are going to rely on their defense and try to slow the game down.

Captains Mary Szetela and Denna Denault head up the Minutewomen's defense. Lori Stukes, Beth Semonik and Kristi Kelly complete the defenders. Goalie Lisa Ellis anchors the group.

The Minutewomen defense was very impressive at the Cortland State tournament as they shutout Central Florida and University of California-Berkley, 0-0, both ranked in the Top 20.

"We are going to play a slow-down game," said Banda. "We would be very happy to just tie. It's just as good as a win for us."

What would please the fourth year coach more is a UMass victory. Banda is looking for a good game from his defense. A loss would not kill the Minutewomen but UMass will be playing for nothing else but a win

Both teams scrimmaged earlier this season and although UConn won 1-0, Banda called it a standstill.

Stickwomen do rain dance, drown Chiefs 8-0

It was like someone left the sink running, and the overrun found its way to the Springfield College astro-turf. But standing water or no, the game went on.

The final score of Saturday's UMass/Springfield field hockey game was 8-0, in favor of the Minutewomen.

"We started slow," said coach Pam Hixon. The stickers were able to score only two goals in the first half. "The water definitely slowed us down," Hixon said.

At 18:50 in the first half, Forward Patti Smith tallied the first goal of the match.

With less than four minutes left in the half, Forward Sue Packard added another.

By the start of the second half, the water was all but cleared from the field...all that was left was green sog.

Dry land must be more agreeable to the Minutewomen because they came out hot in the second half.

A little over two minutes into the half, Smith caught a rebound and found the net for her fourth goal of the season.

Seven minutes later, forward Diane Kobel scored the first of two. Back Judy Morgan passed to Packard who swept the ball to Kobel, who found the net.

"That was a great play," Hixon said. "It was very well executed."

At 24:54, forward Pam Moryl took a rebound from a shot by forward Chris Coughlin and scored goal number five.

The next two goals, two minutes apart, were scored by forward Maura Coughlin. On each goal, she was assisted by her sister Chris. Both goals were scored after a rebound from an initial shot.

Kobel, with less than two minutes left in the game, added the eighth goal. Forward Chris Kocot passed across the goal to Kobel, who found the back of the net.

"We played very well," Hixon said. "We were doing good things around the goal."

UMass outshot Springfield 22-2, with both of Springfield's shots coming in the first half of the game. UMass goalie Patti Shea did not have a chance to touch the ball, however, because both Springfield's shots went wide of the net.

"Right now our biggest concern is strong defensive play." Hixon said. "We have not really been tested, and on defense we need to be mentally alert."

This afternoon, the stickers are playing at Yale. Yale has the potential to win big games, Hixon said.

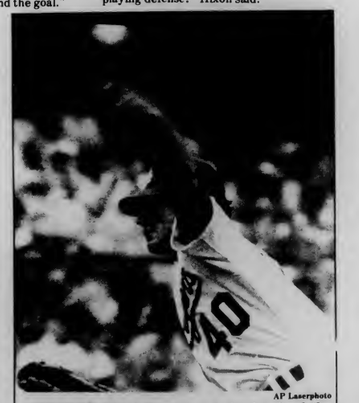
"We must make their keeper play the ball. We must force them to be the ones playing defense." Hixon said.

The American League Series features Baltimore and Chicago, two teams that have been locked into cruise control for the last two weeks. It's even longer in the case of the White Sox who have had their division wrapped up for an eternity.

Baseball playoffs are finally here

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

OK boys and girls THIS IS IT! After a six-month season when we, the fans, finally learned everything there is to know about pine tar and witnessed an occurance that happens with the frequency of Haley's Comet, the American League winning an All-Star game (Hey I'm am AL fan all the way and I still can't believe they won), the playoffs are finally here. Thank God.



The American League Series features Baltimore and Chicago, two teams that have been locked into cruise control for the last two weeks. It's even longer in the case of the White Sox who have had their division wrapped up for an eternity. Each team slumped near the end of the season, with the Orioles slipping into a prolonged losing streak and the Sox actually getting no-hit by a rookie pitcher, but both should be ready to roll come tomorrow afternoon when the series opens in Baltimore (3:05 p.m., NBC-TV).

The Orioles feature the game's best one-two punch in Eddie Murray and Carl Ripken, Jr, each of whom would be a good choice for AL MVP. The Birds won the East with a brilliant four-week stretch from the middle of August to the middle of September, finishing 98-64, six games in front of second-place Detroit. They also feature a pitching rotation that includes the non-household names of Storm Davis and Mike Boddicker (who only leads the league with five shutouts and is second in earned run average with a mark of 2.84).

The AL Worst, ah, West was totally dominated by the White Sox over the final two months. The only club to finish over .500, the Sox rode a 48-23 mark after the All-Star game to finish with the best mark in the bigs, 99-63, and a bulge of 20, that's right, 20 games over second-place Kansas City. The Sox, behind the pitching of LaMarr Hoyt and Richard Dotson (both 20-game winners) and the second-half hitting of Carlton Fisk (remember him Red Sox fans?) and Greg Luzinski, who put three balls on the roof of Comiskey Park, actually came together when Julio Cruz came over from Seattle in a trade and Scott Fletcher finally began emerging as a major-league shortstop.

The National League series between the Phillies and the Dodgers starts tonight at 8:00. The Phillies, although loaded with veteran players, won the division because of outstanding performances from young siblings, including Joe Lefebvre (from my hometown of Concord, N.H.) and pitcher Charlie Hudson.

The Dodgers overcame cast changes, drug problems and Steve Sax' fielding to win the West.

SCB's: Purchase policy sparks rebellion

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

A memo circulated to reiterate a four-year-old University policy regarding Student Controlled Businesses may have sparked a rebellion which, if successful, could do away with the policy.

The memo, written by Leslie G. Bridges, business manager of the Student Activities Office, and sent out Friday to all SCB's states that "Student Controlled Businesses (with the exception of Union Video Project, should be aware that all University departments have been instructed not to purchase from SCBs."

Some SCB managers, as well as Student Government Association Treasurer Eric Nitzsche, have complained about the policy, and SCB managers will hold a meeting of the Economic Development Board sometime this week or next to discuss their reaction to the policy.

Though the policy is not new, Nitzsche said the Bridges memo renewed interest in the policy. Nitzsche said he opposed the policy because he feels it could damage some student businesses.

"As business manager of the SAO, Les (Bridges) should be advocating on behalf of the SCBs, not hindering their development by reducing their revenue base," Nitzsche said.

Bridges said he sent the memo out "because some of the co-ops weren't aware of (the policy)," and they "could get burned," since the policy prohibits payments from University departments to SCBs.

Bridges said he is "obligated to make sure people are aware of University policy." He said the only SCB doing business with University departments was the Student Note Service, but he wanted to make sure all students "understood there could be problems getting paid," if they did.

Bob Ragland, production manager of the Student Note Service, said they had done "some" business with the University, but "not much." Still, he said he "wasn't aware" of the policy before the memo, but said he opposes it now.

Ragland said SNS has had problems getting paid on their latest shipment of copies to an unidentified department, but said he is sure that "we'll get paid."

The policy was created in 1979 by then Vice Chancellor for Administration of Finance George Beatty. He stated in a memo that "the practice of several University departments to purchase goods and services from student-operated co-ops...is not appropriate to maintaining good relations with the surrounding communities."

Jake Bishop, director of the University Office of Procurement, said the policy was created because "businesses downtown pay taxes to support this institution," and SCBs are "subsidized by the University," since they pay no rent.

Also, he said, "we thought the business of the co-ops (SCBs) should be left to the benefit of the students." The policy was made "principally to protect co-ops," Bishop said.

Nitzsche disagreed, saying that "a spirit of cooperation in the University is definitely lacking."

Senate elections will go on in spite of widespread apathy

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Correspondent

Despite the threat of cancellation, the two-day Undergraduate Student Senate elections will begin today at the area dining commons for on-campus voters, and at the Hatch for Greek and commuter area students.

The problem which jeopardized the scheduled elections was the low number of student volunteers needed to run the voting polls, elections coordinator Mindy Ordway said. There are 70 working spaces which require from one to three occupants, depending on the estimated voter turnout, which is heavier during mealtimes and between classes. Prior to late Monday night there were 37 one-hour shifts still open.

"I posted a warning that elections would have to be called off if people did not respond to help," Ordway said.

Help in elections comes primarily from within the senate and the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA), an SGA-supported office Ordway said. However, Ordway said, a low number of returning senators, along with an unstaffed SCERA, produced an incomplete election team this year.

After spending most of Monday telephoning new senate candidates and members of other student organizations Ordway was able to fill all but 14 time slots.

According to Cindy Lemhbeck, chair of the Rents and Fees Committee, only an estimated 15 percent of the UMass undergraduate students will even vote.

"The senate is a representative body of students," said Ordway, "and if people want input of major decisions which affect their daily surroundings, it is important that they vote for people who honestly want to represent their concerns."

Ordway said there is apathy where the senate itself is concerned. About a quarter of the 119 senate seats will remain open due to lack of student involvement.

"There are always senate representative openings for Southwest and Northeast Residential Areas especially," said Ordway, who attributes the unfilled Southwest positions to the fact that mostly first year and sophmore students reside there.

"There seems to be a lack of understanding of issues and how the SGA works," she said. As for the rest of the areas, "I assume it's a lack of interest," she said.

Polls will be open Wednesday and Thursday between 10 a.m. and 6:30 p.m. at the area dining commons from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Hatch. The election results will be tallied Thursday night.

Trustees meet today

Plan likely to be endorsed

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees will most likely endorse the Long Range Plan for the University when they meet in the Campus Center today, according to Student Government Association co-President and Trustee Charlene Allen.

The board will also vote on permanent funding for the UMass chapter of the State Students' Association of Massachusetts (SSAM), and discuss a possible 15 percent tuition increase, Allen said.

Because the Long Range Plan has already been approved by a Trustee committee, Allen said the full board will probably approve it.

The plan, entitled "Opportunities for Quality," sets up a five year planning process in education, the Physical Plant, and public services at the Amherst campus, and also sets planning guidelines for the Boston campus and the University as a whole.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said the Long Range Plan is "not a specific five year plan, but an outline for long-range planning." He said the plan was delayed last year because the Board of Regents of Higher Education and the Trustees "asked to have some parts of it clarified and revised."

Allen said the plan before the Trustees is "a compromise on the Administration's part," and "has no substance."

"I think the most important thing it's going to do is appease the Regents' call for a plan," she said. "I'm glad it's general, though. I don't think the Regents should be able to hold us to specifics."

Allen said the Trustees may vote to fund the SSAM today also.

Fran Pheeney, who along with George Vasquez is UMass delegate to the statewide student lobby association, said the SSAM needs permanent funding to pay for an office and a staff person to work on issues like student voter registration and a bill to add a student to the Board of Regents.

The Trustees will also discuss, but not vote on, a plan offered by the state legislature which gives the University the option to raise tuition by 15 percent for one year and keep the money in the University, as opposed to putting the increase into the state Higher Education budget.

Allen said most trustees are against the plan, because the money would have to go for "new educational programs only," and is a "one-shot deal" that doesn't guarantee future funding of the program.

Marcos might crack down

MANILA, Philippines — Opposition leaders said Tuesday the cancellation of President Reagan's Manila visit could signal the beginning of the withdrawal of American support for President Ferdinand E. Marcos and a tougher crackdown by Marcos on his opponents.

"Now that he is not coming, I think it's open season," said former Foreign Minister Salvador P. Lopez. "President Marcos is no longer on good behavior."

Some opposition leaders said privately that the cancellation could prove a boon to the embattled Philippine leader. They explained that Reagan's presence would have provided a target for major anti-Marcos demonstrations that would have dominated foreign TV screens and made headlines in all the foreign papers.

Violence brings McFarlane to Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Snipers terrorized the Beirut area's Christian and Moslem sectors Tuesday leaving at least one person dead in the ninth day of a fraying ceasefire.

U.S. presidential envoy Robert C. McFarlane returned to the Lebanese capital in a renewed effort to stem the violence.

Texas man gets reprieve

HUNTSVILLE, Texas - A U.S. Supreme Court justice granted convicted killer James David Autry a last-minute stay of execution late Tuesday, less than an hour before he was to be put to death by lethal injection.

A spokeswoman for the court in Washington said Justice Byron White took the action after receiving an application for a stay of execution signed by Alvin J. Bronstein from the National Prison Project of the ACLU.

Autry, 29, a drifter from Amarillo, was condemned to death for the 1980 slaying of a Port Arthur convenience store clerk. The victim, a mother of five, was shot between the eyes after she tried to collect $2.70 from Autry for a six-pack of beer.

Earlier, three judges with the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals turned down a stay of execution, said Elna Christopher, press secretary to Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox. Autry's lawyers had said that if they stay were turned down, they would again ask the Supreme Court and Texas Gov. Mark White for a stay.

12-year-old arsonist found delinquent

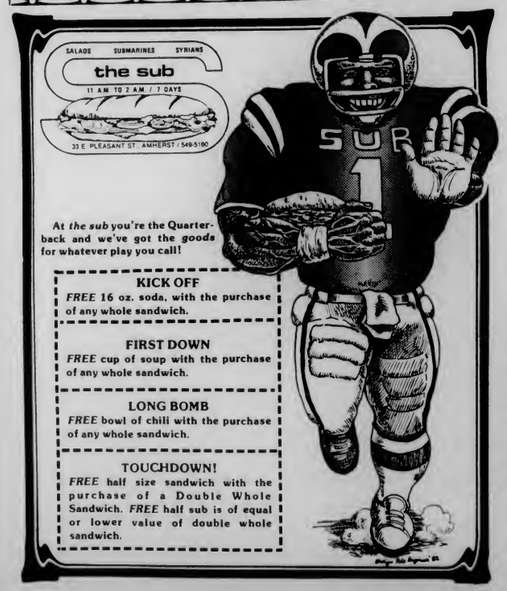
SPRINGFIELD — A judge ruled Tuesday that a 12-year-old boy was responsible for a fire that killed three children last April, a court clerk said.

Judge Joseph Pellegrino found the boy delinquent for arson, breaking and entering and three counts of murder, Juvenile Court Clerk Marc Katsoulis said.

The boy and his attorney appealed Pellegrino's findings, Katsoulis said.

Cosby wins antenna dispute

GREENFIELD — Comedian Bill Cosby had the last laugh in a courtroom battle over a 150-foot television antenna at his home in rural Shelburne.



A Franklin Superior Court jury Monday rejected Greenfield contractor Richard Rushford's claim that Cosby owed him $150,000 for erecting the tower. The tower improves reception at Cosby's mountain home overlooking the Deerfield River.

Village Voice writer talks about his Jewish heritage

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

In a lecture last night called "The Journey Back to my Roots," author Paul Cowan explained his personal transition from religious indifference to being "an observant Jew."

Cowan, a writer for the Village Voice, addressed about 65 people in the Campus Center on the assimilation of Jews, saying that he expects it will take "a couple of generations" for it to end.

"Assimilation is a sign that most Jews are newcomers here," Cowan said.

Cowan described his own family as "very assimilated." He said, "I thought of them as Jewish WASPS. Religion was almost never discussed."

Cowan's father was Lewis Cowan, former president of CBS-TV, and his mother was a German-Jewish woman. He spent most of the lecture talking about his search for his roots.

"When I was younger, the civil rights movement was my religion," Cowan said. "But at the same time, I was very involved in a search for my grandfather, Jacob Cowen," he added.

"When I began to be curious about my genealogy," Cowan said, "I began to feel like a part of an extended family, like a part of another stepping-stone on the way to Sinai."

When he finally learned about his grandfather, Cowan became more observant of Jewish customs and traditions. He said he was "terrified" the first time he went to his synagogue.

"For a rookie to go to an orthodox synagogue for the first time is really weird," Cowan said.

Cowan began answering to his Hebrew name, Shaoul Cowen, he said. He also began to develop a very close friendship, he said, with a Hassidic priest.

"You have to be pretty secure to walk around with a long beard and black robes. That guy was," Cowan said.

"At first, all I knew about Yom Kippur was that you weren't suppposed to eat." Cowan said. Cowan said that he never dated Jewish women from the time he was 16 until he was 25.

"I vowed after that not to date blonde, WASP women from New England." Then, Cowan said, he met his wife.

While getting to know Rachel Brown, his future wife, Cowan said he went into the Peace Corps. The things he observed there, he said, made him want to take a stand against the Vietnam War. "There was no organized Jewish group taking a strong stand against Vietnam," Cowan said, "so I joined the Catholic left." Eventually, Cowan said, he grew more fond of his heritage. "As I felt more secure as a Jew, I felt more secure as an American," Cowan said. "Obviously, we all (americans) are coming from other heritages," he said.

United Way Reception held

By JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey welcomed United Way dignitaries to the University of Massachusetts at the campaign's kick-off reception at the Campus Center Tuesday.

Duffey said he sees the United Way as "a symbol of the acknowledgment of the obligation we all have to our community."

"Life cannot be lived individually," Duffey said. "We need to revive our sense of individual responsibility."

The reception was held to begin this year's campaign, one in which Campaign Chairperson Agnes Raymond said she is hoping to be able to raise $50,000.

"With the help of the Chancellor's office, and with this powerful committee, there is a very good chance we will make our goal," Raymond said.

Last year, under chair Ron Emerson, UMass was able to raise $35,000. Raymond said she feels this year's goal is not an unreasonable one.

Frank Anderson, United Way general campaign coordinator, said the contributions of the University are "paramount to the campaign in Hampshire county."

"This year's goal is a modest one," said Ron Sinacore, a member of the UMass coordinating committee.

Sinacore noted there are 25,000 students and 5,300 faculty at the University, and for all these people, UMass has raised only $35,000.

"If you look at places like Smith and Amherst," Sinacore said, "where they have less then 1,000 faculty and only a few more students, and where they raise the same amount of money we do, you can see there is something that is out of line."

Sinacore pointed out only 700 people gave to the United Way last year.

"Those people supported the campus campaign," he said.

"We need to make people understand there is a need, a great need, for United Way funds in Hampshire county," Sinacore said.

Promotion of economic and educational opportunities for women, both locally and nationally, is the main objective of the Women's Educational Equity Project (WEEP) at the University of Massachusetts.

Founded in 1976, WEEP researches a variety of problems that affect women in the area of education and economic development and then forms projects that work to solve the problems and help women gain equity.

"Out of the projects we provide publications and materials to help carry the work we have done forward to the community," said Katherine Girard, a co-founder of WEEP.

Currently, WEEP is working to encourage businesswomen in the area of business expansion and risk taking that will hopefully help their operations and create more jobs for other women, Girard said.

"Why do women small business owners usually have small profit returns?" asks Girard. "The issue is for women to think bigger by taking more risks and employing more people."

WEEP, in conjunction with the physical education department, recently finished a three year project on sexism and racism with regards to teaching in junior and senior high schools that resulted in the publication of a book called Fair Play in the Gym: Race and Sex Equity in Physical Education by Patricia Griffin of the UMass phusical education department.

Girard said the emphasis of the project and the book was developing new approaches for teachers to conduct their classes without stereotyping as well as creating new curricula for undergraduates (preparing to be physical education teachers) that would enable them to be non-stereotyping.

An example of this kind of teaching would be to break down a co-ed physical education class by skill rather than sex which has been the traditional method, Girard said.

"We have underlined assumptions that girls are not interested and are less able to play sports than boys and this is quite often not the case," she said.

WEEP is also working on ways of creating more jobs in the local community that would employ women up to the level of their capabilities. A survey of 2,000 women conducted in Hampshire and Franklin counties revealed that the majority of women are underutilized and underemployed.

Besides Girard, WEEP is composed of three other classified staff women and periodically they have student interns working for them. The organization is overseen by Marion Willifod, the associate provost for continuing education, and receives all of its funds through central and foundation grants.

Frederick Tillis: a teacher who performs

LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

There are those who modestly follow their endeavors and reach that desired goal--only to find themselves in a completely different field of work they had never dreamed of pursuing. The reward? An equilibrium of two completely different jobs and reaping the fulfilling benefits and enjoyment of both.

Director of the Fine Arts Center and recently appointed Associate Provost for faculty relations, Frederick C. Tillis is one of those who has attained that balance.

"Success breeds success," he said.

Tillis, a composer and performer who joined the University of Massachusetts music department faculty in 1970, said he "never dreamed of being a part of the administration."

Tillis entered the administration in 1975 when he became the associate provost for residential programs. Between 1974 and 1980, he was the director of the UMass Jazz Workshop.

"I think that my being a band leader gave me the intuitive and sense for administration," Tillis said. "I then began working as a special assistant to the provost of arts and later became the director of the Fine Arts Center."

As the associate provost for faculty relations, Tillis now serves as the mediator for the administration between UMass faculty and the faculty union.

"What I do is that I interface with faculty representatives and the faculty union shich may involve promotions, tenure, grievances, and generally, the special problems and needs of the faculty," Tillis said.

Tillis stressed that it is not always just grievances because there are always two sides of an issue.

"It's a broad area and it's advocacy for the faculty because the bureaucracy here is too stiff and rigid," he said.

Somewhere between dashing from the Fine Arts Center in the mornings to Whitmore Administration in the afternoon, Tillis manages to teach Afro American Music 102, open to all students, and Composition to "see students from all sorts of fields."

"It's important for me to teach a class because it's the best way to maintain a certain amount of feel for student activity and to know what student life is like," he said. "You'll always get two different views, one student and the other, administration. This way, you get a feel for both."

And yet, there is still time to write and compose music and to have it performed.

In combining his love for the arts and gratification found in interacting with students and administration, Tillis views the University as "a strong one with a lot of excellent faculty members and students."

"It's a large bureaucracy and time to time there are problems but that's why I'm here, to resolve and solve, to try to help," Tillis said.

Before coming to UMass, Tillis taught at Kentucky State College, Grambling College and Wiley College. From 1954 to 1956, Tillis was director of the 3560th United States Air Force Band. He received his B.A. from Wiley College, and his M.A. and Ph.D. from the University of Iowa.

Engineering receives grant

By JOE SHARTRAND
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts School of Engineering and the Department of Polymer Science and Engineering recently received $45,500 in the third payment of $160,000 in grants.

The General Electric Foundation contributed this money to the University's Engineering Capital Campaign, which was started to raise funds and equipment from private industry for the school. The goal of the campaign was to raise $5 million, and $7 million has been raised thus far, said School of Engineering Dean James John.

The latest grant consists of $100,000 to the computer aided design and computer aided manufacturing curriculum development program and $30,000 to the minority engineering program.

The $100,000 toward the computer aided design and computer aided manufacturing curriculum development program, or CAD/CAM, will go toward developing courses in computer technology to create "the best CAD/CAM laboratory in the country," John said. "CAD/CAM will help to increase the productivity of manufacturing," he added.

The goal of the campaign was to raise $5 million, and $7 million has been raised thus far, said School of Engineering Dean James John.

Engineering and management faculty from UMass have visited the G.E. building in Pittsfield, where a number of small-scale joint projects have been undertaken. These projects help students learn about the field of engineering, for instance in the field of robotics, John said. G.E. uses these projects either in their transformer, or ordinance department, though John said that students are not directly involved with the manufacture of weapons.

Jack Walsh, chairman of the board at G.E., received an honorary doctorate degree and a degree in chemical engineering at UMass, John said.

Computer equipment stolen

State and private property valued at $2,000, including computer monitoring boards, microprocessor chips and two tool kits, were stolen from the second and third floors of the Engineering East building at approximately 9 a.m. Monday, University of Massachusetts police reported.

Police said there was apparently no sign of forced entry. The case, the second of its kind in a week, is under investigation, police said. There are no suspects.

In other police action:

Police received a report of a stolen bicycle shortly after 3:30 p.m. Monday from a resident of Pierpont dormitory. The complaintant said the bicycle, a black 10-speed Puch worth $400, was stolen from the bike rack on the dormitory overhang.

A Zenith television set worth $300 was stolen from the basement of James dormitory at 10:30 p.m. Monday, police said. There was no sign of forced entry and no suspects, police said.

James W. Malcolm, 67, of Windsor Locks, Connecticut, was arrested for driving while under the influence of alcohol and was cited for failure to use care while starting his motor vehicle and backing up, police said. At 4:40 p.m. Saturday, Malcolm allegedly struck two separate vehicles while attempting to drive out of P lot near Alumni Stadium, police said.

Exchange students rate program

By SUSAN MALLIA
Collegian Correspondent

It was the weather of all things that prompted University of Hawaii sophomore Laureen Teixeira to leave her tropical, practically beachfront campus to come to Massachusetts.

Almost bashfully, she shrugs and says, "I wanted to come to UMass to see snow!" Teixeira is among 170 students from all over the United States that are members of the UMass contingent of the National Student Exchange Program. The NSE program offers students the opportunity to spend up to one year at one of 63 participating colleges and still pay in-state tuition. Irma McClaurin-Allen, NSE Coordinator, said UMass sent approximently 90 students this year to such schools as the University of Hawaii, University of Northern Colorado, University of Alabama and the College of the Virgin Islands.

Irma McClaurin--Allen, coordinator of the National Student Exchange Program, discusses the exchange which brought 170 students to UMass from colleges and universities across the country.

Teixeira first found out about the NSE program through the Special Student Services club at her home school in Honolulu. UMass was not her first choice.

"My mother really persuaded me to come," she said, "to attend an Eastern school to see what it would be like."

Teixeira who said she has never seen leaves turn color or felt a New England winter, was also attracted by the academic offerings of the school, but like other transfer students, said she noticed most quickly accents and idioms unknown outside the Bay State, like "packy" (liquor store) or "wicked," which are "very unusual," according to Teixeira.

Small details, true. But many exchange students notice these as well as the larger things, which is the true purpose of the NSE: to give students an opportunity to view the campus as otherwise matriculated students might not.

The NSE experience can be shared reciprocally, too, according to Elizabeth Hedding, a senior from California State University at Chico. UMass students can gain insight into themselves reflective of the perceptions of the transfer students.

"UMass has a lot to offer personally and academically," she says. "In California, you're lucky to make it to class!" I realize now everyone is not a beach bum surfer. It is really great to experience a higher quality of education. I can really tell the difference."

Molly Galetto, a junior from Oakland University in Rochester, Mich. said "Most Eastern schools are thought to have a superior reputation to mid-Western schools," and many people who are not really familiar with UMass tend to associate it with the Ivy-Leagues.

Hedding said many people in the West think of UMass as "a preppie rich school."

While most of the exchange students arrived by car or plane, Peter Geo Lockhart spent 72 hours traveling by bus from Kalispell Mont. Lockhart a junior biochemestry major from Montana State University, said he chose UMass because he "wanted to travel somewhere different and experience Eastern traditions and culture. UMass also offers Japanese and an extensive on-campus population."

Exchange students not only came from the West this year but some from as far south as Florida.

"The University of South Florida is often called 'the university of sun and fun!' People often went to class in bathing suits. It just wasn't the atmosphere to study in." says Marlane Phillips, a junior at USF from Tampa.

The exchange students said they enjoy their new surroundings, although a few said they notice particular differences.

Tracy Schulz, a University of Oregon sophomore said "Much of the UMass campus is dusty and dirty compared to Oregon. Many people in Oregon are enviromentalists, so everything is clean and green."

And apparently clothing styles in the East seem to differ somewhat from those in the West.

"The clothing styles of the women are different here. They look like 'my clothes are falling off' style," Lockhart said.

But when asked what she likes most about this Amherst campus, Hedding said "I like all the differences here at UMass."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Draft sign-up is incriminating

Editor's note: This is the second of a three part series on student rights and the Solomon Amendment.

Yesterday I asked you to think for just one minute about the racist form that the draft took on in Vietnam. I asked you to think about how today's all-volunteer Army acts as a poverty draft--how institutionalized racism affects the minority soldier presently in the military . . . and how all of these relate to the Solomon Amendment.

Dakin N. Ferris

Not asking of you anything I would not do myself, I too took some time to think. I thought about some of the past articles I had read, both pro and con, on the legality of this amendment. I thought about how sad it was that for many, the fact that the Solomon Amendment is inextricably tied to institutional racism is not a reason to denounce it. I pondered their arguments saying that whether or not they are racist, ageist, sexist, or divided along class lines (all contentions in MinnPIRG's lawsuit), as long as it is Constitutional, it is legitimate. They say self-righteously that as long as the government is doling out the dollars, they should be free to put whatever restriction on it that they want. My instinct thus tells me not to get into a technical argument, for that would detract from the real issue. Yet maybe in forwarding this technical argument some may come to realize that the fundamental laws this rests on were designed not just to protect individuals, but also classes of people.

So I'll start by telling you that Judge Alsop, a federal court judge in Minnesota seems to agree that the Solomon Amendment does not discriminate on the basis of age, sex, race or economic class. At least he didn't intimate that those issues were legally strong enough to issue an injunction halting enforcement of it. He did, however, agree that it was in all probability unconstitutional on two other grounds; and confident enough was he that he issued first a preliminary injunction and then a permanent one last spring. (Until the Supreme Court stayed part of the injunction, the effect of his injunction was a nationwide suspension of the law.)

Judge Alsop held that the Solomon Amendment was both self-incriminatory and a bill of attainder; either of which for our purposes would be enough to declare the law unconstitutional. Yet, not being a lawyer I wanted to determine for myself if either held water. I called Gail Suchman, MinnPIRG's attorney for three of the six John Does bringing suit. She sent all the relevant court documents and I devoured them. I then went to a national conference of CARD (Committee Against Registration and the Draft in Washington, D.C.). With these and all the other pertinate materials available to me exhausted, I finally became convinced that both of the above were valid and that the Solomon Amendment was unconstitutional.

Self-incrimination is a very basic concept. The right against compulsory self-incrimination is found explicitly the 5th Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. If its meaning is not obvious, it simply means the government cannot ask you if you've committed a crime and force you to answer it. That the question is being asked is undeniable, so some would argue that a non-registrant need not then apply for financial aid. This would exempt any individual from being asked the question. I believe that argument skirts the issue. If someone were to apply for financial aid and after most of the process is completed, find themselves confronted with this question, their silence, and withdrawal from loan consideration might be considered an acknowledgement of guilt.

But let us assume that the option of not applying would void the issue of self-incrimination. The person not applying for the loan would thus receive one of the strongest penalties they might receive in this country; denial of higher education and so denial of economic and social mobility. (I will refrain from pointing out what groups this would drastically affect.) And so enters contention two, as this law qualifies as a bill of attainder under Article 1, Sect. 9 of the Constitution. A bill of attainder applies to any law by Congress wherein they "step into the role of the Court and meet out punishment to an entire identifiable group of individuals without the benefit of trial." The concept comes from one of the most fundamental in our judicial system . . . innocent until proven guilty in a court of law . . .regardless of age, sex, race, religion or handicap. Here the non-registrant is sanctioned (severely) without the benefit of any procedural rights or trial.

So where does this leave the average student? Most certainly there were more developments which occurred this summer that few ever heard about. Tomorrow then, I will conclude this series speaking directly on how these developments will affect you. In the meantime, keep thinking . . .

Student businesses get bum rap

As of October 12, 1983, the Collegian will not be able to accept advertising from on-campus groups unless they pay cash for the ad. Recognized Student Organizations (RSO's) and Student Controlled Businesses (SCB's) will be exempt from this because they pay for their advertising with Inter-Activity Recharges (IAR's). I am sorry for any inconvience this may cause on-campus businesses and non-RSO groups, but the Collegian is compelled to follow this policy.

Joel Myerson

Last week, a memo was circulated which could jeopardize many Student Controlled Businesses. (SCB's). SCB's, such as the Student Note Service, People's Market, Sports Co-op, and Collegian, serve two functions: they provide students with goods and services at low prices and at convenient locations; in addition, hundreds of students have an opportunity to get "hands on" experience in many fields and participate in an enjoyable extra-curricular activity. SCB's and RSO's are under the guidance of the Student Activities Office (SAO).

On September 29, Les Bridges, Business Manager at SAO, issued a memo which was meant to inform SCB's that "all University departments have been instructed not to purchase from SCB's." The memo went on to warn that "if someone in an SCB 'sells' to a University Department by means other than cash...the SCB will 'eventually' get its money...(but) it may take time and 'paperwork'."

All University groups, be they an academic department or an RSO group, are a part of the trust fund system. Under the trust fund system, purchases can only be made with purchase orders. The only exception to this rule is that RSO groups & SCB's can buy from each other by using Inter-Activity Recharge's (IAR's) which are an internal (trust fund)-transfer from one account to another. In essence, if University departments (other than RSO's and SCB's) can't buy goods and services from SCB's "by means other than cash," then they are barred from buying anything from SCB's.

This has been a longstanding policy which has rarely been enforced. In October of 1979, George Beatty Jr., then Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance, wrote a memo which stated that "the practice of several University departments to purchase goods and services from student-operated co-ops...has some advantages, (but) it is not appropriate to maintaining good relation with the surrounding communities." Beatty then imposed the following policy: "University departments shall not issue purchase orders under state or non-state funds for the purchase of goods and services from student-operated co-ops unless a specific exception is granted." The only exception which was granted was to Video Services. Bridges repeated this exemption in his memo.

If this policy is enforced, SCB's could be driven out of business. However, it is the intent of the policy that is objectionable, not the results. The students who work at SCB's would lose their chance to gain valuable experience, while the general student population would be forced to purchase goods and services at either University-run businesses (University Store, Campus Center Print Shop, Hatch, etc.) or at off-campus businesses. Obviously, it is students who have a lot to lose under this policy. Both the original and the updated memos have to make one wonder where the students' interests lie on the list of University administrators' priorities. Why would the Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance write a policy like this?

In other words, the University is bending over backwards to accomodate local businesses, who have a valid fear of on-campus businesses taking away their revenue.

There are two reasons. First, SCB's pose a threat to University businesses. This policy would effectively erase any on-campus competition. Secondly, SCB's are "not appropriate to maintaining good relations with the surrounding communities." In other words, the University is bending over backwards to accomodate local businesses, who have a valid fear of on-campus businesses taking away their revenue. However, if Beatty had decided to bow to community pressure, he should have limited university-run businesses, and not tried to squeeze out SCB's.

Even more alarming than Beatty's memo (the original) is Bridges' (the current one). How can someone from SAO, an office whose primary (if not sole) purpose is to help SCB's and RSO groups write a policy like this? It is incredible that Bridges not only reinforced Beatty's policy, but also threatened to enforce it by purposely adding more paperwork to the ridiculous amount of paperwork already involved in dealing with the trust fund system. One would certainly have to question Bridges' committment to helping SCB's and RSO groups.

Joel Myerson is the Collegian Editor-in-Chief.

School aid in jeopardy- again

To the Editor,

Once again the rights of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts are being compromised by a reactionary state legislature. On September 28, 1983, the House of Representatives of Massachusetts passed a bill that links draft registration with state financial aid. The bill closely resembles the infamous Solomon Amendment, except that only Board of Regents scholarships and loans are in question. The Massachusetts House passed the bill in order to send a "stern" message to the Soviets over the downing of the Korean Airline. Although the constitutionality of the Solomon Amendment is still being considered by the United States Supreme Court, the House recklessly passed the bill anyway.

Now, the bill moves to the State Senate for consideration. We must take a firm stand and let our opposition to the bill be felt in the Senate. The Senate may pass the bill if we do not act. A phone bank has been made available in 420 Student Union this week so we can contact our Senators. I strongly urge all students to call their Senator and demand our rights as citizens. Together we can stop this outrageous action before its too late.

Arts

Spectrum theme unnecessary

By Douglas Muise
Collegian Staff

As the self-proclaimed "Literary and Fine Arts Magazine at the University of Massachusetts" Spectrum shoulders a hefty responsibility. Soliciting fiction and artwork from a student body upwards of 30,000, people look to it, demand from it, and expect a lot in return.

Previous issues of the magazine were conceived in the spirit of the Spectrum title, collecting and showcasing select pieces of undergraduate work representative of a far-reaching "spectrum" of mediums and themes. But with the Fall 1983 issue of the magazine, the Spectrum board of editors have decided to give the magazine a focus this time around--"The Social Significance of Art." Or, as elaborated further in the preface:

. . .collecting the ideas of each of its membership in defining art as a medium for social awareness, relevance, relevance and change, and the artist as worker, oppressed class and revolutionary, producing art which is anti-apathetic and conducive to human understanding, communication, vision and aesthetic refinement, promoting the issues of ecology, equality, world peace, and universal love . . .

That certainly is a mouthful, even if it is a run-on. One must applaud such a noble and ambitious thrust and the likewise inspired 'let's get down to it attitude' which the magazine suddenly seems to have adopted. The issues of ecology, equality, world peace, and universal love are important and certainly relevant, but whether the publication can properly address such concerns remains another thing altogether. It strikes me that the embracing of such a theme succeeds only in raising Spectrum's burden of responsibility even higher.

The preface roughly closes by stating:

There is a concern that we are trivializing important issues by presenting them as art. The reader can judge whether or not it is art or trivia.

One must not overlook the implications of the equally plausible converse of such a construction. Is it not true that one can also trivialize art by using it to present important issues?

Moving to the issue itself, the cover presents itself as one of the more appealing fronts I've seen on the magazine. The title however, "Endangered Species," set beneath two leafless maples belies the issue's content as ecological rather than political. The horizontal orientation is a nice change as well. Inside one notices more changes; the looser, poem-a-page lay-out of previous issues has been exchanged for a tighter one. Most every space is filled here though somehow I see this as robbing each work of its self-importance. But a minor quibble.

Fiction and Poetry:

There is so much really good poetry here, I really don't know where to begin. Unlike what has been the case with previous issues, virtually all--with exception--is first rate. Standouts include:

Yadira A. Betances' "Pedro Varges" (in both Spanish and English) which vividly recounts the unjustified slaying of a migrant worker.

Ned Miller's "Research Assistant" is a blistering, stream of consciousness confessional. The imagery, shocking and often vulgar carries one through the artist's sordid world of heroin, masturbation, homosexuality, and trips to Stop & Shop.

Lawrence Madden's poetic trilogy relies upon the vividness of a single powerful image to convey meaning, as in "Death,"

Certain things remind me of it: like the cigarette ash on your skin.

"The Fall of Ina" by Pamela Loring and "That Woman, That Woman" by Laynie Tzena Deutsch each offer sobering perspectives on the de-humanization of women under patriarchy.

With the exception of Mark Sullivan's "Saint Patrick Day, Springfield, Massachusetts" and Stephen Spitzer's "The Central Park," most of the prose works are just too didactic to be taken as anything more than mere editorializing.

Artwork and Photography:

Brian Araujo's neo-cubist collages in B&W make a poor introduction to the magazine. One quickly flips by these muddy, meaningless shapes for something of more substance.

"Mediterranean Series" by Doug Dubois, a series of seven color stills should be retitled "Family Album Series: Or How I Spent My Summer Vacation." Nothing exciting here.

Ironically, it seems that the best works, are those straining the least to make some sort of political plea. Donna Estabrook's Tension is a case in point. An eerily electric pastel depicting what I suppose to be a cat fight is easily the best piece of artwork in the issue.

Shaw Taylor's "No Nukes" is an example of one of the more blatant expressions of radical politics. The sentiment rings true, but the artwork looks like something you'd find adorning an Iron Maiden baseball shirt.

Bart Nounan's "American Workers" is my entry for best photo essay. The leathered hands of a cobbler or the dust-creviced face of "Joe" say more about the struggles of the working-class than anything else Spectrum has to offer.

Business Career for the Mathematically Skilled
Actuarial Career Day
Wednesday, October 5, 1983, 3 p.m.
Rm 1634 - Graduate Research Tower
Actuaries are executives in the insurance industry professionally trained in the science of mathematical probability. They use mathematical skills to define, model, analyze and solve complex business and social problems, and to design financially sound insurance and pension programs. They serve in both technical and managerial positions. The career requires very strong verbal and mathematical skills. Come to the Career Day to meet and talk with actuaries from major New England Insurance Companies, and to find out more about the career and the Actuarial Science Program at the University.

The editors of the Collegian, with the assistance of the Office of Human Relations and a small planning committee, are organizing a conference entitled "Campus Journalism: Social Conflict and Freedom of the Press." We know that you are interested in this topic and we feel that your participation would be of great value. The conference will be held on Tuesday, October 18, from 3:30-8:30 pm in the Campus Center. We hope that you will be able to attend.*

The purpose of the conference is to enhance the dialogue between the Collegian and the larger University community. The specific goals are:

1. To inform the campus community about the Collegian, its operation and issues of press freedom.
2. To inform the Collegian staff about the needs and concerns of its multiple audiences.
3. To generate suggestions for improving Collegian/community dialogue on an ongoing basis.

Again, we look forward to your participation.

King leads Boston race, poll says-3

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Boston's 1983 mayoral elections are closer to making history.

Mel King, the only black candidate in the race was considered by a pollster as a probable frontrunner in October 11's preliminary elections.

The poll done last weekend by channel 5 and WHDH radio in Boston revealed King was ahead with 24 percent, David Finnegan at 21 and Ray Flynn at 16. There were also five rivals in single figures and 25 percent undecided, according to the Boston Herald.

"What the poll shows is that any of the two of the top three could make the final election Nov. 15," pollster Steve Teichner said, according to the Herald Teichner also added King, "on an upward curbe" has the best chances of running first or second next Tuesday.

In the sample of 600 registered voters (20 percent of them blacks) and with a 4 percent margin of error, Finnegan and King could be tied for the lead, or Finnegan and Flynn could be tied for second, according to Teichner and the Herald.

"Our rainbow coalition (of different races) will put us in first place" King said, according to the Herald.

"Grassroots organizations, not polls, will win this election, and we have the best organization" Flynn said, according to the Herald.

Racial policy: a second look

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Every 18 seconds a woman is battered or abused in some way. Every three minutes a woman is raped.

When a woman is raped it makes the newspapers and the six o'clock news. And right it should. People should be made aware of violence against women. It should not be hidden. Change can only come about if we are told about what is happening in the world, whether good or bad.

We don't hear enough about racial harassment. It very rarely gets covered in the press. It isn't usually the main topic of conversation. But it probably happens more times in one hour than the number of times James Watt puts his foot in his mouth in one year.

Last week the University of Massachusetts announced a new policy aimed at combating racial harassment on campus.

John DeNyse, vice chancellor for administration and finance, announced a graffiti policy which enables people who see offensive graffiti on campus to call the physical plant to have the graffiti removed.

While this is a start, it is a minor one at best. Is this the extent of the university's committment to combating racial harassment on campus?

The working group looking into the problem of racial harassment on campus, headed by Chancellor Joseph Duffey, should be applauded for the hard work they have done over the summer. But, still no real "results" have come out of the group thus far.

While it is too idealistic of anyone to believe a group of people can come up with a solution to racial harassment, is to too much to ask that something of significance be done? Something more than just a graffiti policy.

No matter what the University does to help combat the problem of racial harassment, it cannot change people's attitudes.

Some people are just plain racist. And no matter what is done will always be that way. But doesn't the University have the obligation to make every attempt possible to ensure students, faculty, staff, and anyone else affiliated with the university, that they can walk around in, live in, learn in, work in, an atmosphere where all people, men, women, blacks, white, Hispanics, Chinese, Asian, etc. are treated with respect and courtesy?

I would like to believe they do.

One mistake. Just one little mistake can come back to haunt you as the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team found out yesterday afternoon at Boyden.

And when your opponent is the number one ranked team in the country, namely the University of Connecticut, that mistake may be the difference in the game.

It was. Missy Morrone fired a shot past Minutewoman goal keeper Lisa Ellis with 3:50 to go in the first half and then UConn held off UMass for a 1-0 win.

"We gave it all we could," said UMass head coach Kalekeni Banda. "They were a good team."

While the first half was fairly even, fourth ranked UMass dominated the second half, but could not get the equalizer. UMass outshot UConn 9-4 in the second half.

It was a very physical game, almost too physical, in front of the biggest Boyden crowd of this season. Both coaches agreed that the officiating was terrible for both teams.

"That was the worst referee I've ever seen," said UConn head coach Len Tsantiris. "It was very dangerous and unsafe."

In the first half, neither team could get much of an advantage over the other. Both defenses (including UMass' unique five) broke up each others offensive attacks. The game was a fast paced one, one that tired out the UMass team, who had only one substitute available.

Morrone gave UConn, also ranked tops in New England, the lead at 3:50 but Susan Bird gave UMass, ranked second in New England, its best offensive shot of the first half with thirty seconds to go. UConn had six shots on goal compared to UMass' five.

In the second half, it was, safe to say, all UMass. UConn broke through a few times but the majority of the time, the ball was in Huskie territory.

The Minutewomen just kept pounding away but the Huskies and goalie Laura Skaza didn't make a mistake.

Offensively for UMass, Chris Taggart and Jamie Watson stood out and the defense was very good. Mary Sztela and Lori Stukes stood out on D.

The defense did a good job. I'm very pleased with them," Banda said after the game. "We showed a lot of class and character."

"I'm not disappointed at all."

Huskie coach Tsantiris praised the Minutewomen. "They are a very strong team. UMass was attacking well. We had a couple of chances (offensively) but we didn't take them easily."

The loss dropped the Minutewomen's record to 4-1-2 but shouldn't really hurt UMass in the National or New England rankings.

Hockey downs Yale: Remain undefeated

NEW HAVEN, CT. — The University of Massachusetts field hockey team sailed to another victory on Tuesday, 2-0 over Yale.

The Minutewomen raised their record to 7-0-1 while delivering to 3-1-1 Yale (fifth ranked in New England) its first loss. The match was a tough one for the Minutewomen but one that they were confident to win.

"Every game is a must win," coach Pam Hixon said. "We statistically were far better than they were and were hoping for a win."

Chris Kocot scored the first and winning goal for UMass at 22:29 in the second half. Forward Pam Moryl freed the ball from the Yale goaltender's possession and Kocot caught the ball and swept in her first goal of the season.

While the first half was fairly even with UMass having a slight advantage in better scoring chances, the second half was more UMass dominated. Yale had two shots on goal, one in each half, but could not get past the UMass defense.

Patti Smith completed the scoring with 8:27 remaining in the game. Sue Packard crossed to the right wing and passed the ball to Smith who while on her knees in front of the net, flipped the ball in.

Hixon commended Kocot for playing well and was also pleased with the play of Moryl, Smith and Meagan Donnelly on defense.

The Minutewomen will try to keep the ball rolling in the winning direction as they travel to Maine on Saturday for their next match.

Spikers run into trouble: Lose three of five games

Holyoke - Last night's volleyball match against valley rival Holyoke was "a fun match to watch," according to University of Massachusetts head coach Elaine Sortino. Fun, that is if you were one of the several hundred Holyoke partisans.

Holyoke was able to squeek out the victory with a well deserved win in the fifth game of the three out of five series. UMass was narrowly edged in the final frame 17-15.

UMass had trouble getting things started last night. Game one was over before they had tied their sneakers and Holyoke was up one game, winning 15-7.

"We started off real slow and it took a long time to get going," stated Sortino.

Game two was a carbon copy of game one. Holyoke was everywhere. With their enthusiastic crowd and momentum from game one, Holyoke took command and was victorious again 15-7.

The third contest was a complete turnaround. UMass finally started playing aggressively and came away with a convincing 15-8 win.

Game four was equally as fun for the UMass spikers as they took this game 15-11.

The fifth stanza of this match was the highlight of the night. Falling behind by as much as 11-4, UMass fought back bravely but fell just shy of another victory and Holyoke prevailed, 17-15.

"At 11-4 in game five, Sally Maher spiked about 25 points and loss of serves," said Sortino. ("We're) in the tough part of the schedule now and we have seven players...that's it. (Due to injuries) Considering our lack of depth we did real well," added Sortino.

UMass continues their tough schedule this weekend when they travel to Southern Connecticut for another two day tournament.

University budget finalized at last

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

After months of debate, "the impasse is over" and the University of Massachusetts at Amherst has a budget for the 1983-1984 fiscal year.

UMass/Amherst received $114,323,026 as a final allocation, a reduction of approximately $600,000 from the original recommendation made by the state Legislature to the Massachusets Board of Regents of Higher Education but an increase of $1 million over the Regents' offer. An amount of $440,701 was also allocated for a capital outlay reserve fund for equipment.

One program which lost funding was engineering stipends, whose allocation, originally set at $300,000, was reduced to $125,000 because the program will start late due to the budget delay, said Regents' Vice Chancellor for administration and finance Joseph Finnegan.

The budget delay resulted from a struggle between the Legislature and the Regents over allocations to various colleges and universities in the state. Southeastern Massachusetts University, for example, stood to lose $900,000 in the Legislature's original recommendation, a figure which has now been modified to a $100,000 loss. That budget shows an increase of $781,477 over last year, Finnegan said.

Finnegan said the higher education budget procedure, which has been sharply criticized by both elected and University officials, will undergo a review before next year.

"We want to work cooperatively with the Legislature and the Ways and Means Committee to work out something acceptable to the Regents for legislation next year," he said.

UMass operated throughout the budget crisis on a 30 percent interim allocation which ran out Sept. 30. While this money allowed salary payments and other immediate operating expenses, University personnel reported inventory and departmental planning difficulties as time went on without a final budget.

University officials were not available for comment on the budget, which was finalized Tuesday and announced Wednesday.

Possible tuition hike discussed by officials

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey proposed what appears to be a controversial plan to raise tuition by 50 dollars for next semester at the meeting of the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees held Wednesday.

Duffey told the trustees the increase was necessary to help remedy problems the University now has in providing students with access to courses and majors in high demand areas and in training graduate teaching assistants. Duffey also said that money could be spent partly on financial aid and on equipment maintenance.

"In 1983, between our freshman and transfer students, 4,189 students had to enroll in an alternate major," Duffey said. "We have a serious problem in being responsive to students in their first-choice program," he said, and the $800,000 to $1 million raised by the increase could help with that problem.

The tuition increase would come in response to a plan offered by the state legislature which gives state colleges and universities the option to raise percent for one semester and keep the money in the school budget to pay for special programs which have to a approved by the trustees.

"From the Chancellor's letter, it looks like there's nothing the money couldn't be spent on," Trustee James Carlin said. "If we are going to vote an increase, I think the board will want some pretty detailed explanation of where it's going."

Other trustee criticism concentrated on different interpretations of the legislature's offer. If the University only has the option to raise tuition for one semester, asked Nancy Caruso, "How will we be able to service these programs next year and the year after that?"

UMass-Boston Chancellor Rovert Corrigan said a tuition increase in Amherst would hurt his chances to fight separate tuition increase being proposed by the Board of tegents of Higher Education.

"Income backgrounds (of students) at the two schools differ greatly," Corrigan said. "Students at UMass-Boston cannot afford a tuition increase."

Trustee Paul Knowles supported the plan because it "gives some degree of local control" over the extra tuition monies, while usually all tuition funds must go into the higher educatin budget and are distributed through the legislative process. Knowles said the "matter of discretionary funds on campus," has been discussed "for 30 years" and the Trustees should act while they have the chance.

Paul Gosselin, chair of the Undergraduate Student SenateComittee on Public Policy, told the Trustees this policy is "short-sited" and "could raise tuition far more than intended."

Gosselin said the tuition retention program "could become an important fund-raising mechanism for the University," and the legislature could use it to make the University raise more money on its own through tuition hikes, rather than increasing state funding throug taxes.

In a long-awaited vote, the Trustees approved the University Long Range Plan which, according to acting University President Robert Tranquada, "outlines the priorities of the University...and creates management strategies to reach those priorities.

FUN, WASN'T IT? — Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey and John Lederle exchange words after yesterday's rededication ceremony in Bowker Auditorium.

Honors conferred at GRC ceremony

"No governor has been more supportive to this University," said Robert Quinn, chairman of the University Board of Trustees.

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Research Center was renamed Wednesday in a fall convocation ceremony honoring former University President John W. Lederle. Medals and honorary degrees were also awarded to distinguished University staff and to former Gov. Edward J. King.

In his acceptance speech, Lederle followed up on the concept of teaching and knowledge.

"We must strike a proper balance between graduate and undergraduate knowledge and research," he said. "This is a most moving occasion."

In a presentation postponed from last May, the former Massachusetts governor received an honorary doctor of law degree.

As Chancellor Duffey was about to begin his presentation, an unidentified male stood up and shouted, "This is a disgrace! He (King) is no friend of education!" The man left immediately and was not detained by police.

King received a standing ovation as he returned to his seat.

Chairman of the University Board of Trustees Robert Quinn made a brief speech praising King and his accomplishments as governor.

"No governor has been more supportive to this University," Quinn said. "We should thank Ed King for his unending pledge to keep good and opportunity continuing at the University."

National Academy of Sciences President Frank Press received an honorary doctor of science degree and Professor Emeritus Marshall Henry Stone was awarded a University medal for "enhancement of the University community," Duffey said.

Press delivered the keynote address.

Press said he sees the rededication of the Graduate Research Center as "a rededication to a bed-rock principle of american graduate education: the coupled excellence of teaching and research."

Chancellor's medals were awarded to Dean of Students William F. Field, Father Joseph J. Quigley of the Newman

Lech Walesa wins Nobel Peace Prize for Solidarity

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Lech Walesa, leader of Poland's outlawed Solidarity labor movement, was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize on Wednesday for his fight on behalf of the "unconquered longing" of all people for peace and freedom.

Walesa quickly said he would give the approximately $190,000 award to Poland's Roman Catholic Church, which has been outspoken in its support of the labor movement.

Polish authorities did not say whether they would permit Walesa to leave Poland to accept the award, and the labor leader said he was considering sending a relative in his place. Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov, the only other Peace Prize laureate from the East bloc, did not accept his award because he feared he would not be allowed to return home. His wife, Yelena Bonner, attended on his behalf.

In Warsaw, deputy government spokesman Andrzej Konopacki charged that the award was politically motivated and said the Peace Prize "used to be a meaningful award. Now it is devalued."

Walesa, who was interned by the Communist government for 11 months during martial law, was harassed afterward while trying to return to his job as a shipyard electrician, and has recently been the object of a news media campaign to discredit him.

The Norwegian Nobel Committee said Walesa had made his contribution "with considerable personal sacrifice to ensure the workers' right to establish their own organization."

GOP looking to oust Watt

WASHINGTON — Senate Republicans served blunt notice on Wednesday that Interior Secretary James Watt must go or face a strong vote of no confidence. But President Reagan said Watt "has done a fine job," and a "stupid remark" didn't merit his removal.

Senate GOP leaders said a stormy, closed-door caucus on Tuesday had demonstrated that support for Watt had waned far beyond previous estimates, and a consensus emerged that the secretary should resign for the good of the party. Minority Democrats, in their own caucus days earlier, unanimously endorsed a call for Watt's ouster.

Watt met with presidential counselor Edwin Meese III early Wednesday for "a general discussion of the Senate situation," then left town for "a long-planned vacation," according to Douglas Baldwin, the secretary's chief spokesman. Baldwin said Watt "is not reassessing" his plans and continues to believe he is an asset to the administration.

However, NBC News on Wednesday night quoted a "key congressional supporter" of Watt as saying the secretary has told him he will resign to avoid a Senate vote.

Lebanon okays supervised truce

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — President Amin Gemayel gave in to Syria and its Druse allies Wednesday and agreed to accept observers from nonaligned nations to supervise a Lebanese cease-fire.

Khalil Mekkawi, acting secretary-general of the Foreign Ministry, told a news conference efforts are underway to create a "neutral observation force" to oversee the truce that began Sept. 26 after three weeks of civil war.

Druse leader Walid Jumblatt said it should be drawn from India, Yugoslavia "and someone else."

The Gemayel government and the four nations that make up the multinational peacekeeping force in Beirut — the United States, France, Italy and Britain — had been pushing for a U.N. force. But Jumblatt argued this could lead to the permanent partitioning of the war-torn nation. Syria also opposes a U.N. force.

Agreement on a truce team would remove one of the major obstacles delaying the start of the national reconciliation conference provided for in the cease-fire agreement. At the conference, leaders of Lebanon's major political-religious factions are to discuss revisions in the allocation of political power among the factions.

"The country's entire political organization and constitution must be reviewed ... in order to avoid another civil war," Jumblatt told a news conference in Athens, Greece.

Cardinal Cooke nearer to death

NEW YORK (AP) — Cardinal Terence Cooke, archbishop for 1.8 million New York Roman Catholics and 2 million more in the military, offered the pain of his leukemia "as a beautiful gift for others" Wednesday as his life continued to slip away, a spokesman said.

The Rev. Peter Finn, spokesman for the Archdiocese of New York, said Cooke remained "gravely ill," under medication and near death.

But he said Cooke wanted to remain conscious as much as possible so that his suffering could be "purposeful."

"That might sound a little bit staged, but that's the way the man feels," Finn said. "He wants this to be purposeful. He wants his suffering to be a beautiful gift for others."

Boston University doctor warns virus may not cause AIDS

BOSTON — Widespread speculation that AIDS is caused by a rare virus that attacks blood cells is probably wrong, and it could reduce attention to other possible culprits in this devastating disease, a research contends.

Several studies recently have suggested that a germ called the human T-cell leukemia virus, or HTLV, wrecks the body's defenses against disease.

"It's been overplayed to the point where I worry that it will diminish interest in other viruses" that could be behind the AIDS outbreak, Dr. Paul H. Black of Boston University School of Medicine said in an interview.

In a letter in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine, Black expressed "serious doubts" about the reported link between this virus and AIDS.

"Although infection with HTLV of a minority of patients with AIDS or patients with preAIDS or both apparently occurs," he wrote, "it is unlikely to be in itself the cause of AIDS."

Evidence of infection with HTLV has been seen in as many as 60 percent of patients with AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Job loss proves tough for working women

BOSTON — Women blue-collar workers who lose their jobs face fewer economic cushions, worse new job opportunities and lower wages at that next job, a Boston University researcher said Wednesday.

"Because women workers experience so many labor market disadvantages, they face some of the worst consequences of job displacement and unemployment," said Ellen Rosen, a professor at Nichols College and BU's Center for Applied Social Science.

"Job displacement is contributing directly to the feminization of poverty."

Ms. Rosen's remarks came at a Statehouse forum on the problems and needs of women workers displaced in the job market by loss of their blue collar, industrial jobs in today's shifting economic scene.

Women make up about 23 percent of the blue collar workers in Massachusetts, and about the same percent of unemployed blue collar workers, she said.

Job displacement among those workers is worse in New England because of considerable losses in light manufacturing jobs, she said.

But women, she said, face no pension guarantees, no continuation of health insurance and no early retirment options when laid off.

DA seeks to consolidate trials in gang rape

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. — A prosecutor Wednesday filed a motion to consolidate the six separate cases in the Big Dan's gang rape trial, seeking to bring the case to trial on Jan. 9.

The motion, filed by Bristol County District Attorney Ronald Pina, seeks to try the six defendants at once. A hearing on the motion has been set for Friday.

Trial for the men charged in the gang rape had been set for Tuesday, but one of the defendants, Daniel Silvia, won a delay until January to give his attorney more time to prepare for trial.

Silvia is one of four men charged with raping a woman at Big Dan's Tavern on March 6. Police reported the woman was held down on a pool table and attacked for two hours while other bar patrons cheered on her assailants.

Two other men were charged as accessories to the rape.

Student Senate allocates funds

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Finance committee business took up nearly all of last night's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting, with most of the $3,650 allocated by the Senate going to WMUA, the campus radio station, and a new group, the African Students Association.

When quorum, or attendance, was called three hours into the meeting, the Senate had only passed seven of approximately 25 motions on the agenda for the meeting. However, not enough members were present to continue the meeting.

WMUA received $1,500 to broadcast live men's basketball and football games, and some women's basketball games. WMUA Sports Director Brian Murphy said the entire budget for live sports broadcasts is $7,278, and the station will be seeking help from the area governments and other sources.

Murphy said WMUA will try to broadcast all home and away games, but if they do not receive enough money, they can cut out some of the road games.

" We feel it's important that we cover the men's basketball and football games" and "a select number of women's games," Murphy said. How many women's games the station broadcasts "depends on how the team is doing and what teams they are playing," he said.

The Senate allocated $1,090 to the African Students Association to help sponsor "a panel discussion on the crisis of the horn of Africa and the liberation struggle in the Azani Nation (South Africa)," according to the Senate agenda.

The panel will include two African professors and an African attorney now living in the United States and Gora Ibrahim, an Azanian representative at the United Nations. (South Africa has been censured by the U.N.)

The appeal for money by the group to the Senate stated that the discussion will "help foster consciousness among African students of their responsibilities to the problems issues that concern Afric and the human race."

The Senate also voted to help fund another new club, the Discover New England Club. The club received $249 for start-up funds and to go on a fall foliage trip in the Berkshires.

In other business, the Senate allocated $316 to the Newman Club to sponsor a free concert by Christian Steves; $445 to fund the University of Massachusetts Ski Patrol through the year and $50 to the Office of Third World Affairs to transport students to a Boston lecture by the president of Cape Verde.

Senator Bill Collins called quorum during a motion to allocate $199 to the UMass Peacemakers for travel expenses to a Boston peace rally.

Student Government Association Treasurer Eric Nizsche said much of the other business was put off by the quorum call.

"As a result of having quorum called, Union Records and the Photo Co-op won't be able to open this week," he said. "The business of the Senate is made very difficult when disgruntled members call quorum."

Students urged to report calls

By MARY ANNE BEEN
Collegian Staff

In an effort to increase community awareness and decrease the occurence of harassment on campus University of Massachusetts Police are urging campus residents to report any annoying and obscene telephone calls they receive.

A large number of obscene calls occur on campus but very few of them are reported, and therefore it is hard for the police to stop this problem of harassment, said Gerald O'Neil, director of the Department of Public Safety.

"For whatever reason, many students choose not to report an annoying phone call," O'Neil said. "Students may feel embarrassed or helpless. They may think that nothing can be done."

According to the Department of Public Safety's annual report for 1982, only 17 annoying phone calls were reported, a drop from the 27 calls reported on campus in 1981.

Police and public safety can help if they are aware of the problem O'Neil said.

"We can often work with the telephone company, especially in the instance of recurring calls. We may be able to trace the call," O'Neil said. "A student can have his or her number changed if need be. We are here to do what we can to relieve the tension a student may be living under." Obscene phone calls can also be reported to the Everywoman's Center at UMass, who can then report it to the Police if needed, said Kathy Alexander from the Center.

"People can talk to a counselor at the Center about the problem and we can also report the incident to the police for people if they feel umcomfortable or embarrassed about doing it themselves." Alexander said.

"There is no reason to be embarrassed. Obscene phone calls are violations of peoples rights and privacy and should be reported." she said.

Carol Radzik, Student Security Coordinator, also emphasized the importance of letting the police know when an annoying phone call occurs.

"The best advice I have is to tell the police. Anything reported helps in stopping the problem." Radzik said.

It is more often women students who are harassed and many women wrongly feel that many annoying calls are not worth reporting.

"Often times whole floors of women in a dorm will be bothered by annoying calls. No one will talk about it until they get together at a floor meeting and discover that their meighbors are experiencing the same thing," Radziksaid.

"Every incident is worth reporting."

Students present grievances to UTC

By TOM MIDDLETON

Several students delivered a list of demands Wednesday to members of the United Technologies Corp. (UTC) training conference requesting they leave campus.

"If all communities blocked UTC, the world would be a safer place," said Ron Milcarek, one of the students involved.

The students were stopped by a UTC representative at the entrance to the conference where they asked that their demands be handed to the conference members.

UTC gave no response to the demands, among which were that UTC leave the University and the town of Amherst and give a full explanation of their activities on campus.

The students then left to deliver separate demands to Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey. The demands included an end to all military contracts and recruiting at the University of Massachusetts, that all military contractors be denied access to the campus and that the administration explain all defense-related business on campus.

Duffey was not in his office at the time and demands were left for the chancellor and vice-chancellor to read.

A rally will be held tomorrow in support of these demands Milearek said. After a demonstration last week, director of UTC media operations Robin Hogan said the corporation did not plan to change their plans on campus.

Hogan said United Technologies is not the main contractor for the MX missile although the corporation does make rocket engines that could end up in missiles. The conference is scheduled to end Oct. 17.

Newman Center nun conscious of feminism

Sister Mildred Marengo sits in the main office in the Newman Center.

By SHERYL JEAN
Collegian Correspondent

For the past year Mildred Marengo has held a position at the Newman Center of the University of Massachusetts that no other woman has ever held. She is a nun.

Her position is a unique one which with she said she "enjoys and is thoroughly satisfied."

"I not only feel comfortable, but I feel needed," she said.

Because half of the human race is women and half of the University is women, Sister Marengo said, "I feel the presence of a woman is strongly needed in this institution (the Newman Center)."

Sister Marengo's work mainly involves "one-on-one counseling." She counsels 60 percent women and 40 percent men which include students, the University staff, and Amherst town residents.

Having a woman at the Center gives all students, no matter what sex, an option, she said. "They know they'll get a womanly response," she said.

Sister Marengo's duty is not to judge, but to receive people, welcome them and help them with their problems, she said.

"I see myself as a resource person, helping people find areas where they can get the help they need and making people aware of their opportunities," she said.

Sister Marengo feels activity and recreation are a must. A healthy person needs diversion, she said.

"I'm not a work-aholic," she said. "One must minister to one's self to make ministry to others possible."

Sister Marengo has been a nun for 37 years. She belongs to the Sisters of St. Joseph's of Springfield.

"I'm very happy in my ministry," she said.

"You receive a sense of fulfillment in being able to love universally," she said. "Celibacy doesn't deprive us of love, it frees us to love."

Women On Campus

She said she is very conscious of women's issues on campus, and is "pleased that discrimination is being challenged and would like to see that continued."

Through her counseling, Sister Marengo has dealt with many "issues regarding the quality of life," she said.

There's a movement now in the diocese to stress the "Right to Life", thus broadening the Pro-Life Movement, she said.

"'Right to Life' isn't meant to de-emphasize life in the womb, but to extend concern to a fuller and better life for all," she said.

She said one should be respectful of a person who makes that decision, because it is not easy.

Flood dampens spirits

By TRICIA A. YACOVONE
Collegian Staff

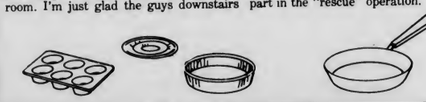
Shortly before 4:30 a.m., a water pipe between the third and fourth floors of the Van Meter dormitory burst, causing gushes of water to flood three floors of the dorm. While the second floor was relatively dry, the third, first and basement levels had between one and three inches of water flowing down their corridors.

Head of Residence Chorri Boykin called the Phyical Plant immediately after discovering the apparent flooding, but residents were already hard at work alleviating the problem by the time workers arrived. Students organized a sweeping system which pushed the water out of the hallways, into the stairwells and out the doors of the dorm. In spite of such dreary circumstances, few managed to make light of the situation.

"If I had a rubber duckie, I'd be all psyched...but I don't," said Ken O'Donnell, a junior engineering major who had water leaking from the ceiling of his basement room.

Ken Lake, a junior political science major on exchange from Oregon said, "It looked like Niagara Falls coming in my dorm room. I'm just glad the guys downstairs had a beer for me."

Housing Services plumber Steve Mushenski replaced pipe fittings and resoldered a connection in the pipe. He said the problem was "more than likely old age," but speculated that a new recirculating pump installed last fall could have put too much pressure on the pipes.



However, Area Manager Don Pelkey said Ed Ryan, a Physical Plant engineer "doubts the circulating pump is responsible for the pressure which caused the break."

Nevertheless, later in the morning Mushenski modified the angle of the pipe and put in additional pipe supports to lessen the pressure, Pelkey said.

Van Meter has had problems with flooding in the past, including floods in the fall of 1982 and spring, 1983, said sophomore business marketing major Tina White and Community Resource Assistant Rob Albert.

Janitors arrived around 6 a.m. Wednesday to clean up the dorm and the University rug department cleans Boykin's apartment, the lounge, the study room and will clean those student rugs which were drenched in the floor.

"Without student effort and control we'd be in real trouble," said Pelkey as he did his part in the "rescue" operation.

DRESSING UP — Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey and Chairman of the Board of Trustees Robert Quinn raise former Massachusetts Governor Edward J. King's ceremonial hood as King received his honorary degree at yesterday's ceremony in Bowker Auditorium.

Ed King gets his honorary degree

By JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

"It's all a matter of the difference between performance and perception," former Massachusetts Governor Edward J. King said Wednesday.

"The ideal is to do things well and to have them perceived well," King said. "Too often the negative side of something is allowed to equal the overall reaction. To me, the emphasis between perception and performance is very pronounced."

Referring to his reception on the UMass campus Wednesday King said he was received favorably.

"Again, it's a matter of perception," King said, "I think the perception of students was that I cut University Budgets and that I was not a friend of the University.

"It's a shame, really a shame. This is a case of perception differing from reality." King said.

King said things like death threats and protests will always make the front page, but things like a decrease in the number of teenage drunken driving fatalities will not receive the same prominence.

King said he was glad to finally receive his honorary degree.

"I don't feel the events of last May are representative of the student body of UMass," he said.

Looking back on his recent gubernatorial campaign, King said he has no quarrel with the media.

"You have to deal with it, like it or not," he said.

Presently, King is working on cleaning up the remains of his campaign. He said he still has paperwork to do, and there is a small deficit to clear up.

"Right now, I am not thinking about another elected office," King said, "but I do know there is an election in 1986.

"I'm not running for anything...right now."

King is currently a director for five different companies. He is also a senior consultant for the public relations company of Hills and Knowlton, the world's largest public relations firm.

Center, Warren Litsky and Thelma Zaikaitis. The Chancellor's Medal is the highest honor bestowed on individuals who have rendered exemplary service to the University.

"He has a special gift and is able to touch people in an extraordinary way," Duffey said of Quigley.

Dean Field received the medal for his work at the University's first and only dean of students. Zaikaitis received her medal for 37 years of work and dedication as a bookkeeper in the University comptroller's office. Litsky was awarded the medal for his services to the University as both professor and chairman of the department of environmental sciences.

Board of Trustee member Andrew Knowles announced the establishment of a visiting professor of English fund, named after former UMass professor Frederick S. Troy. Knowles personally donated $100,000 to the fund, and Duffey said he would like to see alumni and others be able to match that amount.

A brief slideshow was used to break up the ceremony. It depicted the Lederle years at UMass, the years otherwise known, Duffey said, as "The Dynamic Decade."

Editor's note: This is the last of a three part series on student rights and the Solomon Amendment.

This past summer, the Solomon Amendment (a bill linking financial aid to draft registration) was permanently filed. The change, it is rumored, had no other motive than to temporarily stifle the outraged cries of the affected public. The specifics of the change are very simple: to delay the implementation of the most objectionable part of the bill. Investigating reporters theorize that the change was made in response to the abundance of legal and moral questions being raised around this issue.

Dakin N. Ferris

To understand the full implications of the revised bill, you need first to understand the originally proposed process. Simply, it is a two-stage plan. The first is the blue form that we all became familiar with this summer. Sent to all undergraduate students receiving financial aid (men, women, older students), it required us to state that either we have complied with the Selective Service Act by registering or are exempt due to a variety of reasons.

The second step is a confirmation of the statements we made through the Selective Service Act by registering or are exempt due to a variety of reasons.

The second step is a confirmation of the statements we made through the Selective Service Administration. This is essentially the enforcement side of the bill as it is the stage at which persons who falsified information on their forms would be identified. The revision calls a halt on this step for the next two academic years (83/84 and 84/85). The effect of this being that the veracity of the statements we made on the blue form will not be checked. The DOE said they would make some random checks, but that comes later.

The effects of the revised bill are thus not that complex. It immediately soothes the wrath of the present juniors and seniors (the group most likely to see what is going on here and know how to do something about it); and gets the rest of the students into the habit of using the form. When the cross-checking of records starts to occur in two years it will begin almost imperceptably and without protest, or so goes the theory.

Yet don't let me paint such a rosy picture for the juniors and seniors. The Department of Energy (DOE) is supposed to conduct "periodic on-site review of student files to check up on those who may have lied on their forms." One can translate this very readily into meaning that cross-checking will occur on suspect or undesirable students. A source inside the DOE estimates that the on-site inspection of blue forms would hit only one in every five hundred. Aside from the fact that these individuals might not be as random as we are led to believe, the people that it does effect face up to five years in jail and/or $10,000 in fines.

And then for the ones that do slide through, the conflict is not over. The Solomon clones (other very similar federal and state bills) are linking everything from welfare and food stamps to unemployment benefits to registration. The common factor in all of these is that they are a form of aid. What then is to be the next step — draft cards for all people below a certain economic class?

Pending the outcome of the Supreme Court's ruling, a ruling we can expect as late as next July, little can be done except to write your legislators. If perchance the Solomon type bills are found constitutional hen chances have it that all the similar bills will b enacted.

And so this is where the resisters stand. For the rest who did comply, the ones who keep up on Foreign affairs enough to be scared to death; your time comes when you turn 26. At that age you will no longer be eligible for the draft or registration and can breathe a sigh of relief. I'm not sure I'll be able to though; it will be three more years then until my youngest brother turns the same.

Intellectual cowardice lives here

Boorishness is on the rise again on our nation's campuses — particularly in this area. For some inexplicable reason, New England is often viewed as a "progressive " region, hallmarked by genteel liberalism. But this is a pure myth.

There's another term to describe the ill-treatment which conservatives and even some liberals have received from leftist boors in this area — intellectual cowardice. It's not a mark of bravery, or intelligence to shut off other ideas from entering your mind. But it's even worse to deny people the opportunity to hear what others have to say simply because their ideas are "different". The Nazis were perfectionists in this kind of anti-intellectual activity during the Thirties. Does any person or group care to follow in their path?

Steven P. Barrett

It's simply a case of killing the messanger of bad tidings. But messages and truth are hardest to kill. The boors, however, will continue playing their cowardly game of anti-intellectual censorship.

On this campus, we have seen the late Hubert Humphrey booed and jeered off the podium in the Curry Hicks Cage over a decade ago. Why? Well, despite Humphrey's long history of supporting many liberal causes; he was given the bum's rush for the "sin" of supporting the war in Vietnam while serving as Lyndon Johnson's Vice President. Although I have no reason to think anyone here on this campus is in any position to pass judgement on Hubert Humphrey: the lack of "forgiveness" for supporting a noble, yet unpopular and misunderstood, cause deserves comment.

Forgiveness is often a quality found in short quantity with ideologues — of both leftist and rightist camps. Forgetfulness of facts and fairness for others, however, is often overabundantly manifested by ideologues.

If U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick's safety "couldn't be guaranteed" by Smith College this past spring if she attended graduation ceremonies. She was invited to give the commencement address and receive an honorary degree. A small, yet apparently powerful, cabal of "progressive" students and faculty members managed to get Smith to cave in to their demands. Smith gave the meek excuse about Mrs. Kirkpatrick's safety, thus effectively cancelling her appearance entirely.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick offended many of our local "progressives" with the messages contained in her book "Dictatorships and Double Standards." Perhaps she should write a sequel titled "' Progressive Students, Faculty Members and Double Standards."

Imagine, a prestigious institution like Smith buckling to this kind of pressure from such intellectual cowards and then offering such a poor excuse about the Ambassador's safety. This was also pure wimpish cowardice, and Smith's alumni should be justifiably embarrassed and outraged because of it.

Ironically enough, Smith, which is overly represented by the feminist ilk, denied a person whose own measure of success embodies everything they are trying to seek for their students, (i.e. a masterly successful academic and professional career), the opportunity to address them at a commencement address. Tragically ironic, indeed.

The recent "teach-in" on Central America provided also a good case in point. The Commuter Area Government performed a credible service in putting together a balanced presentation among two liberal and two conservative speakers. One of the speakers, retired Air Force Colonel Samuel Dickens brought up an excellent point when he said "we have a responsibility to look at all sides."

But the vast majority of the audience wouldn't have anything to do with Col. Dickens' message about looking at "all sides" — or for that matter, responsibility. The majority of the audience, comprised mostly of leftists, not only embarrassed themselves; but they also embarrassed Dr. Clements and Janet Schenk who opposed what Col. Dickens, and Peter Serras of the State Department, had to say.

In fact, the boorish leftists embarrassed anyone associated with the University. The very same people who cry out so often for respect of human life in Central America couldn't practice what they preach here at home in a free society.

While browsing through a local leftist bookstore, I saw and bought a bumper sticker which read: MINDS ARE LIKE PARACHUTES THEY ONLY FUNCTION WHEN OPEN. Hmm, don't you think the leftists should take their own messages more seriously?

Random Notes

Every year our trusty representatives in Boston and Washington take the time out from pressing issues like economics, ecology, and peaceful coexistence to argue that tired old question: abortion. O.K., I'm sick of hearing about it, too, but bear with me — you ought to know what they're up to this time. A bill was just passed in the House to "tighten up" the Hyde Amendment. (You remember the one that decided that poor women could no longer be given the option of abortion?) As if that weren't enough, this time around they want to close those "loopholes" like when the mother's life is in danger, or when she's unlucky enough to be a rape or incest victim. Oh yeah, there's one more thing: this time, instead of leaving the states an option to fund medicaid abortions if they choose to, they (the fellows in Washington) are going to make that choice for us.

Are these the same Reagan inspired zealots who've been shouting, "States' rights!", "Deregulate!" and "Get the government off our backs!"? Yup. Are you really surprised? Now guess which representative introduced this latest intrusion into our private lives. Some Midwestern right-wing conservative, right? Try a little closer to home. Like Western Massachusetts. Our very own: Silvio Conte. Why is it so pressing that poor women whose lives are endangered be prevented from making their own choices? Why is it so pressing that any woman's personal decision be overridden? (Even Supreme Court decisions are not immune, witness the Hatfield Bill, and Hatch Amendment).

These are a few questions you might want to ask your representative. It's easy. Even if you've never done it before. (MassPIRG, SCERA, or the League of Women Voters can tell you how) or even if you just did it last month (do it again!) You don't even have to be a registered voter, although it helps. Tell him to confine his religious beliefs to his own home and family, where it belongs. Tell him to concentrate on legislation that is relevant and appropriate. Tell him that upwards of 80 percent of his constituency is pro-choice. Most of all, quit feeling helpless. Get involved. As my mother used to put it, "You got a mouth — use it."

Reagan — doing all he can!

In the midst of the anger and suspicion of the downing of the Korean Jet Airliner, along with the confusion over arms negotiations, President Reagan has done all he can to prevent the threat of a nuclear war and ensure world peace.

Last week the President made motions to ease East-West tensions by calling the Soviet Union "uncivilized" and having "no regard for life and truth". The President's "peace keeping force" in Lebanon has bombed civilian villages outside of Beruit, killing many in order to ensure peace in that nation. According to military sources the "peace keepers" will have an even greater role in "keeping peace" in Lebanon by establishing a "presence" in the Shouf Mountains outside of Beirut.

Michael A. Ferry

The Mideast is not the only place the President has been trying to "keep peace", 18,000 U.S. military personnel will be conducting "military exercises" in Honduras and Central America as a deterrent to unfriendly nations who try to spread their influence in that region.

One fact should be made clear at this point, the Reagan Administration is committed to "peace and democracy" throughout the world. This only makes sense when you see the fact that United States has sent over 40 billion dollars in the past two years to a brutal military government in El Salvador, who has been responsible for the killing of over 30,000 of its own people, including three American nuns, according to a U.S. Ambassadors' report. The United States is also supporting the Honduran government's "peaceful" attempt to overthrow the Nicaraguan government, who, acording to President Reagan, is not minding its own business in Central America.

As well as helping other nations "keep peace" in the world, President Reagan has kept close ties and has given economic support to such other "free democratic nations" such as the fascist military dictatorship in Chile (which the U.S. helped install), along with the dictatorships in Argentina, the Philipines, and also the self-imposed military government in Guatemala, who like the others have had their share of civilian murders at the hands of their "free" governments. Yet, all is well, though, when you consider that the U.S. Corporations who do business in such nations by using peasant labor to build their products are helping keep American unemployment down.

(It should be clear that the Reagan Administration is committed to world peace, if they weren't then why would they have the armed forces deployed in so many places around the world?) So the next time someone claims that Reagan is aggravating East-West relations, supporting bloody Fascists, using excessive force and threats of force, tell them that "real peace" comes through war.....I mean strength. That's why blind-patriotic communist hating conservative relics like me support Reagan, because "HE'S DOING ALL HE CAN".

Cry for yourself, Collegian

To the Editor,

"Doo-Doo Review"

Alas, Cris Schuster and Collegian
You dared to print Evita's epitaph!
Perhaps you thought it chic to be unkind,
Perchance you thought your audience would laugh.

I do not have the patience or the time
To dignify the bayings of what lurks behind a hedge —
To ride my witness words around and round,
Would only set the teeth of yonder beast on their serrated edge.

Collegian! Beware of arrogance!
It might be wise for you to turn around —
Before you feel a bite upon your pants,
You'd better put a muzzle on your hound.

(Eat Lacey's stardust, Schuster!
The cast of Evita did a superbly professional job —
I hope some day we will be able to say the same about your reviews.)

Organizing is no secret

To the Editor,

The Graduate Teachers Organization and the attempt to organize TA's and TO's are no secret, despite the viewpoint expressed in Monday's Collegian. Graduate students on this campus have been trying to organize for eight years in an entirely open and democratic way.
